After his arrest, Cooper allegedly implicated Robert Swensen, 25, also of Uniondale. Both men are said to have confessed and pleaded guilty to charges of disorderly conduct. They claimed the cross-burning was a "prank" and had nothing to do with the Klan, according to police.

Two brothers, whom Swensen and Cooper allegedly named as their accomplices, were later arrested and held on similar charges.

Cripps Blames Dollar Crisis On Two Wars

AN ELOQUENT plea for making relations between the British and U. S. trading areas "an abiding source of strength and stability for the western democracies," was voiced by British Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir Stafford Cripps, at a National Press Club luncheon in Washington.

Sir Stafford was in the Capital as one of three British representatives attending the U. S.-British-Canadian monetary conference held in an effort to find a way to close Britain's "dollar gap." The other two were Ernest Bevin, foreign minister, and Sir Oliver Franks, ambassador to the U. S.

The tall, gaunt British labor government leader declared that any cutting down on Britain's buying of U. S. goods would be a "retrograde step," interfering with British recovery from the ravages of war, and conditions "forced upon us by harsh necessity."

ONE SIDE OF the picture, he said, is "record production, rising productivity of British workers, exports nearer to balancing imports than at any time between the wars, re-equipment proceeding at full pressure, and a very considerable part of the physical destruction of wartime now put right."

The cumulative effect of the changes in the world economic scene in the early months of this year, including the recession in the U. S., Cripps explained, have "widened alarmingly the gap between dollar earnings and the dollar expenditure" of the British area.

Asked how his government explains the "apparent paradox between our rapid economic progress at home and these increasing external difficulties," Cripps said the answer does not lie in Britain's socialist economy.

"Two world wars have thrown the whole mechanism of international exchange out of gear," and "the so-called dollar crisis is not just a British crisis and nothing more," Cripps explained.

It involves an area having one-quarter of the world's population, including all of Western Europe, and if this area's free trading were to end as a result of this crisis, there would be "an immediate contraction of trade, and a recession to restrictive and bilateral financing and trading expedients."

SHORT OF THE dream of a world where one currency is used, Cripps said, "the only satisfactory solution is to find some way by which enough goods from the non-dollar areas can be imported into the dollar area to pay for the dollar goods which the non-dollar countries want to buy."

No nation, the British leader insisted, can go back "to the old pre-war pattern of trade." Instead, he proposed a solution initiated by the U. S., Britain and Canada in the interests of the "whole free democratic world."

(At the end of the Washington tripartite conference it was announced that the three countries had agreed on steps to end Britain's dollar crisis.)

One of the most fruitful emergency steps to pull the British out of their growing crisis has been the work of the Anglo-American Productivity Council, Cripps told the newsmen. Education Director Victor Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers and President Lee Hinton of the AFL Glass Workers are vice-presidents of the council, which has sponsored visits to the U. S. of "productivity teams" to study American production know-how.

Va. CIO To Step Up Fight On Segregation

FULL support of the President's Civil Rights program and of all state legislation which would wipe out segregation and discrimination has been voted by delegates to the ninth Virginia State CIO Council convention.

The stand was voiced in a report of the Convention Anti-Discrimination Committee, adopted in toto by the delegates.

The report also pledged the Virginia CIO to refrain from indorsing any activity "which does not provide for participation by all CIO members, regardless of race, creed or color," and put the convention on record as actively opposing segregated meetings.

Substantial gains in interracial activity in Virginia were noted. The number of non-segregated dinners, union meetings and conferences has been increasing, and the report added: "We look forward to the day when all CIO unions in the interest of solidarity of workers will remove the obvious obstacles of the segregated pattern."

THE anti-discrimination report was part of an extensive political, legislative, educational and economic program adopted by the convention.

Close ot the top of the group's objectives is the destruction of the Byrd machine rule. Delegates pledged to work untiringly toward that end.

Resolutions putting the convention on record as favoring a political program aimed at the defeat of a set of "machine" sponsored constitutional amendments designed to further limit the Virginia electorate and looking toward the elimination of Virginia anti-labor legislation also were adopted.

The delegates approved a report calling for an effort by the CIO Political Action Committee in Virginia to co-operate with the Railroad Brotherhoods, Virginia State Federation of Labor, AFL, and independent unions in the establishment of one political action committee for labor in the state.

The convention gave overwhelming support to federal legislation designed for improvement of education, and reiterated its previous stand against the Taft-Hartley Act.

Speakers who discussed the role of the state PAC in the Aug. 2 Virginia Democratic primary were cheered time and again during the convention as they assailed the "reactionary Byrd machine" and urged the organization on to greater effort toward its defeat.

A report by Council Pres. Charles C. Webber, urging establishment of PACs in each local to work for defeat of the proposed "Campbell Amendments" to the Virginia State Constitution was adopted. These amendments would make it "almost impossible to ever defeat the Byrd machine," Webber said. Among other things they would:

Abolish the poll tax as a requisite to voting, but would allow the General Assembly to levy a $3 annual capitation tax as a requisite to granting of any state license, and would allow any literacy tests the General Assembly considered necessary for a prospective voter's registration.

THE convention also leveled an attack against the Virginia Unemployment Compensation Commission for its administration of the state laws in that field, and urged an upward revision of the maximum benefit from $20 to $25 weekly, and of the benefit period from 16 to 26 weeks.

Webber was unopposed for re-election as president, and the convention also re-elected Secy.-Treas. Lloyd P. Vaughan for the coming year. Eleven vice-presidents named by the convention for the coming year are:

Alfred V. Atkinson, Communications Workers; Robert Boyer, Steelworkers; James H. Boyette, Auto Workers; John Crew, Textile Workers; J. Farley Holder, Clothing Workers; John Kabler, TWUA, Roanoke; J. C. Oliver, Paperworkers; Boyd E. Payton, TWUA; John P. Spry Sr., Brewery Workers; J. H. Stephenson, Electrical Workers, and John Wilmer, Shoe Workers.

Among the convention speakers were John Brophy, director of CIO Councils; Tilford E. Dudley, assistant CIO-PAC director; Dan Powell, area PAC director, and Gladys Dickason, CIO Clothing Workers vice-president and research director.

Schools No Polio Threat

THE OPENING of schools, throughout the country, despite the occurrence this year of the largest infantile paralysis epidemic in history, is no cause for parents' alarm, even though thousands of new cases may be expected during the next weeks, according to the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis.

The Foundation, now conducting a Polio Epidemic Emergency Drive to raise $14,500,000 to enable its chapters to care for an anticipated 40,000 cases by the end of the year, pointed out that new cases still are being reported at a rate of 3000 a week. But experience shows that school openings never have affected the course of epidemic, either to abate or increase the incidence rate, according to Dr. Hart E. Van Riper, medical director.

Certain precautions should continue to be observed both at home and at school, he advised, but the assembling of pupils under one roof is not regarded in itself as hazardous.

The Foundation reported that contributions addressed to POLIO, care of post offices throughout the country, were coming in steadily to bolster epidemic aid funds which were sufficient for only 11 days on September 8.

UAW: 'Blasts At British Labor Hit America Too'

THE ATTACK by American Big Business and most of the American press on the British Labor government's social welfare program, as a cause of the British dollar shortage, is in reality an attack on social legislation in the United States, according to an editorial in the September issue of "The United Automobile Worker," official publication of UAW-CIO.

"Not one responsible member of the Conservative opposition to the Labor government has maintained that the dollar shortage is anything more than the unhappy but inevitable consequence of Britain's war-time sacrifices," the editorial states. "Not one dares suggest that the present exchange situation would have been a whit less serious had the social welfare program been abondoned or had the Conservatives been in power throughout.

"So why does our commercial oligarchy pursue a lie which Mr. Churchill disdains?"

Because, says the editorial, it is a "move in a planned action to destroy those advances in social legislation already achieved by American working people and to deflate the impulse toward more complete achievement which is now gathering."

U. S. Wages War On Heart Disease

A TOTAL of more than $8½ million in federal funds to fight heart disease has been awarded to 85 medical schools and research institutions in 34 states and the District of Columbia, Federal Security Administrator Oscar R. Ewing reported.

The funds will be administered by the U. S. Public Health Service's National Heart Institute for intensive heart research, for expanded programs in medical schools, and for building additional heart research laboratories throughout the country.

The recent grants are in addition to the $1,200,000 announced in July for continuing research projects already under way, and provide a total of nearly $10 million in federal funds for the anti-heart disease campaign during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950.

Heart disease takes over 625,000 lives annually and is recognized as among the foremost public health problems of today.

Douglas, On State Tour, Polls Voters

Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D., Ill.) is touring Illinois to "find out what the voters are thinking about and what farm, business, labor and housing conditions are most pressing" and to report on the record of the 81st Congress to date.

The Senator announced that he decided to cancel an additional 15 days of his trip because many important issues will be facing the Senate at the end of September and beginning of October.

Several labor union meetings are on Sen. Douglas' agenda, including the AFL, Railway and Machinists unions in Rockford; CIO-PAC in Rockford, local labor unions in Quincy, Illinois Federation of Teachers in Madison and local labor unions in Wood River.

Douglas plans to discuss labor legislation with most of these groups.

MAINE BOOTH: Literature was distributed to hundreds of persons, many of them farmers, at this booth of the Textile Workers and CIO-PAC at the Sandybrook Fair, Saco, Me. This is one of the methods of stimulating farmer-labor cooperation.

N.Y. State CIO For O'Dwyer, Lehman

NEW YORK City's Mayor William O'Dwyer and Herbert H. Lehman opened their campaigns for election as mayor and U. S. Senator respectively at the New York State CIO convention at Saratoga Springs.

The convention, which was attended by 900 delegates emphatically indorsed both candidates and promised an all-out campaign in their behalf by the State PAC.

Mayor O'Dwyer and former New York governor Lehman both blasted the members of Congress who are stalling on President Truman's Fair Deal Program.

LEHMAN MADE what was interpreted by newspapermen as reference to the remarks of his Republican opponent, Sen. John Foster Dulles, on "statism" in government.

"We believe that nothing can be permitted to take priority over human rights. But far from riding ruthlessly over any of the several groups which comprise the State, we recognize the interdependence of all groups and seek to respect the needs of each and to safeguard their just aspirations.

"To the aged, security; to the industrial workers, free collective bargaining, good wages and enlightened working conditions, to the farmers, fair prices for their produce; to the bank depositors, insurance against loss; to the investors, an unrigged market; to the homeless adequate low-cost housing, to the youth, sound education; to the business man, fair opportunity for individual effort and initiative."

A HARD-HITTING program of economic and political action carrying forward the policies of the National CIO was drawn up by the convention, with the division on all controversial issues approximately four to one. The same division occurred on a resolution soundly rebuking "that faction within our midst, who, by betraying the interest of the workers they purport to represent to the dictates of outside interest, have impeded CIO's progress."

Pres. Louis Hollander gave warning to obstructionists at the very outset. In his keynote address, he assured the delegates that all sides of every question would be heard. "This convention will be conducted according to the principles of democracy," he said, "True democracy, that is," not that of the so-called 'people's democracies'."

He assailed the left-wing "Conference on Autonomy and Democracy in the CIO" which had been performed in New York City two weeks before, in which the lone opposition speaker had been hooted off the platform.

"Any attempt by these disciples of one-sided autonomy and democracy to use such tactics here," Hollander warned, "will result in their immediate expulsion from the hall." There was no occasion to implement this warning during the course of the convention.

THE RESISTANCE of left-wing unions to the resolution on CIO policy which condemned their disruptive tactics and commended the National CIO "for its valiant efforts to achieve freedom, security and justice for all our people and the peoples of the world" was heated but orderly. Irving Potash, delegate of the Fur and Leather Workers, charged CIO leadership with attempting to turn labor unions into political organizations.

Speaking in behalf of the resolution, Hollander stated that the "interests of American labor cannot be served by individuals who are concerned only with the interests of the Cominform."

GREETINGS: Former Gov. Herbert H. Lehman of New York (center) is greeted by Pres. Louis Hollander (l.) and Secy.-Treas. Harold J. Garno at the New York CIO convention.

MUCH OF THE convention deliberations was dedicated to problems of unemployment. A program calling for increased unemployment insurance benefits and more efficient administration was drawn up together with a program for securing full employment in the State.

The full employment program would provide a permanent commission composed of representatives of organized labor, farmers, business and the State government with power to institute a "comprehensive program of public works, designed to aid those areas where production is lowest and unemployment highest." Provision for free transportation of unemployed workers in moving to areas where jobs are available would also be provided under the program. Other sections of the program call for revision of the State tax system so as to lessen the burden on lower income families and end the present system of municipal sales taxes.

The convention went on record in full support of the demands of the CIO Steelworkers and all other CIO unions now engaged in wage negotiations. All unions were urged to take steps, according to their particular circumstances, to secure wage increases and old age security for their members. Battles of the Singer Sewing Machine Company and Bell Aircraft Workers were subjects of separate resolutions pledging moral and financial support.

PRESIDENT TRUMAN'S statement on United States foreign policy before the American Legion in Philadelphia was applauded in a resolution which endorsed all major points in the Administration program. "We reaffirm our support of the United Nations as the prime agency for attaining the stable political and economic conditions upon which a just and lasting peace, freedom and security rest," the resolution stated.

Efforts of "Communist leaders throughout the world who betray their countries and destroy their peoples' freedom in the interest of Soviet imperialism" were condemned as was assistance by any government to Fascist Spain. The European Recovery Program, Atlantic Pact and Military Assistance Program were endorsed in order that the "free nations of Western Europe may thereby be given the means collectively to maintain the peace and resist aggression.

Senate action in denying sufficient funds to the Office of the Federal Housing Expediter and the actions of Tighe E. Woods in that office were condemned in a resolution which called for putting State rent controls into effect immediately in order to protect tenants "against further depredations by rent-gouging landlords and the Federal Housing Expediter."

FEDERAL AID to education to enable "every state to provide every child in the state with a good education under a good teacher in a good classroom" and a national health insurance program were demanded.

The latter resolution accused the American Medical Association of bringing "dishonor to the medical profession" by its efforts to distort the purpose of the national health insurance in the minds of the American public.

The Convention called for a full and impartial inquiry into the Peekskill riots which occurred in connection with concerts by Paul Robeson, stating that "those responsible for the mob violence which occurred, including those public officials who through neglect of duty condoned these violations, must be brought to the bar of justice."

President Hollander and Secy.-Treas. Harold J. Garno were elected to head the New York State CIO for another year.

First Talks Are Held In Bell Strike

AS A RESULT of joint effort by state and federal mediators, negotiations have begun for the first time since the outbreak of the Bell Aircraft strike June 13 at Buffalo, N. Y.

Bell had consistently refused to bargain with CIO Auto Workers on pension plans and wage increases for the 1700 production workers represented by Local 501 of the union.

Now that the company has agreed to negotiate it is holding fast to several conditions which John W. Livingston, union vice-president, previously termed "a denial of all principles of collective bargaining"

Bell terms include ending the present union shop and refusal to rehire strike leaders.

NEGOTIATIONS were slow in getting started because union leaders had to surrender to police and provide bail in order to appear in public. The unionists had been sought in warrants alleging they had incited riots outside the plant.

UAW leaders claimed the riots had been provoked by armed scabs and that the sheriff, who was trying to arrest and hold union members on high bail, was working in collusion with the company.

Union attorneys are now trying to get warrants against the district and the sheriff on charge of making false arrests, holding prisoners without charges, holding prisoners incommunicado, refusing to arraign and refusing to fix bail.

Meanwhile, a union strike bulletin cited the report of the President's fact-finding board in the steel industry to prove that their original demands were "fair and just."

"Not only will we defeat Bell's attempt to smash our union," said the bulletin, "but any fair settlement of our strike will include pensions and social insurance benefits and guarantees that our membership will share the prosperity of the corporation."

Murray Lauds Probe Of Examiner Test By Senate Committee

CIO PRESIDENT Philip Murray has lauded the Senate Committee on Post Office and Civil Service for its decision to hold hearings on the government's procedure in selecting trial examiners.

In a letter to Sen. Olin D. Johnston (D., S. C.), Murray termed the procedure now used in the selection of government trial examiners as meriting "the fullest inquiry by your committee."

Under the 1946 Administrative Procedure Act, the letter stated, the Civil Service Commission was empowered to rule on the qualifications of incumbent examiners and to establish a register from which examiners could later be selected.

Instead of undertaking this duty itself, Murray said, the Commission set up a "Panel of Consultants," composed—with one exception — "of private attorneys who were selfishly interestd . . . and who themselves were representative solely of financial interests."

He charged that the Panel chairman has acted as attorney for the Natl. Association of Manufacturers and for other business interests.

Murray termed the Civil Service Commission's behavior a "gross impropriety" and congratulated the Senate Committee for "having determined to look into it."

Paul Porter Named Greece ECA Chief

Economic Cooperation Administrator Hoffman and Special Representative Harriman have announced the appointment of Paul R. Porter as Chief of the ECA Mission in Greece. Porter is the former editor of Kenosha Labor, the joint CIO-AFL newspaper published in Kenosha, Wis.

The appointment became effective Sept. 15.

Porter served as chairman of the shipbuilding stabilization committee of the War Production Board from 1942 to 1945. In October, 1945, he transferred to the Department of State as the U. S. member of the European Coal Organization and subsequently was chief of the Mission for Economic Affairs at London.

Since 1949 he has been alternate, first to William L. Clayton and subsequently to W. Averell Harriman, in their capacities as U. S. representative to the Economic Commission for Europe.

Porter, 41, is a graduate of the University of Kansas. His home is at Kenosha.

No 'Trend' To GOP In Penna.

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

YOU'VE PROBABLY heard and read a lot of Republican cheering over the results of the special Congressional election in the 26th District of Pennsylvania.

It has been so long since the GOP has won anything that one can hardly blame the party for patting tiself on the back. But, even the party (the GOP, not the CP) knows in its heart that the Pennsylvania result is not a "trend."

On the surface, before one examines the facts, the defeat of Mrs. Robert L. Coffey, Sr., in the race for the seat of her war hero son, Rep. Robert L. Coffey, Jr. (D.), would look as if a trend had begun. But, when analyzed, the victory of John Saylor, a lawyer-veteran, turns out to be purely local in character.

This writer spent some time in Johnstown, No. 1 city of the District, has talked considerably to both Republican and Democratic leaders, in addition to labor leaders and just plain citizens.

Two Philadelphia Inquirer writers, John Cummings and Joseph Miller, for some mysterious reason wrote stories saying that this writer was in Johnstown the whole campaign helping direct the Coffey drive.

Actually, I spent 37 hours in Johnstown early in August—getting a story for the CIO News and not in any way taking part in the campaign. Again, on election night, I drove in to Johnstown at 8 P.M. and left just before noon the day after election. Pretty sloppy reporting, by Miller and Cummings, the Inquirer should know.

On election night, I had a chance to observe the reasons for the defeat of Mrs. Coffey, which were apparent before the polls closed:

1. There was a terrific Republican campaign against electing a woman to Congress. GOP workers told me they used this argument to a fare-thee-well. Newspapermen who have covered elections where other women have been sent to Congress said that it had always been in a silk-stocking district.

This unfair practice of the Republicans was one of the major factors.

2. There was very little money spent on Mrs. Coffey; lots of it on Saylor. The Democratic Natl. Committee tightened the purse strings. PAC had little to spend, since its 26th District members, mostly Steelworkers, were under a threat of a strike.

The Republican campaign spared no expenses. There were many reports of deals.

3. There was a wide split among local Democratic leaders. Many were out to get John Torquato, the county chairman for Cambria, largest of the three counties in the district. (Others: Armstrong and Indiana.) He was one of her most active supporters.

In a number of precincts, the GOP candidate received more votes than there were Republican registrations. This meant that Democrats were voting for Saylor. In Pennsylvania, Democratic voters don't do that unless they are argued into it by bolting Democratic leaders.

Usually, it is the Democratic vote which is higher than registration.

(In Pennsylvania, there is a strong tradition against registering anything except Republican. This means the GOP almost everywhere has the larger registration. But, Democrats are elected to many posts.)

Despite that split, Torquato worked hard.

4. There was a heavy rain all day election day, which kept down the miners' votes.

5. The special election was held the same day as the primary election, which confused some of the voters.

6. There were two ballots given each voter, one for his party's primary, one for the Congressional election. The Congressional ballot, though there were only two names, had another place where you could vote a straight party ticket. This caused confusion, some voters thinking that this was a slip on which they were to note whether or not they were registered Republican or Democratic.

Many people are nervous when they go into a polling place and many did not recall the Congressional vote until they were on the way home.

7. Many doctors took advantage of their relationship with their patients to plead for Saylar votes on the grounds that a Coffey victory meant "socialized" medicine and that the poor family doctor would be impoverished.

Thus, there are a number of factors involved in Mrs. Coffey's defeat. The three major ones were the "woman's place is in the home" plea, the lack of money on the Coffey side and the split in the leadership.

NOW AS TO the "trend" theory. The Republican Natl. Committee, under its new chairman, Guy Gabrielson, just leaped with joy.

They had conquered "statism," Gabrielson cried. They had completely reversed last year's election results, he further cried. The "kind of an America we all want" had been saved, he screamed.

Now, is all that true? Let's take a look at the record. The 26th of Pennsylvania had been traditionally Republican. The GOP nominee had won term after term by 8000 or 9000 votes. Even in 1944, with such a vote-getter as FDR on the Democratic ticket, the GOP won the district for Congress by 6000.

THEN CAME last year. Young, dynamic Bob Coffey, just back from the wars with a hero's record—97 combat missions—was on the ticket in a year in which Pres. Truman was pulling perhaps the most startling political upset of all time.

Mrs. Coffey was running when there was no Presidential race. The normally Republican 26th has swung back to normalcy.

The case has been well stated by William Boyle, Democratic national chairman, and Edward Flynn, Bronx County, N. Y., Dem leader.

Boyle said: "The Republican claims are greatly exaggerated. The race in this normally Republican district is not a national proving ground."

Flynn said: "The district has gone back to its normal Republican state; this is not a fair test nationally."

Saylor beat Mrs. Coffey, 57,000 to 48,000.

Allegheny County

Allegheny County, Pa., is about 60 miles west of the 26th District. Its main city is Pittsburgh and its main industry steel.

Top Democratic leader is David Lawrence, the mayor (no kin to David Lawrence, the newspaper columnist).

Lawrence last week had competition for renomination for mayor, but won out handily.

Every candidate backed by PAC was nominated. Most outstanding Labor victory was that of Patrick Fagan, who ran a good third in the race for five Democratic councilmanic nominees.

Fagan, a former coal miner, was one of the active organizers of the steel industry, working through the Steel Workers' Organizing Committee, the predecessor of the Steelworkers' Union. He had recently been the area Wage-Hour administrator.

In nearby Clairton, a steel town, John Mullen won his nomination for the fourth time in the race for mayor. This three-time mayor is an official of the Steelworkers and one of its active political action leaders.

Detroit

Republicans and their press are also gleeful, but not so loudly, over the results of the Detroit primary election.

George Edwards, president of the city council and a member of the CIO Auto Workers, came in second in a field of 11 candidates. In the November election he will oppose Albert E. Cobb, who had AFL backing.

Cobb took 169,674 votes to win first place. Edwards was second with 113,262. Third, with 52,494, was incumbent Mayor Eugene Van Antwerp, who thus failed of renomination. Fourth was Richard Frankensteen, former UAW vice president turned businessman, who had 16,669 votes.

Many UAW members feel Frankensteen ran only to hurt Edwards' chances.

August Scholle, president of the Michigan State CIO, said he felt the CIO members had been over confident of the result and that many believed predictions of an easy Edwards' victory so much that they hadn't bothered to vote.

He thought this would teach a lesson and he looked for an Edwards victory in November.

Four PAC-indorsed candidates were nominated for Detroit's Common Counci. They are:

Edward D. Connor, incumbent. He was elected 10 months ago—with CIO support—to fill a vacancy. He fought hard for liberal legislation, such as better housing and development of the riverfront.

Mary V. Beck, who serves in the Juvenile Division of the Detroit Probate Court. She favors establishment of a youth commission, which, she says, is a "necessary and permanent" project. She will also push for better transportation and housing, and equitable tax structure and improved public works methods.

Edward J. Jeffries, who has served the city for 16 years in various capacities. A former mayor, he has for years promoted housing projects.

Louis C. Miriani, a council member and war veteran, who has consistently voted for the people.

Sen. Taft:

'Who's He?' Ohioan Wants To Know

SEN. ROBERT A TAFT (R., O.) is afraid the voters of Ohio—who know him best—don't agree with the off-the-cuff poll of Washington correspondents which wound up with the astonishing cross-section opinion that Taft was the "best" U. S. Senator.

So, the tall Ohioan is beating the hustings of the Buckeye State, trying the old charm on the electorate far, far ahead of the 1950 elections.

The Baltimore Sun sent a correspondent along with Taft. He noted that on one day-long trip through farms and small mill towns, Taft "got a silent and respectful hearing."

Then came another incident which must have hurt Taft's ego. (At Senate committee hearings, he is constantly preening himself to keep attention on him and not the other members.)

In one small unorganized rubber plant, he was escorted through and introduced directly to each worker. A late comer entered the room just as Taft left.

"Who's that?" he asked a machine operator who had just shaken the Senator's hand.

"That's Mr. Taft," replied the operator. "Who's Mr. Taft?" the other asked.

"It beats me," said the operator.

The Sun writer said Taft's political workers "calculated that meant organized labor's attack on their candidate had failed to reach into small communities, but they recognized also that Taft's national reputation has yet to permeate his home state."

Boy, oh boy, when it does!

Farm Union Seeks Co-op Storage

The biennial convention of the Farmers' Union will be held in Des Moines next March. The board of directors, setting the date at a meeting here, authorized Pres. James G. Patton to discuss with Agriculture Secy. Brannan the calling of a national conference to plan establishing a nationwide co-operative storage system for farm crops.

The board commended Brannan and President Truman for backing the Brannan farm program as constituting "the foundation for the best general agricultural program ever advanced in such high official quarters."

STEELWORKERS READY TO BARGAIN: Unwillingness of the steel industry to accept the President's Fact-Finding Board report caused Cyrus Ching, Chief Federal Mediator, to fail in his efforts to settle the dispute. In this picture Pres. Benjamin Fairless of U. S. Steel (right), appears to be casting a questioning eye at Ching (center). At the left is Steelworkers' Pres. Philip Murray whose union, like the industry, has accepted President Truman's request for a six-day postponement of the strike. Murray warned the industry that this truce—the third—is the last. (See story on Pages 6 and 7).

UNION READY TO ACT: While Chief Federal Mediator Ching was trying to settle the steel dispute, members of the picketing committee of the Steelworkers Local 1397 at Homestead, Pa., prepared signs. Scenes like this occurred in local union headquarters throughout the nation as the Steelworkers got set to act if mediation failed, but now that another truce has been arranged, the locals are well prepared to meet the October 1 strike deadline. (See story on Pages 6 and 7).

Middle Income Housing Critics Are Ridiculed

CIO REPRESENTATIVES who testified earlier this year on the angrily debated public housing bill were under no illusions. They knew—and they told the committee—that the proposed public housing wouldn't affect most of America's ill-housed.

Low-cost housing for low-income families was sorely needed, they said at the time. But so were aids to a much bigger group—the millions who fall in the middle-income class.

These families, which includes most union members, are too "rich" to qualify for government housing and too poor to rent homes at present rentals or finance their own homes.

Unions hailed passage of the public housing bill as a great step toward alleviating the housing crisis, then focused on means of helping the larger group.

AT ITS 1948 convention the CIO called for enactment of housing aids to this group—and these proposals are now embodied in the "middle-income housing bill."

Last week, the bill's Senate sponsor was determined to nullify some of the real estate and mortgage banker pressure against the bill.

Sen. John Sparkman (D., Ala.), the Senate's most consistent housing champion, read out a long list of organizations who have endorsed the housing bill.

In addition to the CIO, the list included the Veterans of Foreign Wars, American Legion, the Intl. Association of Machinists, the AFL, the Natl. Conference of Catholic Charities and the Cooperative League of America.

To squelch arguments that the bill's section to aid cooperative housing is "revolutionary" or "socialistic," Sparkman pointed to a number of state housing laws which already provide just such a program.

Although the fight over the bill has been smoldering below the surface until now, the formidable coalition that is forming in support of it promises to make it a major political issue.

Here is what the bill would provide:

- Direct federal housing loans at 2½%, amortized over the life of the house.
- Similar aid to non-profit or co-operative housing projects.

THE SECOND feature, in which unions have the most interest, has met "a great deal of opposition," according to Sparkman.

In the House, the "opposition" has already succeeded in having the cooperative housing section cut out of the bill.

In the Senate, however, the Banking & Currency Committee approved the bill. A floor battle is expected within the next two weeks.

Before the Senate can act on the middle-income housing bill, it will have to dispose of a bunch of appropriation bills.

Among these is the appropriation for the public housing program approved by Congress months ago. Applications have been pouring into the Public Housing Administration from local communities for approval of local projects under the program.

Although the Senate committee restored some of the cuts made by the House, the committee recommendations still fall far below the requested figures for the program. Almost entirely wiped out was a program of housing research.

The appropriation bill is expected to reach the Senate floor this week, and its passage will signal the actual beginning of work on the vast public housing program.

Not Too Hopeful

Administration leaders are for the middle income housing bill, though are not clear on when it can reach the Senate calendar.

In reply to a wire from CIO Housing Chairman Walter Reuther, Majority Leader Scott Lucas said: "I am for this bill. Just when we shall reach it on the calendar is problematical in view of the tremendous amount of legislation now pending before us."

Wallace's Job Parley Does 'Job' On CIO, Murray And Reuther

THEY CALLED it—in usual Communist style — the "National Conference on Jobs and the Economic Crisis." But, main target of the parley was not the idle—but rather CIO Pres. Philip Murray and UAW-CIO Pres. Walter Reuther.

The parley, which served as a sort of a curtain raiser for the Electrical Workers' Convention, had been summoned by the Progressive Party. And, as usual, Henry A. Wallace was the main speaker.

All over the lot were left wing representatives of UE, mostly piecards. UE's party line radio commentator, Arthur Gaeth, was there to peddle his usual spiel.

On the first day of the two-day meeting, Henry took the floor. He was mighty worried about free enterprise. "The anarchy of the free enterprise state is bound to come to an end from its own instability," he expounded. "The main question has been whether the emerging general welfare state should be based on democracy or totalitarian principles."

He hastened to state that democratic principles cannot survive in a world locked in a cold war. "The cold war and the gigantic arms program which accompanies it has been immensely profitable for big business," he went on. "This provides the incentive to big business to take over control of government itself in order to perpetuate the cold war policy and the profits which are its products."

This ardent friend of Russia outlined this five-point program:

Stop interfering in the internal affairs of other nations (he means the U. S. is to stop; not Russia, natch), renounce all military alliances, give economic help to other nations only through UN (anti-Marshall Plan), arrive at an understanding with Russia and England to enable all nations to disarm, require more positive recognition by UN of the rights of the colonial peoples to live their own lives free from exploitation.

Including Poland, Czechoslovakia, Estonia, etc., Henry?

WALLACE was followed by Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP, N. Y.), Wallace's and Russia's spokesman in Congress. Marcantonio assailed Murray and Reuther, accusing them of "apologizing" for Pres. Truman's "failure to push for Taft-Hartley repeal. I charge that the main responsibility has been due to the surrender or complete double-cross on the part of Truman and his own generals."

Washington observers who do not voice CP slants have a different view. They say the activity of the Wallaces and the Marcantonios and the CP last fall prevented several pro-T-H repeal candidates from being elected. If they had, Truman would have had the necessary votes.

Murray came in for some more attacks from William Smith, vice president of the CIO Farm Equipment Workers, who was conference chairman. Not a single delegate laughed as Smith accused Murray of "breaking up the CIO and the solidarity of the workers."

The CIO executive board has twice ordered the FE to hand over its members to the CIO Auto Workers. Thousands of workers have left FE for UAW because of the party-line activities of FE's officers.

A number of panels on various subjects were held. The agenda was carefully mimeographed in advance, but there was nary a deviationist from the party line. A number of UE members were present.

Next day, the conference came forth with a program which, if adopted by the Congress of the U. S., would just about double the national debt. The program contained a number of good things, but the Progs had doubled everybody else's proposals.

Somebody fumbled one thing in the report. In one breath, the report asked for an increase in unemployment compensation to $35 a week for 52 weeks and $5 for each dependent; in another breath, the report urged reenactment of the 52-20 arrangement—$20 a week for one year for all unemployed veterans.

Are the Progs discriminating against veterans?

Ex-Convicts Tell of Servitude In Ky. Railroad Tie Plant

ENFORCED servitude still exists in Kentucky, it was brought out at a hearing at Louisville before George Burton, State Commissioner of Industrial Relations.

CIO Regional Dir. William B. Taylor and CIO Woodworkers Rep. Emil Luter claim that a score of convicts from the La Grange Reformatory were forced to work at the plant of Bond Brothers Wood Preserving Co., railroad tie manufacturers.

Employes of the company who belong to the Woodworkers have been on strike since May 2 at the plant, which is located just outside Louisville.

Two of the prisoners, Leroy Carter and Leaish Bronston, whose terms, like those of the other prisoners have expired, told of pleading to be sent back to the reformatory, which is equivalent to a penitentiary in other states.

Bronston testified:

"I told Mr. Gus L. Heicken (parole officer), I have left a living hell and have come to a living hell. I wish you would handcuff me and take me back."

Bronston told the commissioner that he was advised to stay on until another job opened.

He was queried by Heicken, he testified, as to whether he joined the union. Bronston quoted the parole officer as saying:

"I don't want any of my men tied up in a labor dispute and I can take you back."

Bronston said that he did not know that he could leave the plant, when he was questioned as to why he stayed after his parole expired in January 1946. "I was threatened every day until this morning," Bronston said. "Heicken said I was on parole until I could get a pardon."

Lunch Frozen

Carl Winn, CIO Woodworkers' secretary-treasurer, who visited the strikers at the railroad tie plant of Bond Brothers near Louisville commented:

"When the prisoners go to work at Bonds they are boarded out with a man who houses them in a miserable shack with no heat. They have one hot meal a day, breakfast.

"Lunch is issued at breakfast time and in the winter is frozen by the time they go to eat at noon. When they are forced to work overtime, often far into the night—they simply miss their dinner.

"They are paid far below the scale paid other employes, often as low as 50c per hour. When they find that they cannot support their families and leave to get jobs at other plants they are hunted down and threatened with return to prison if they do not return to Bonds."

Workers at the plant were paid on vouchers that could be cashed only at the tie plant store, where exorbitant interest rates were charged on loans, according to Taylor.

O. S. Bond, president of the company, was quoted by the press as denying that Bond Brothers had any connection with the store and did not own the store's quarters.

Carter testified that Heicken told him:

"If I was you, I'd let that mess (union) go."

Carter also said that Gordon B. McGough, the plant superintendent, threatened to send him back to prison when he failed to report to work because he had a toothache. According to Emil, Gough signed the parole papers under which the prisoners were allowed to work in the plant.

Carter said that he went to work in Indiana to earn more money, and that when Heicken told him to return to the Bond plant—which he did—Carter told the parole officer that he would prefer to go back to the reformatory.

Heiken denied all statements made concerning him by Bronston and Carter.

"No man makes his parole in Kentucky unless he makes an effort to have his citizenship restored, but Bronston and Carter never did," Heicken said.

A charge made by Taylor that the workers "were coerced and intimidated by their supervision into hiding defects in railroad ties" was substantiated at the hearing by two former employes, Manuel Tanner and George Earsley.

The hearing was held in an effort to reach an agreement between the plant and the union. The Woodworkers won NLRB representation and union shop elections last year.

Luter was in charge of negotiations for several months until they broke down May 2. Another attempt to settle the dispute was made by Taylor and Miles B. Sweeney, CIO field representative, before the Louisville Labor-Management Committee last August.

Union representatives said that the convicts did not fight the union, that they participated in the two NLRB elections and did picketing, which was limited by a court injunction.

FAREWELL AT JAIL: When twelve were sentenced for violation of a court order issued against strikers at the Bond Brothers railroad tie plant near Louisville, Ky., it was decided that all would serve the longest sentence, 30 hours. The sentences ranged from six to 30 hours. Here CIO Woodworkers Rep. Emil Luter (l.) who was among those sentenced is shaking hands with CIO Regional Dir. William B. Taylor. Standing next to Luter is Peter Markunas, who also was sentenced. The other man is a Jefferson County jail turnkey.

Ultimatum To CIO:

UE Threatens To Withhold Per Capita

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

IN A CONVENTION where blood brothers opposed each other, the Electrical Workers last week blasted CIO policy and its top leadership and then voted to withhold its per capita from CIO if that organization fails to yield on a UE ultimatum.

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey—a delegate to UE from Local 101, Philadelphia—assailed the officers' and delegates' attacks on CIO and termed the per capita move "Communist-inspired."

The right wing faction didn't take it lying down.

It held a caucus late in the week and announced it would remain in CIO if the parent body expels the UE.

"We will preserve our unity and present the case to CIO, laying before it the true state of affairs in the UE."

The caucus named 10 delegates to meet with CIO officers "to determine the best way to provide a CIO international union in the electrical industry free from the domination of the Communist Party. Among those named was Fred Kelley, Lynn, Mass., who ran against UE Pres. Albert J. Fitzgerald for the presidency.

Adopted by a vote of 2321 to 1504, the resolution demanded these things of CIO Pres. Philip Murray:

1. Directions to any union which "has raided, promoted secession and dual unionism against UE . . . to withdraw these charters and permit the UE locals in those plants to function without interference."

2. Direct "raiding" unions to desist. If they fail to obey the order, they are to have charges brought against them.

3. Fire any "CIO regional director, organizer, representative, agent or employe of the national CIO" who participated in any of the above.

4. Direct Carey "to cease and desist from engaging in wrecking activities within the UE."

5. "To make available to the UE each month a detailed breakdown of expenditures."

6. Give assurances that CIO employes "will in no way interfere with the right of UE members to run their union" and further assurances that "UE will not be interfered with by the national CIO in its right to designate its representative to the executive board of CIO."

The resolution then said: "In the event the executive board (UE's) does not receive these assurances from the president of the CIO, this convention authorizes the board to withhold per capita tax to the CIO for such time as it deems necessary for the protection of the interests of the UE."

THE ACTION came after the convention adopted 2376-1464 what Carey termed the "feeblest report I have ever heard" on collective bargaining. Since the UE's rules call for a vote first on the majority report, a minority report by Carey, hailed by right wing delegates as militant, never came to a vote.

Following the per capita vote, the convention proceeded to elect officers with these results (* denotes incumbent):

President: Fitzgerald* over Kelley, 2335 to 1500. (Last year, Fitzgerald defeated Harry Block, 3652 to 719.)

Secretary-treasurer: Julius Emspak* over Michael Fitzpatrick, 2302 to 1530. (Last year, Emspak defeated Anthony Cimino, 3614 to 838.)

Organization Director: James Matles* over John Dillon, 2340 to 1519. (Last year, Matles defeated John Duffy, 3827 to 594.)

THE CONVENTION was a hectic, noisy affair from the start. The first day, Kelley accused the administration of "narrow-gauge railroading of convention committees." This brought a reply from John Gojack, a UE vice president, that there was no democracy at the CIO convention. He was rebuffed by several delegates.

In the same debate, another UE vice president, Ernest DeMaio, called the right wing delegates "lick spittles." When there was a protest from the floor, Fitzgerald said DeMaio was out of order.

Matles opened the debate on the collective bargaining issue with an attack on the Presidential fact-finding report in the steel industry. He said that the UE (which has been in negotiations since May with major corporations) has taken a militant stand on wage increases this year, while "some others in CIO have decided not to ask for more, while still others have given lip service, but use different methods."

Carey demanded to know what has been done in General Electric and Westinghouse negotiations. He accused Matles of liking the NAM's stand on fact-finding. "Why don't you get Wallace to name one for you?" he asked.

He termed the majority resolution on attack on Murray and the Steelworkers' union. When Fitzgerald denied that, there was a howl of laughter from the delegates.

Delegate Jennings accused the left wing in New York City of having signed a number of contracts with no gains. He drew applause when he told of the Sperry Co. contract in his local in which an employe at retirement gets $135 a month—exclusive of social security.

Matles drew a round of boos when he said that the Sperry contract had been won because the international, as well as the local, was militant.

DELEGATE Morton, of Canada, speaking for the minority, said he wanted to "take the water out of the majority report and put in some blood."

One speaker from the left accused the Steelworkers of doing a poor job. He drew a round of boos when he said the workers at Bethlehem were organized by the Fur Workers.

David Davis, a top leader in the Communist Party, alos took the floor for the majority.

Local 601's Fitzpatrick brothers spoke on the issue—Mike for the minority, Tom for the majority.

Matles was the last speaker. After a few minutes, there was so much noise in the room that Fitzgerald interrupted him and called for the vote.

WHEN THE per capita resolution was offered, Dillon said it was an amazing document. "It condemns secession (by UE locals) and defends secession (by UE from CIO). You are advocating a third labor federation."

Mike Fitzpatrick asked the left wing: "Why the hell aren't you men enough to get out—period! The rank and file will stay on CIO."

Gojack accused the CIO convention of ignoring 12 UE resolutions.

Matles then declared the CIO is not doing any organizing. He criticized the Southern Drive and accused Philip Murray of not living up to his promises. He then referred to other CIO officers as "dogs." He asserted "UE can do more for CIO than any other union."

Carey asked Fitzgerald to give his opinion of the consequences of withholding per capita. The UE president replied. "In the chair's opinion, he can't imagine the head of any oirganization refusing to concede to the reasonable demands of the majority resolution.

"You, as CIO secretary-treasurer, should tell us what would happen if CIO fails to go along with us."

Carey said: "I have no desire to defend CIO against the lies and slander you make. You have been engaged in a cold war against CIO and now you declare open war.

"If the CIO had permitted the Communist Party to determine its policy, you would not be asking for this. The left wing is scabbing on CIO.

"Let's stop lying, Fitzgerald and Matles, the Communists are against the labor movement. I think you should say, Fitz, that you're doing this because you can't help yourself.

"In 1946, you voted for a resolution which said the CIO 'resents and rejects' the Communist party's activities in the labor movement. Now you fight those who would carry out that policy.

"The CP is going into the gutter, but it can't drag the CIO down with it—and it can't drag UE down.

"Why don't you withdraw that resolution and put in one that says what you mean. Stop using UE funds to fight NAM's battle."

FITZGERALD, in reply, said, "Your only defense for your actions is Communists.

"As a CIO vice president, my only duties are to carry out any assignment the president gives me. If you call that being an officer, you're mistaken."

Carey intervened and said, "You're not telling the truth about a CIO officer's duties."

Article V, Sec. 7 of the CIO constitution says, "The vice presidents shall assist the president in the performance of his duties. Each vice president shall carry out such special assignments as may be necessary in the judgement of the president to advance the work of the organization."

Article VI, Section 1 says, "The executive board shall enforce the constitution and carry out the instructions of the conventions, and between conventions shall have power to direct the affairs of the organization." Vice presidents are members of the executive board.

Fitzgerald said the dissension between CIO and UE "stems from early in 1941, after Carey had been defeated for reelection as UE president (by Fitzgerald). Carey has done nothing constructive for CIO since then.

(Carey helped write the President's civil rights program and the Marshall Plan. He has represented CIO in many major capacities.)

"We have finally determined to draw up a bill of particulars against CIO. We want to stay within CIO, but the only way is that we be permitted to have the same autonomy our locals enjoy."

He declared that Murray had not fulfilled promises made to UE.

Jennings, his voice hoarse from a severe cold, said the majority "is trying to force CIO to expel us. I challenge you to put this to a referendum vote of the membership. They'll stay by CIO.

"If you push this through, you'll have sold out the workers."

DELEGATE Callahan, in nominating Kelley, pointed out that there was not a single top CIO official as a guest at the convention.

When the roll call on president reached Local 201, Fitzgerald's own local, the chairman of the delegation announced that the vote was unanimously cast for Kelley, also a member of the local, because the membership, in a referendum, had instructed such a vote. The referendum was 7500 to 3200, he said.

Fitzgerald, an automatic delegate because of his office, strode to the microphone and declared "I cast my vote for the best man for the job, Albert J. Fitzgerald." Three other 201 delegates also ignored the instructions. So, the delegates were recorded four for Fitzgerald and six for Kelley. The six protested.

Delegates from a Philadelphia local, however, who personally favored Fitzgerald, said that they were voting for Kelley because they had been instructed to do so.

AS THE CIO NEWS went to press, the convention was preparing to act on foreign policy. The resolutions committee had received 19 resolutions concerning this. The tone of most of them was in complete opposition to CIO policy on foreign policy. Here is an example, from Local 1150, Chicago:

"Whereas the emphasis of the Truman Administration is being placed on the military and the outlook for the American taxpayer is to pay for huge outlays to arm and keep reaction and corruption in the saddle in various European countries, and

"Whereas, it is now the confessed intent of the Marshall Plan and the Atlantic Pact framers to maneuver the American people into working for guns instead of butter for the next decade, while they seek to establish Wall St. rule in Europe and thwart the democratic will of the people in those countries, and

"Whereas, these growing military preparations threaten to exhaust the national budget and leave a comparatively few pennies to spend for desperately needed social and health measures such as housing, unemployment insurance, old age pensions, education, public works, cancer and heart research and other peace-orented research, and

"Whereas these military designs and expenditures with their accompanying thought control and witch-hunting hysteria, have already resulted in a partial paralysis of the country's civilian economy through the straight-jacketing (the spelling is the UE's; the proper spelling is "strait-jacketing") of labor's bargaining strength in a perpetuated Taft-Hartley law,

"THEREFORE, be it resolved that the 14th national convention of UE goes on record demanding that the Truman Administration recognize the will of the American people for a real and lasting world peace, based on the same recognition of realities and willingness to adjust differences as made possible the effective cooperation and joint action which enabled us as Allies to defeat Hitler's Nazi armies and to win the war; and be it finally

"Resolved, that we further demand that the huge saving that would result from scrapping the present sterile war-threatening program be used for such peaceful requirements as will best promote the welfare of the American people, such as public works projects, adequate unemployment insurance for 52 weeks, old age pensions sufficient to maintain health and dignity for our citizens after they reach the age of 55, a comprehensive national health, medical and hospitalization program for the entire population, a federal housing program which will make available safe, modern dwellings for the millions of families which are at present without homes or apartments in which to live."

Fitzgerald told reporters that by the end of the convention "you can be sure of one thing, that is we will have taken a definite stand in opposition to the European Recovery Plan, so-called."

The right wing, of course, was prepared to oppose such action. Carey, as one of the persons who wrote the ERP, was expected to be in the thick of the fight.

No Pictures

The CIO News regrets that it is unable to carry any pictures of the convention of the Electrical Workers' Union.

The officers of that union, for reasons not stated, refused to allow any news photographers in at the convention sessions. This is the first time the CIO News has been unable to carry any pictures of a convention of a large union.

Local 1, Cleveland, CIO Newspaper Guild, sent a letter of protest to UE Pres. Albert Fitzgerald, saying "officers of this local would protest abuse of newspaper workers by any employer. We call on you to rescind this flagrant infringement of the rights of newspaper people and to permit them to take pictures."

The letter noted that "this is the first such violation of American Press freedom by any CIO union convention to our knowledge."

Victor Riesel, columnist, was also barred from the convention, but the officers later changed their minds. As the CIO News went to press, no change had been made on photographers.

Trial System

The right wing shouted "thought control—Soviet style" as the left wing leadership of UE offered the convention a new system under which the national board could try a member on charges brought by another member.

Affidavits

The UE convention, with only a smattering of "noes," voted to sign the Taft-Hartley Law's non-Communist affidavits.

Steel's Double Standard

The CIO Steelworkers Union is slashing again—and hard—at the double standards under which the steel industry and many other industries have operated for years.

This time the issue is pensions.

The union says the industry should foot the bill for an adequate retirement program for its employes. The industry says "no."

It says "no" despite the fact that a large number of steel company officials will receive nice, fat pensions when they retire—pensions paid for entirely by the companies which employ them.

The union isn't arguing that company officials should be denied pensions. Its argument is that the industry should abandon its double standard.

It must take a lot of intestinal fortitude—plus an overabundance of gall—for officials who are slated to receive juicy non-contributory pensions to claim publicly that the industry is opposed to the "principle" of providing such pensions.

What the officials actually are saying—though in different terms—is:

"Pensions are good things for us but not for those who work under our direction."

It's a position which the steel industry cannot justify, no matter how hard it tries.

But the position is not an unusual one for the industry to take. It's typical of the attitudes expressed by the steel-makers throughout the years.

It's Been A Long Battle

Unions have been fighting for years to win for their members many of the employment benefits which were granted almost automatically to management representatives and certain other groups.

A real fight was required to obtain paid vacations for factory workers—a fight that was won years after company executives formed the habit of sunning themselves in Florida or cooling themselves in the mountains at least once a year without missing a paycheck.

CIO and Steelworkers Pres. Murray has lashed out often at the double standard employed by most industries in paying executives and production workers. The former usually are paid by the year, the latter by the hour.

Executives paid on an annual basis usually scoff at the CIO's campaign for institution of the guaranteed annual wage for production workers.

They are opposed to the "principle" of annual pay just like the steel industry is opposed to the "principle" of non-contributory pensions.

Judging by past performances, it's easy to jump to the conclusion that industry strongly favors insecurity for the men and women who operate its machines.

Industry's battle to keep employes from forming unions was a fight for insecurity.

Industry's campaign against adequate social security and unemployment compensation was designed to present increased worker security.

And, just so there won't be any mistake about the intensity of our feelings in this matter, let us conclude by saying we believe "double standard" in the case of steel means just about the same as "double dealing."

'Statism' And the 'Welfare State'

Both Are Desirable, Yet They're Being Used In Smear Campaign

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THE FIGHT of the Commies against CIO policy and the campaign of the reactionaries against the Fair Deal bear a striking resemblance in at least one important aspect.

Both groups are hanging phony tags wherever they think they'll do the most good—or most harm.

Both are engaging in what may be loosely termed "dialectical diatribes."

The Reds are screaming that CIO policy denies them the rights ordinarily provided by democracy and autonomy when what they're really fighting for is the right to ignore CIO policy when it goes contrary to the party line.

The reactionaries are yelling about the "welfare state" and about "statism," but they don't mean what the say. Or if they do, they're worse than they've been painted.

THOSE WHO battle the New Deal of Roosevelt and the Fair Deal of Truman have learned to spit out the word "statism" as if it were venomous.

Health insurance, they declare, would lead us toward statism. Public housing, social security, minimum wages and unemployment compensation already have shoved us "dangerously" in that direction, they say.

They can really go to town on that word! It's short, snappy and not difficult to pronounce.

Their use of it is completely phony — because Webster's dictionary defines "statism" as:

"Belief in a state government, as in a republic, in contrast with belief in communism or a Soviet government."

So!

ANOTHER PET phrase of the reactionaries and the conservatives goes something like this:

"It's un-American; it's undemocratic; it would lead us toward the welfare state."

H-m-m-m. Well, now, let's see what Webster has to say about that one. The definition of "welfare" is:

"State of faring or doing well; condition of health, happiness, prosperity or the like . . . . . exemption from evil or calamity, good cheer, material plenty."

And there's nothing about the definition of "state" to change the meaning when it's used along with "welfare."

Judging by past performances, some of the "boys" actually are opposed to a "welfare state" for the bulk of the people, but they're not openly and knowingly admitting it when they use the term so freely.

THERE'S ONLY one group in the CIO today which is opposed to statism and that group is now squirming around in the doghouse with a collection of hammers and sickles.

This would indicate that statism is a pretty good thing.

Then, we'll take the "welfare state" anytime in preference to the "illfare state" which men pressed in the Herbert Hoover mould advocate.

Really, what could be more desirable that a republic in which the people are in a "condition of health, happiness and prosperity?"

The reactionaries can take themselves back to Hooverism, if they want to, if they'll just let the rest of us enjoy statism and build a welfare state.

Paper Fears Consumer Pays For U. S. Steel Ad

THE Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News wonders editorially whether the cost of U. S. Steel advertising will be paid by the consumer:

"Yielding to none in a conviction that advertising pays, the Daily News still derives scant comfort from the reappearance of big ads signed by the United States Steel Company insisting upon the willingness of the top-flight administrators of one of our biggest and toughest industries to take what the doctor ordered as to collective bargaining.

"Such ads contribute to our personal income, but we are not certain we don't have to pay for them in the long run.

"The CIO doesn't run ads. It doesn't have to, for its utterances are accepted as news. In turn the steel industry would receive the same sort of treatment.

"We suspect the cost of the argument will be assessed against those who make direct use of steel products and that they will pass it on.

"It seem to us that Big Steel's ads are in direct reverse of what a newspaper reader has a right to expect. The big idea back of an advertisement is to show a prospective customer where he can get a bargain—not to be charged off the income tax return of the advertiser."

"Who do you think is handling our 'Truth About Pensions' publicity?"

Priority Asked For Vets In Distressed Areas

Emil Mazey, director of the CIO Auto Workers Veterans' Department, has urged the Veterans Administration to give priority in payment of insurance dividends to veterans in Muskegon, Mich., and other "distressed areas." Mazey, who is also UAW secretary-treasurer, said early payment would help the economic recovery of Muskegon.

Railroad Lobby Wins Subsidy In Wisconsin

The railroad lobby has pushed through the Wisconsin Legislature a law appropriating $250,000 annually for constructing and maintaining safety devices at grade crossings. Gov. Oscar Rennebohm vetoed the bill, but the assembly overrode him 69 to 24 and the senate by 23 to 7. Opponents of the measure said the bill makes it virtually impossible for a motorist to recover damages from railroads in crossing accidents.

He Investigated The Wrong Man

THIS UNUSUAL little story might well be called "The Confession of An Industrial Spy."

The principal character was a fellow who became an amateur detective and embarked on an investigation which in the years since has provided him—and his friends—with many laughs.

For a time he was ashamed to tell the story, but then he decided it was too good to keep.

Now he tells it freely whenever somebody mentions those "detective" agencies whose services are used by industrialists.

He usually starts the story by saying, "Now let me tell you about the time I was a smart detective."

SHERLOCK, as we shall call him, had worked here and there over the years, and he was one of those fellows who liked to try something new.

He heard that a well known investigating agency was looking for men who were familiar with unions, industrial operations and possible sabotage.

He applied for a job and gave himself a big build-up. He was hired.

After a brief course of instruction he was assigned to a fairly large industrial plant as a production-worker detective.

His job was to investigate the behavior of workers in the plant without letting them know what he was doing.

FRANKLY, Sherlock knew almost nothing about detective work but he had a hunch he could spot a suspicious character without difficulty.

So, as he worked he observed. Whenever he had an opportunity he snooped about the plant.

The foreman, of course, knew who Sherlock was, so he didn't interfere with his activities.

In a short time the would-be detective found what he had been hunting for—a suspicious character.

Soon Sherlock was convinced the man was either a saboteur or a dangerous agitator.

In either case, he told himself, his job was to keep an eye on the fellow.

AT THE end of each day's work at the plant Sherlock made careful notes about the behavior of the man whom he suspected.

Periodically he sent a report on the fellow to the agency which employed him.

The more he investigated the more he became convinced that he soon would be able to "crack down" on his suspect.

The fellow behaved in a very suspicious manner. He slipped away from his job often. He snooped around the plant.

And, to make things more convincing, he behaved as if he knew Sherlock was checking up on him.

Yes, sir, it looked like a good case to the amateur, and Sherlock felt that he was really making progress.

AS TIME passed, Sherlock and his would-be victim began playing a little game of cat and mouse. This, of course, aroused Sherlock's suspicion more than ever.

Finally he decided he should send more frequent reports to his agency on the man's suspicious behavior.

Then Sherlock received a letter from his agency. It said:

"Ordinarily we do not tell one of our operatives who our other operatives are, but in this case we're making an exception to the rule.

"The man you have under suspicion is an employe of our agency. Obviously both of you have been spending nearly all your time investigating each other . . ." A.L.S.

U. S. Monopolies Blamed For Canadian High Prices

U. S. monopolies have a large hand in shaping the living standards of Canadians, the publication of the CIO Auto Workers' Research Dept. points out in the following article:

When Canadian papers report incidentally that the Great DuPont Industrial Monopoly, controlling the greatest hoard of productive power ever cupped in the hands of one family, the news has a bearing on life in Canadian homes, too.

American monopolies reach across the U. S. border into Canada, make prices high, reduce employment opportunities, narrow Canadian standards of living.

When it comes to profiteering at the expense of people, monopolies don't discriminate.

The Canadian Johns-Manville Co., for example, is wholly owned by the Morgan-dominated American Company and is related by blood and Morganatic marriage to other giant American companies which also operate under Canadian aliases in Canada.

Quebec iron discoveries will be exploited by the little-known but powerful Hanna Corp., a firm whose policies are coordinated by Morgan with the asbestos company.

Morgan directors run Kennecott Copper which is exploiting the vast Canadian titanium deposits (the metal now used for paint, which is going to revolutionize steel making because it is almost corrosion proof and in combination with iron is much lighter than stainless steel). Kennecott Copper has directors in common with Johns-Manville, too.

About 37 per cent of all Canadian manufacturing facilities are U. S. owned (owned by American monopolies). American money to the tune of more than five billion dollars writes the economic music Canadians must listen to.

U. S. monopolies, spilling over into Canada, produce 60 per cent of Canada's rubber products, 94 per cent of the automobiles, 65 per cent of the refined petroleum products, 66 per cent of metals other than iron, 55 per cent of the electrical equipment.

Who is the richest man in Canada? A fellow who isn't a Canadian at all, name of DuPont, who lives in Delaware.

But here's the humor in this tragic situation:

Financial Post recently asked some of its subscribers if new laws were needed to curb labor.

Said one unbelievable character, a man named Sweeney who operates a cooperage company in Vancouver, ". . . the rank and file of most unions are good law-abiding Canadians but quite often are talked into costly and bitter strikes by persons who are not loyal Canadians . . ."

He suggests getting tough with the foreign fomenters of strikes. But how about getting tough with the foreign monopolies that foment depressions and unemployment through their restrictive high-profit policies?

No end of laws to hang chains on labor unions, but the Combines Investigating Commissioner told the Price Committee in 1948 that there is no Canadian law outlawing monopoly. "The Act (Combines Investigation Act) does not seek to eliminate monopolies as such."

So every time you eat bread, you pay tribute to monopoly.

Reported the Price Committee: "The outstanding feature of the bread baking industry in Canada has been . . . the concentration of financial control in the hands of a few dominant groups . . ."

So every time you buy your wife stockings or a dress you pay something extra to monopoly.

Reported the Price Committee: "Three large firms (each) occupy a monopoly position. . . ."

Reported the Price Committee: "The three largest packing firms account for about 60 per cent of the total slaughterings. . . ."

Mackenzie King promised in 1945 to "prevent restrictive and monopolistic practices."

What do you do? The smallest beginning might be the one suggested by J. R. Kidd of the Canadian Association for Adult Education:

"Have you a list of the promises made by the Liberal Party? Don't burn it up or throw it a way. Keep it to remind the Government of what we expect. Or did you read the proposals of the Progressive Conservative Party? . . . see to it that they vote for these things when the roll is called at Ottawa or in the provincial government chambers. . . ."

Union Furrow

"When farmers from all over Canada, and maybe the world, turn up to show off their prowess at the International Ploughing Match at Brantford, Ontario, the CIO Auto Workers (Local 458) will be on hand to plough a small furrow, too. It will have a tent and an exhibit at the show where it will pass out letters to farmers explaining how monopolies sow weeds and thistles in the world's garden." Ammunition.

Steelworkers Grant Third—A

Walkout Is Postponed Until Oct. 1

By GLORIA CAPLAN

AT A TIME when everything in the steel industry was getting hotter—except the mighty blast furnaces—Pres. Truman stepped in and won two concessions from the companies, one from the union.

With a CIO Steelworkers strike deadline four days off, U. S. mediation efforts hopelessly stymied, and steel companies already cooling furnaces in anticipation of a walkout, Truman made one last effort to keep the peace. He addressed a letter to representatives of both sides. There were three requests:

- That the parties begin collective bargaining talks immediately.
- That they give "the greatest weight and earnest consideration to the recommendations of the Board and to the public interest."
- That work in the industry continue under existing contracts until 12:01 a.m. Oct. 1—a six-day truce extension.

U. S. Steel Pres. Ben Fairless's immediate acceptance of the Truman proposals—particularly the second point—marked the biggest step toward ultimate settlement since the Board's report was released on Sept. 10.

In his wire to the President less than three hours later, Fairless agreed "to give the greatest weight and earnest consideration to the recommendations of the presidential steel board."

PREVIOUSLY THE corporation had refused to commit itself to any discussion in negotiations of the fact-finding report. It had agreed only to discuss pensions and insurance plans, insisting that workers would have to share equally in the financing.

The next day the union's 170-man wage policy committee met in Pittsburgh to act on the President's requests. There was no question about acceptance of the first two points. The union had been seeking company agreement to these all along.

The third point—extension of the strike deadline another six days—the committee agreed to accept.

Murray made it clear he didn't expect to have any across-the-table squabbling on whether the pension and insurance plans would be contributory or non-contributory. Unless the industry agreed to the non-contributory principle, as recommended by the fact-finders, there would be a strike, come Oct. 1. The union had agreed to its third—and last—truce, he said.

"The question," said Murray, "has been: Would the industry accept the four-and-six plan? When I sit down with U. S. Steel tomorrow, I expect the negotiations to be within the framework of the six-and-four proposal—that is, non-contributory."

Commenting on the President's letter, the union chief said: "I believe the President is on our side. The President is in accord with the Board's report, according to the letter he sent to the Steelworkers and industry yesterday."

Murray had good reason to believe the letter represented a union triumph.

In the first place, the President backed the report.

The White House letter quoted the last paragraph of the panel's report:

"'Because of the vital importance of continued steel production to the people of the U. S., and to democratic peoples all over the world,' the panel wrote, 'we hope that the union and the steel companies will find that these recommendations form a suitable basis on which they can reach agreement among themselves.'

"With this statement I am in the fullest agreement," Truman added.

THE PRESIDENT also noted with apparent pleasure the enthusiastic approval the public had accorded the board's recommendations.

"The recommendations of the Board have been accorded widespread public acclaim and approval as a statesmanlike formula for fair and equitable settlement of the dispute in the steel industry," he noted.

Thus Truman had clearly thrown his weight behind the union's insistence that the industry accept the recommendations as a framework within which to negotiate.

As the hectic week, which began with hopelessly deadlocked talks in U. S. Mediation & Conciliation Chief Cyrus Ching's Washington office, drew to a close, the storm clouds appeared to be breaking.

And Philip Murray entered negotiations once again with the steel companies, this time holding two trump cards—the President's blessing and the industry's commitment to "give the greatest weight" to the fact-finder six-and-four non-contributory plans.

* * *

The crisis in steel has been hanging ov the nation's economy since last June. It wa only through the last-minute interventic of Cyrus Ching and Truman that a walkou was averted on July 15.

Finding the two sides miles apart after h own mediation efforts failed, Ching suggeste the formula to Truman which was to stav off the strike for another 60 days.

The formula—a 60-day truce and appoin ment of a fact-finding board with power t make recommendations—was suggested t both sides by Truman. It received promp union approval, reluctant industry acceptanc

During the hearings the union specifie for the first time the exact amount it sough for wage increases, pensions and insuranc It asked a 12½c hourly wage boost; 6.2 an hour for a comprehensive social insuranc program; and 11.23c an hour to finance pe sions of $125 a month.

When the board's recommendations we released, Steelworkers looked on them wi mixed emotions. There was disappointme that the board had recommended against wage increase.

But the union looked on the board's a ceptance of the non-contributory principle pension and insurance plans as a major vi tory. For the first time a quasi-governme body had spelled out the obligation of e ployers to provide for their workers duri sickness or old age—the same as they ma provision for replacement and repair machinery.

Upon receipt of the panel's report, Trum requested the two sides to give "the greate

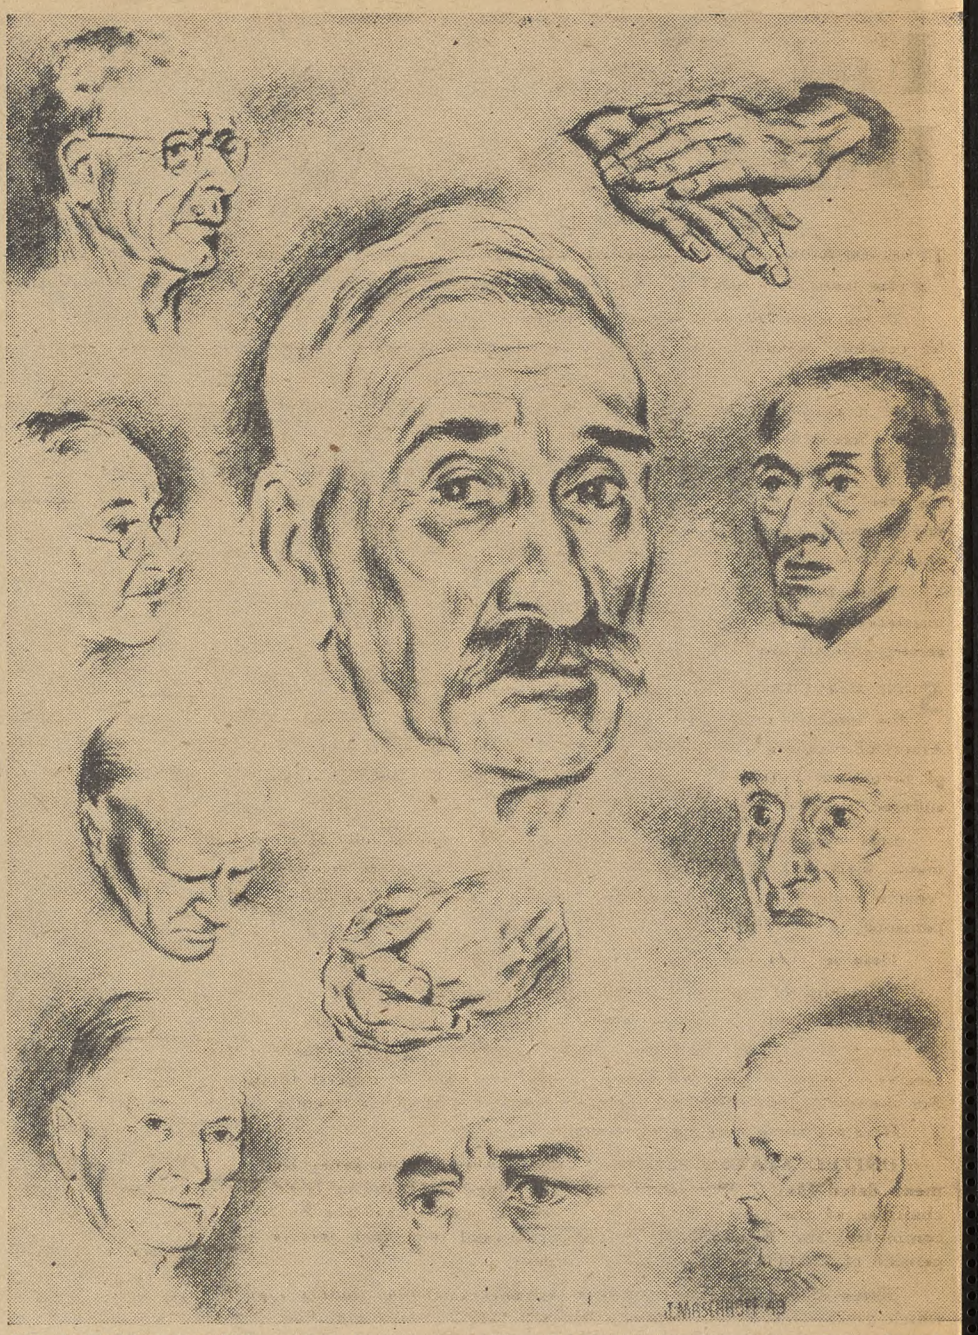
Women's Solution

Leave it to the ladies!

A group of women stockholders in the U. S. Steel Corp. came up with the "solution" to the whole uncomfortable steel crisis.

The plan: Let the steel industry executives give up the fat non-contributory pension plans which they enjoy but deny to labor. Then the stockholders could convert the pensions into some other kind of "equitable compensation" for the officials.

As the CIO News went to press, there were no takers.



AN ARTIST'S STUDY: This drawing of older Ford Co. workers was done for Am munition, publication of the CIO Auto Workers' education dept., by the magazine staff artist Jack Maschhoff.

READ PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE: Some of the principals in the steel dispute read President Truman's request for a third truce in the office of Chief Federal Mediator Cyrus Ching. They are: CIO and Steelworkers' Pres. Philip Murray; Ching; Admiral Ben Moreell president of Jones & Laughlin; Charles M. Hook, board chairman of Armco, and Clarence Randall, president of Inland Steel.

...nd Last—Truce, Murray Says

Fat Pensions For Executives But Nothing For Workers

IT ALL DEPENDS on whether you're a $1.58 an hour man or a $228,000 a year man.

If you're a $228,000 a year man, the company retires you on a fat pension. That's in keeping with the best democratic traditions.

But if you're a $1.58 an hour man, the company doesn't retire you on a pension. That would be "definitely socialistic," "revolutionary," "a loss of freedom for the worker."

In its recent report to the President, the fact-finding board on the steel industry recommended that the companies finance insurance and pension plans for their workers as a regular part of their operating expenses.

What sent the steel companies into convulsions was the board's insistence on the employers' obligation to finance such plans themselves, without any contributions from the employes.

SUCH A SYSTEM would mean "a loss of freedom for the worker," the industry argued. But the board concluded that three million American workers are covered by insurance and pension plans, most of them non-contributory—and none of the workers seemed to have suffered "a loss of freedom."

Last week the union perused the steel companies' official statements filed with the Securities Exchange Commission to learn how "revolutionary" or "socialistic" they really considered non-contributory pensions.

Here is what the Steelworkers found:

"A study of the steel companies' own official statements, filed with SEC, is truly an expose of the inconsistent position of the steel industry. It resolves itself to this: For an official of a company to receive a pension paid for solely by the company is a good thing. For the worker to receive the same benefits is a 'loss of his freedom.'"

Here are some outstanding examples:

UNITED STATES STEEL—The corporation's own proxy statement, dated May 2, 1949, shows that at the age of 65, Irving S. Olds, chairman of the board, Enders M. Voorhees, chairman of the finance committee, and Benjamin F. Fairless, president, will each receive a pension of $50,000 paid for by the company.

These officials also participate in an additional contributory plan which gives Olds $13,815 more; Voorhees $20,323 more and Fairless $26,537 more. Olds pays $4,410 a year to this plan and the company pays $7,360; Voorhees pays $4,410 to the plan and the company $7,360; Fairless pays $5,910 and the company $9,850.

It is interesting to note, in the same proxy statement, that Olds received a wage increase last year of $22,367; Voorhees a wage increase of $21,567 and Fairless a wage increase of $20,167. In other words, the wage increase of these three officials was nearly five times what they contribute to an additional pension plan.

BETHLEHEM STEEL—This plan is entirely non-contributory. Pensions are based on average compensation 10 years prior to retirement. A. B. Homer, president, will be 65 in 1961. At his 1948 compensation of $263,280 a year, he will receive a pension of $110,460 a year to which he contributes not one cent.

There are 13 other officers who will receive pensions ranging from $9,122 to $76,802. Eight of these will receive more than $20,000 each annually. Three former officers are now receiving pensions: one of $25,668, one of $27,168 and a third of $76,968 per year.

ALLEGHENY-LUDLUM STEEL—Hiland G. Batcheller, president, in an address to the Connecticut Manufacturers Association at New Haven, Connecticut, early this week, declared that non-contributory social insurance and pensions for steel workers are definitely socialistic.

Batcheller, if he retires at 65, will receive retirement compensation in a consultative capacity, for 10 years at a salary of $40,000 a year. E. B. Cleborne, vice-president, will receive $12,000 for 10 years as a consultant after retirement; E. J. Hanley, vice president, will receive $10,000 for 10 years as a consultant after retirement, and F. B. Lounsberry, vice-president, will receive $14,000 for 10 years as a consultant after retirement.

In addition, if any of these four officers should die before completing 10 years consultantship, the money will then go to the beneficiaries.

They also participate in a contributory plan which gives them an additional $9,000 a year, but the amount of payment is not shown.

The union now has an insurance program, not adequate, with Allegheny-Ludlum paid for entirely by the company.

JONES & LAUGHLIN STEEL—Ben Moreell, as chairman and president, if he retires in 1953 will receive a pension of $25,000 annually. If he continues to work for an additional five years, his retirement allowance becomes $35,000 all paid by the company. He has been with the company two years.

WHEELING STEEL—This pension plan is non-contributory. William W. Holloway, chairman, with the company since 1920, now receives $75,833.36; Archie J. McFarland, president, with the company since 1930, $75,833.36.

YOUNGSTOWN SHEET & TUBE—Frank Purnell, president, will receive an annuity of $18,000 a year for eight years after retirement, paid for by the company.

CRUCIBLE STEEL—This is a non-contributory plan and provides a pension of $7,500 a year for W. H. Colvin, Jr., president; W. P. Snyder, Jr., chairman, $7,212 a year and R. E. Christie, vice-president, $7,500.

ARMCO STEEL—Charles R. Hook, president, will receive a pension of $26,000 a year. This plan is now contributory but past service prior to 1945 was paid for entirely by the company. In the case of Hook his pension plan is still non-contributory.

NATIONAL SUPPLY—A. E. Walker, chairman and president, will receive $25,000 for 10 years following retirement, paid for by the company. The company has an additional contributory plan which will give him another $12,000 a year, but what payments are made by the company and those made by Mr. Walker are not shown.

The official statements filed with the SEC do not make clear whether the pension plans in the following companies are contributory or non-contributory:

AMERICAN STEEL FOUNDRIES—Pres. Thomas Drever will receive a $17,474 pension each year.

SHARON STEEL—Pres. Henry A. Roemer will receive a pension of $7,092 a year.

REPUBLIC STEEL—T. M. Girdler, chairman, is listed for a pension of $50,000 per year, and C. M. White, president, $50,000 per year. The record indicates that Mr. Girdler's pension is non-contributory.

Similarly, in the case of Inland Steel, there are two plans in effect, one of them non-contributory. Clarence B. Randall, president, is listed to receive a pension of $19,716.96 per year, but what amount is non-contributory is not shown.

weight and the most earnest consideration" to the recommendations of the Board "as a basis for prompt settlement."

The union agreed to accept the report as a "basis."

The industry agreed only to resume negotiations.

An exchange of telegrams followed, in which Murray insisted that the companies agree to accept the report as a basis for negotiations and Fairless replied with cries of "dictator."

Meanwhile, the strike deadline, set for Sept. 14, was postponed again until Sept. 25 to allow more time for negotiations.

On Sept. 16, patient, persistent Cyrus Ching entered the deadlock again. This time three days of talks in his office again failed to produce a settlement.

As newspapers were predicting a strike, and the workers dusted off their picket signs, the President wrote his letter—and headed off a walkout for at least another six days.

MEMBERS of the CIO Steelworkers Local 1014 at Gary, Ind., are carrying picket signs from the painters' shop to their union headquarters. This picture was taken Sept. 18 before the strike deadline had been postponed to Oct. 1.

UAW, Ford Agreement Is Near

A FORD COMPANY pension offer—roughly along the lines of that suggested by the steel fact-finding board—seemed likely to avert a company-wide walkout on Sept. 29 as this paper went to press.

Only 1¼c an hour was said to be standing in the way of agreement between the CIO Auto Workers' negotiators, headed by Walter Reuther, and Ford.

The pension offer, made 10 days ago, would provide a non-contributory pension of approximately $50 a month for Ford employes at the age 68. The plan would be financed by company payments into the fund of 8¾c an hour per worker.

The higher age level of Ford employes was said by observers to be the main reason that 8¾c at Ford would buy only $50 in pensions, starting at age 68, while in steel, 6c could finance a pension of $70 beginning at age 65, according to the fact finders' estimates.

AN INSURANCE PLAN into which Ford pays 1¼c an hour is currently in effect. The company is presumably seeking to include this figure as part of the package to total the fact-finding board's 10c proposal. The union was holding out for a full 10c in new gains, plus a number of non-economic issues.

The Ford contract expired last July 15, and has been extended on a day-to-day basis since. Last week the union gave notice of its intention to terminate the agreement at 12:01 a. m., Oct. 29 unless a settlement has been concluded by then.

In his letter notifying John S. Bugas, Ford labor relations chief, of the union's intention, Reuther reminded Bugas that negotiations had dragged on more than 100 days—longer than any previous contract talks in the auto industry, he said.

Aside from the workers' basic economic needs, Reuther said, the company had failed to meet other worker requirements on such issues as production standards, temporary layoffs, farming out of work to outside contractors, promotions, interdepartmental transfers and committeeman structure and representation.

A state-conducted strike poll among Ford's 115,000 employes last month went overwhelmingly in favor of a walkout if no agreement is reached.

A similar vote was held among the UAW's 83,000 Chrysler employes last week. Previously the Chrysler workers had voted in a union strike ballot to walk out if pensions and insurance are not granted.

WITH THE strike deadline in steel now set at Oct. 1—one day after the Ford deadline—Ford negotiations became the new pacesetter. A settlement in either industry, however, was expected to hasten agreement in the other.

Also affected by any agreement in auto or steel will be the CIO Electrical Workers at General Electric and Westinghouse, who are scheduled to hold a strike poll Sept. 26. This date, at the time it was set, would have followed by one day the steel strike deadline. With last week's postponement of the steel zero hour until Oct. 1, the UE balloting now takes place before the outcome of steel negotiations is known.

Meanwhile, in upstate New York and in 15 Michigan plants, the UAW had its hands full with strike and strike talk.

In Buffalo, a bitter 15-week-old strike against the Bell Aircraft Corp. was being waged amid a plague of mass arrests, injunctions, and mounted police. One striker, the union said, was charged with violating the injunction while he was in the hospital.

At the Briggs Mfg. Co., 25,000 UAW members prepared to take a vote in a state-conducted strike poll on Oct. 3, 4, 5.

Rubber Union Re-Elects Buckmaster

By HENRY FLEISHER

L. S. BUCKMASTER, who was deposed as president of the United Rubber Workers by the union's executive board last May, made a double comeback at the URW convention last week.

At the end of a seven-hour hearing, during which the union's 650 delegates heard several thousand words of fact and argument, the convention overruled the action of its executive board. It restored the tall, gray-haired Buckmaster to his office for the rest of his presidential term—a matter of some 10 hours. The vote to overrule the union executive board's action was 840 to 740.

The union president had been removed from office last May, when the board found him guilty of "malfeasance." The immediate issues arose from a bitter dispute over Buckmaster's handling of a special meeting of a Pottstown, Pa., local of the URW.

Next day, in the regular union elections, Buckmaster was re-elected for his fifth term. He defeated George Bass of Akron by a vote of 867 to 727.

In the convention elections, these shifts took place:

Joseph Childs of Akron, who had headed the Buckmaster Defense Committee which was formed last May, was elected vice-president. He defeated H. R. Lloyd, 824-700.

Desmond Walker of Mansfield, Ohio, another member of the Buckmaster group, defeated Forrest Dickenson of Memphis Tenn., for the secretary-treasurer's post. The vote was 849-713.

In elections for the executive board, the Buckmaster group won a clean sweep. The old board had voted 7-5 against Buckmaster last summer.

The convention voting was the latest in a series of recent shifts in the union's top positions. Lloyd, who had been vice-president for several years, became president of the union after the board deposed Buckmaster last summer.

At the time, Dickenson was elevated to the vice-presidency. Four weeks ago Sec.-Treas. Charles Lanning, who had also opposed Buckmaster, died suddenly. He was replaced for the short duration of the term by Bass, who ran unsuccessfully for the presidency in the convention voting.

Buckmaster described the elections as a "personal vindication" and said the union obviously wanted clean, constitutional government. The defeated candidates pledged full support to the new administration.

The convention, held in a flag-bedecked hall of the Royal York Hotel in Toronto, Ontario, opened Sept. 19 and was scheduled to conclude on Sept. 24.

Associates of Pres. Buckmaster indicated that sweeping changes in the staff and headquarters personnel of the union might soon result.

ACTION on the wide range of general problems facing the union was put aside by the convention until the controversial issue of the "Buckmaster case"—a matter of intense debate in the rubber workers organization for the past four months—had been finally determined.

But before getting its teeth into that problem, the convention took these actions:

1. Voted full support to the United Steelworkers of America and to Pres. Philip Murray in that union's effort to gain acceptance of the recommendations of the Presidential Fact Finding Board.

2. Voted full support for 17,000 URW members at Goodrich who went on strike late in August for decent pensions and other contract improvements.

3. Voiced, through an Executive Board statement, "solid" support to CIO Pres. Murray "in his efforts to rid the CIO of Communism and all other subversive elements."

Lloyd, then president of the union, said, "We have no use for that philosophy. We are bitterly opposed to it and will fight any manifestations of it in the labor movement or elsewhere. Fortunately, our union has not been plagued with communism, but we will give Philip Murray every support in fighting to oust communism from the CIO."

THE "Buckmaster case" exploded on the convention floor on Tuesday morning. An angry uproar greeted the usually routine report of the convention's rules committee, which suggested an agenda for the remaining days of the meeting.

But Buckmaster's supporters offered an amendment. They demanded that his appeal from the executive board's ouster order be judged by the whole convention, acting as a "committee of the whole," rather than by the much smaller appeals committee. Debates and parliamentary discussions raged around the question—but on a standing vote, the Buckmaster forces won, 318-279.

Next day, with the convention sitting as a giant court, the two sides presented their case, with each getting three hours for presentation and 30 minutes for summary. Throughout the day and into a special evening session, the convention listened attentively to the charges and counter-charges.

Buckmaster offered his appeal first—a 31-page statement which he read for nearly two hours, during which time scarcely a delegate left his chair. Other of his adherents spoke during the afternoon. Vice-Pres. Dickenson led off for the other side, reading a 21-page statement, and other union officials followed him to the speaker's stand after the dinner recess.

It was not until 9 in the evening that the debate ended, and it was 12:10 next morning when the secret ballot vote was finally counted. When Buckmaster took over the president's gavel at the Thursday morning session, his supporters gave him a cheering demonstration.

THE "Buckmaster case"—climaxing two or three years of internal dissension in the union—grew out of a situation in the Pottstown, Pa., local, and much of the dispute subsequently revolved around an interpretation of the URW constitution.

Buckmaster charged that Robert Garber, president of Local 336—comprising employes of a Firestone local in eastern Pennsylvania—had been often accused of financial irregularities and mistaken interpretations of the Constitution. Buckmaster launched an investigation, and then, acting under his constitutional powers, called a special meeting of the local.

When the meeting was held, it developed that the local president had called a special meeting for the same time at the same place. Buckmaster and three other international officials charged that they were barred entry to the meeting, even after showing identification, for nearly half an hour.

When admitted, Buckmaster sought to preside at the meeting. He asserted that the president's power to call a special meeting also included his power to preside. Garber disagreed, and refused to give the public address system microphone to the national union president. A scuffle followed: a union field representative was knocked unconscious and Buckmaster said he was pitched from the stage after being manhandled by some of Garber's associates.

The Lloyd group, however, maintains that the charges of financial irregularity by the local president had already been thoroughly investigated by the local, and that Garber had been fully cleared. They insisted there was no evidence of physical violence against Buckmaster or his associates, and that he had exceeded his constitutional authority in seeking to run the meeting.

A UNION trial board, comprised of the executive board, heard the two versions of the affair last May, and voted 7-5 to unseat Buckmaster on the basis of Garber's charges. Buckmaster charged the Board was biased and that no grounds for his removal from the presidency on grounds of "malfeasance" had been produced.

Involved in the ouster and its aftermath were broad questions of rubber union policy.

The Lloyd group charged Buckmaster's presidential administration had been marked by "totalitarian concepts," "one-man" rule, disregard of the constitution, adopting union policies too far to the "right" of both the steel and auto unions, and assailing the constitutional rights and autonomy of local unions.

Buckmaster, on the other hand, maintained that the former executive board majority had preached a "meaningless and dangerous militancy," that it had violated constitutional and basic rights of individuals, that it had ignored the evidence in the Pottstown case, and that its policy would give local unions power far in excess of those entrusted to the parent national union.

The delegates listened—as they had for months—to the pro's and cons. And they cast their ballots for Buckmaster and his policies.

Disaster Victims Aided By Union

Delegates to the rubber convention began arriving in Toronto just after the S. S. Noronic disaster, in which nearly 200 persons died.

The Royal York Hotel, just a few blocks from the pier where the ill-fated ship was moored, became headquarters for Red Cross disaster work as well as for the union meeting. From Saturday through Monday, the lobbies were jammed with delegates, Red Cross officials, survivors of the fire, anxious relatives and newspapermen.

The rubber workers union was commended by Toronto papers for its efforts to help. The union contributed $300 to the city's Red Cross, and many delegates doubled up their rooms in order to provide space for the fire survivors and incoming relatives.

At the opening day of the session, delegates stood in silence in memory of the disaster victims.

Lanning Tribute

The Rubber Workers convention stood in silent tribute to the late Charles E. Lanning, veteran secretary-treasurer of the union, who died suddenly about a month ago.

Lanning's contribution to the URW's growth was praised by Pres. Lloyd and by the Rev. John Banks, pastor of the church which Lanning had attended for many years.

VICTORY SMILE: L. S. Buckmaster smiles broadly as he watches the rubber union convention vote him back into office. Buckmaster was then re-elected for another term.

CONFAB: George Bass, secretary-treasurer of the rubber union, goes into a huddle with Pres. H. R. Lloyd. Both lost their posts in the course of the union election.

New Process Aids Lithographers

THE 25,000-member - strong CIO Amalgamated Lithographers, meeting in its 10th constitutional convention at St. Paul, was told of great technological advances in offset printing.

The delegates discussed the increase in membership this should bring, but that there also would be an increase in jurisdictional problems.

There was discussion of an article in Business Week, which predicts that large national weeklies will in a few years be produced by offset printing.

Other key issues handled by the delegates from the U. S., Hawaii and Canada were an intensified organizing drive, support for members who are out in five eastern Canadian cities, general jurisdictional problems, welfare funds and printers.

Pres. John Blackburn presided at the meetings. Pres. Paul Faber of the host St. Paul local welcomed the delegates.

Greetings of the national CIO were brought by R. J. Thomas, Assistant Director of Organization. Thomas came to the convention in substitution for Pres. Philip Murray, who was unable to appear due to commitments in connection with the current steel crisis.

Thomas discussed the broad problems facing labor today and the necessity for militant action, both on the economic and in the political fields.

Secy. Rod Jacobsen of the Minnesota CIO Council also spoke.

Blackburn reviewed the gains made by the organization since its last convention at Biloxi, emphasizing some of the major issues before the convention. He requested Vice Pres. Arthur Brown, in charge of Eastern Canada, to detail to the convention the nine months' struggle of their members in Eastern Canada who are now locked out by their employers in the cities of Toronto, Montreal, Hamilton, London and Ottawa.

Brown emphasized that the men were on the streets because of lockout and not strike, that the union had failed in nine months of bargaining to reach any possible settlement with their Canadian employers who had continuously failed to bargain in good faith.

The employers have started several back-to-work movements which have all failed and have left the lithographic workers stronger each time.

The convention adopted a resolution which pledged to its Canadian members the full support and financial strength of the entire International organization.

A spontaneous collection of funds produced almost $1000 as a symbol of the determination of the lithographers to support Canada.

The second day of the convention was devoted to a report by General Counsel Benjamin M. Robinson who reviewed the recent history of the organization, its current problems and suggestions for the difficult times ahead.

He emphasized the problems arising in various locals due to the restrictions of Taft-Hartley and of similar state laws in Minnesota, Missouri, and Michigan.

He urged political action on the part of the individuals and of the organization in an effort to remove the poison flowing through these anti-union acts out of the halls of Congress and state legislatures.

Robinson reviewed the jurisdictional problems which have beset the Amalgamated Lithographers ever since the introduction of the offset press which brought the Amalgamated into controversy with the printing unions in the American Federation of Labor, from which the Amalgamated withdrew in 1946 to become affiliated with the CIO.

Robinson also reported on his recent visit to the founding congress of the International Graphical Federation in Sweden. This is an organization of the graphic arts unions of Great Britain and Western Europe, resulting from a federation of the three preexisting unions covering graphic arts workers in these countries.

Secy.-Treas. Martin Grayson gave an extensive outline of the state of organization and of the problems facing the industry.

On University Committee

Harry Whiteside, CIO Auto Workers, and Frank Casey, CIO Oil Workers, have been named to the community advisory board of the University of California, Institute of Industrial Relations.

STRIKERS ON SKATES: Here are a few of the 450 strikers at the Heil Co., Milwaukee, who scattered throughout Milwaukee, Wis., to distribute literature answering company misrepresentations concerning the strike issues. These strikers took to skates because they said that the Heil Co. proposals would require them to use roller skates to do their jobs.

Trade Pact Extension Is Passed

Extension of the government's power to negotiate low-tariff trade agreements has been voted by Congress.

The issue was a key point in President Truman's 1948 campaign, when he argued that only through improved world trade could international economic stability be achieved.

The 80th Congress had extended the pact-making power for only one year, and added a number of serious restrictions to the government's authority. But that stop-gap legislation expired June 30, and the new law was hailed by government spokesmen as carrying out the spirit of the program initiated in 1936 by Pres. Roosevelt and Secy. of State Hull.

These government economic experts said passage of the measure showed that this country has no intention of moving back to a high-tariff policy that would deprive other countries of the power to sell to this country and to thereby acquire badly-needed dollars for purchases here.

(CIO has consistently supported the trade agreement program as essential to building international trade and stability. CIO Secy.-Treas. Carey testified at both Senate and House hearings earlier this year in favor of the Administration bill.)

The House passed the bill early in the session, but it was stalled for months on the slow-moving Senate calendar. It finally passed the upper body on Sept. 15 by a 62-19 vote, though Administration supporters had to hustle to beat down some restrictive amendments.

The most important of these, calling for Presidential explanation of tariff-cuts below so-called "peril points," was introduced by Sen. Millikin (R., Colo.).

Defiant Mine-Mill Union Will Continue Per Capita To CIO

By BOB SENSER

THE International Union of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers has served notice that it would continue to defy national CIO policy even if that defiance means expulsion from the CIO.

At its 45th convention held in Chicago, Mine-Mill once again said that it would not change its colors. It would go right on fighting the Marshall Plan, campaigning for the Progressive Party, and otherwise beating Communist drums.

In fact, Mine-Mill decided to affiliate, on its own, with the World Federation of Trade Unions, the Communist-dominated world labor body which the national CIO left earlier this year. Mine-Mill wanted no part in setting up a non-Communist "dual labor fedation."

(Last May the CIO executive board said that affiliation with WFTU by any CIO union was "contrary to CIO policy.")

MINE-MILL wasn't blind to what delegates to the national CIO convention might decide in Cleveland during the week starting Oct. 31. Said Sec.-Tres. Maurice Travis, who recently resigned from the Communist Party: "If the corrupt forces of the Reuther-Carey machine hold sway, there is no doubt that we will be expelled."

Nine delegates—the four top officers and five "rank and file" members—were elected for the national CIO convention. They vowed to "carry out the mandates of this convention and fight for autonomy within the CIO."

In a broadly worded resolution, the convention gave the international executive board a clear field to do much as it wishes in the union's political action. Local unions, however, were told that they did not have to indorse the same candidates as the national executive board did.

The convention approved Travis' recommendation that Mine-Mill pay more than $50,000 in back per capita due the national CIO. (Travis estimated that by October the sum owed would grow to $55,000.)

Travis said, in effect, that he wouldn't want the national CIO to use the debt as an excuse for expelling Mine-Mill. His way of putting it: "It would be utterly foolish to make a principled fight that is surely in the best interests of our own membership and all of American labor on the one hand—and on the other hand, to permit a technicality of non-payment of per capita to negate all of the affirmative aspects of that fight."

Travis said that the debt should be paid even though the money "is often turned against us and used to our own disadvantage."

A few delegates demanded that the union's monthly organ, "The Union," give space to more than one line of political thought. But the convention took no action on this after another speaker said: "We can't have a hodge-podge of ideas in the paper—we've got to follow the democratically made policy of the majority."

In a booklet titled "Mine-Mill and the CIO" distributed to delegates, the union said:

"With the assumption of the Presidency by Harry Truman and his desertion of the New Deal policies of Franklin D. Roosevelt, the CIO officialdom, slowly at first and then in a headlong rush, also abandoned the progressive traditions of CIO. These included autonomy and rank-and-file democracy.

Leaflets from Communist front organizations were also distrbuted at the convention.

Pres. John Clark and Vice Pres. Orville Larson were assured of returning to office in 1950 when they were nominated without opposition for the referendum to be held in November.

The two other top officers, however, face competition. Travis will run against James Corriveau of Bridgeport, Conn. Vice Pres. Reid Robinson will run against Stanley Wenham of Buffalo, N. Y.

Both Wenham and Corriveau and some of the board nominees are considered "right wingers" opposed to the present administration's policies. What are their chances?

Privately, some of the right-wingers said that they felt they had a good chance against Robinson and Travis, because "there's a lot of dissatisfaction with the way they've done their jobs."

Mine-Mill will also get its first Negro international officer in 1950. Ray Dennis, Cleveland, was assured of the job as board member from district three, which covers eight mid-western states. His only competitor, Jesse Van Camp, incumbent, stepped down in Dennis' favor.

Races for board members will be held in at least three of the union's eight districts. In four others there is no opposition. The convention made no nominations for district eight (Eastern Canada) because the delegates from that region were stopped at the border by U. S. immigration officials.

A special conference on nominations will be held during the week of Sept. 25 in Sudbury, Ont., district headquarters.

The convention gave the executive board power to select a city in the Southwest as the 1950 convention site.

'Class Struggle To Continue'

"We hold that the class struggle will continue until the producer is recognized as the sole master of his product."

So says the preamble to the constitution of the International Union of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers (CIO). At the union's convention in Chicago, Local 414 of Trona, Cal., tried to change the Marxist tinge by making the sentence read:

"We hold that the economic struggle will continue until the producer will obtain just compensation for his product."

Opponents of the change said that the preamble had been worded that way since Mine-Mill's predecessor, the old Western Federation of Miners, was formed 56 years ago. The delegates agreed that the preamble should stay that way.

'Political Pickpockets' Hit Before Kansas CIO

DELEGATES to the Kansas CIO Council convention at Topeka were warned by Henry Zon, PAC publicity director, of "political picketpockets."

Zon said that "like the professional pickpocket, the political pickpocket tries to divert your attention. Reactionaries in both parties try to distract the attention of the voters from the real issues."

The PAC publicity director chided the Republicans for abandoning the cry of "unity" for the charge of "statism."

He reminded his audience that "statism" may mean the use of government for the few instead of the many.

"As for example," Zon said, "we have the use of the National guard in Kansas City against the CIO Packinghouse Workers during the strike last year and the use of subsidies for airline and tariff to protect ship lines."

He concluded his speech with the warning that "labor could not afford a repetition of 1946."

AFTER A heated discussion an amendment to the constitution providing for biennial instead of annual election of officers was aproved by a voice vote.

Three other amendments changing the phrasing of certain sections of the constitution were adopted.

A highlight of the convention banquet was the appearance of Shirley Nan Hargiss, who presented the repertoire she gave in Atlantic City where she placed among the top 15 contestants for Miss America.

Resolutions which were passed by the convention advocated the extension of social security, unemployment compensation, workman's compensation, the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, support of the Fair Deal program. Other resolutions requested equal pay for equal work, national health insurance program and public grants to schools for training health personnel and to hospitals.

One resolution, which was passed because of the attitude of Wilson & Co. toward the CIO Packinghouse Workers, contained the slogan: "The Wilson label—a disgrace to your table."

THE OFFICERS elected are Willard Murphy, president; H. J. (Jim) Yount, secretary-treasurer; C. H. Stinnett, first vice president; Howard Hoy, second vice president; and Earl Miller jr., third vice president. With the exception of Hoy and Miller, these were the incumbent officials. Hoy and Miller replaced Frank Brown and C. A. Cunningham.

Speakers included Walter King, director of the Wage and Hour Division of the Department of Labor; John Morrison, Kansas director of the Employment Security, James J. Leary, CIO regional director.

Also John Crull, vice president of the Communication Workers of America-CIO; Philip Weightman, representative of the National CIO-PAC; Gene Fortune, president of the Kansas Farmer's Union; I. I. Pickett, of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, and Russell Letner, CIO Auto Workers' regional director.

40,000 Homes Are Planned in Mich.

A triple-barrelled program which would provide 40,000 low-rent housing units in Michigan in the next six years, help clear the state's major slum areas and provide 30,000 jobs a year has been presented to Gov. Williams by his Full Employment Committee.

The plans were handed Williams by Harry C. Markle, committee chairman and Michigan Unemployment Compensation Commission executive director, and Edward D. Connor, Detroit councilman and chairman of the Governor's Housing Study Committee.

The report stated that Michigan could expect Federal aid for construction of the 40,000 housing units. Space for the construction of an additional 40,000 units by private enterprise would be provided through clearance of approximately 2,000 acres of slums, it was pointed out.

"At present costs, these 80,000 homes would mean the expenditure of at least $720,000,000 of which something like $280,000,000 would be paid for direct labor on the site," the report stated.

State Agency Refuses To Insure Negro

The state insurance dept. at Milwaukee, Wis., has refused to insure James Rancher, a Negro war veteran. State insurance Commissioner John Lange explained the state agency can not charge higher rates for Negroes, as private life insurance companies do. Assemblyman Leroy J. Simmons, himself a Negro, has demanded that Governor Oscar Rennebolm replace Lange. Simmons intends to apply for state insurance so he can test the ruling of the commission.

Action Urged On Anti-Trust Measure

THE CIO HAS protested to Sen. Herbert R. O'Conor (D., Md.) over his statement that the Senate may not be able to act this session on HR 2734, a bill which would prevent acquisition by any corporation of the physical assets of another corporation for the purpose of stifling competition.

The protest came in the form of a letter from CIO Vice Pres. Emil Rieve, who is administrative chairman of the CIO Full Employment Committee and president of the Textile Workers' Union.

"It is difficult to justify the failure to act on grounds that additional long and drawn-out hearings are necessary before your Judiciary subcommittee can pass on this bill," Rieve wrote. "Rather than postpone action of HR 2734, the Senate Judiciary Committee might better concern itself with consideration of other effective measures to break the near strangle-hold now held by monopolies over American economic life."

O'Conor replied that Rieve had apparently been misinformed "as nothing has been said by the Subcommittee to indicate any intention to postpone this proposal. While the bill has reached the Senate Judiciary Committee only recently it has been agreed at my suggestion to proceed without undue delay to the proper consideration of this bill."

Oleo Tax Repeal Bill Is Delayed

The Democratic party policy committee has decided to delay until January any attempt in the Senate to repeal oleomargarine taxes. Sen. Scott Lucas (D., Ill.) said the repealer will be among the first measures taken up in January. The House has passed the bill.

Stone Workers Map 3-Prong PAC Drive

By AL ZACK

ONE HUNDRED and seventeen delegates to the 6th Constitutional Convention of the United Stone and Allied Products Workers of America-CIO voted overwhelmingly to raise per capita payments to the International to continue the union's record of achievement. The convention was held in Columbus, Ohio.

The officers' report shows that in the three years since the last convention in York, Pa.—the constitution calls for conventions every three years—members of the union had received wage increases totaling $5,000,000.

The officers' report also shows that 64.3% of the membership is now covered by group insurance providing life, accident, sickness and surgical coverage.

These gains were won the hard way, the convention was told. It required strikes involving 23 branches (that's what the Stone Workers call their Locals) and 13 companies to win these gains.

IN EVERY CASE, the companies used every means open to them in the Taft-Hartley Act to fight the union and the strikes were costly, the Officers' Report pointed out.

In a resolution, lashing at the Taft-Hartley Act, which was labeled a "blight on our American political, social, and economic democracy," the delegates dedicated the Union and its entire membership to an all-out fight to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act.

They said, "To us, the Taft-Hartley Act is not a people's law. It belongs to those who hope to destroy all unions, revive industrial autocracy, and restore an open-shop America."

Recognizing that resolutions and good intentions are not enough and that votes, not opinions, are counted at the polls, the Stone Workers resolved to mobilize their full strength in a three-fold political action campaign:

1. To launch an immediate and continuing campaign looking toward the registration of each member of every branch.
2. An official setup to keep the international union informed of the number of unregistered voters and means taken to secure their registration.
3. A PAC buck drive in which every member of the Union will be solicited.

During the course of their deliberations the delegates listened to many prominent speakers. Among these was Murray D. Lincoln, president of the Ohio Farm Bureau Insurance Companies, and one of the most widely known cooperative leaders in America.

LINCOLN, WHOSE name has been prominently mentioned as a possible candidate against Senator Robert A. Taft of Ohio, told the delegates that America now knows enough to produce enough to give everybody in this country a decent standard of living.

But, Lincoln said, "the big problem is how to get enough money into the hands of the people who are the consumers so that they will be able to buy the products of the factory and the farm."

He called for an America that knew how to "handle an abundance, rather than perpetuate scarcity." He added, "the whole business of trying to administer our economy by infused scarcity is economic suicide."

Tilford Dudley, assistant director of CIO-PAC, lashed out at Taft's theory that there are only 100 or so Americans with the capabilities for running the entire country.

"I prefer the CIO program," Dudley said, pointing out that the CIO is working for a better America, "an America where there are small yet comfortable homes for everybody, decent price tags on all commodities, competent medical care for everyone, good schools and honest and equal collective bargaining."

Dr. Willard Uphaus, executive secretary of the National Labor and Religion Foundation, reported on democracy at work in Great Britain, telling of his observations in a European tour this summer.

Dr. Uphaus offered this prediction: "The British people will never reverse the direction they are going."

In referring to the problems of democracy everywhere and especially in the U. S., he said, "The trade unions and the church must arrest certain enemies of the people who would turn us down stream."

Secy.-Treas. Jacob Clayman of the Ohio CIO Council pointed to the CIO program as a pathway toward a better America.

"The answer to our dilemma is an ever increasing standard of living . . . more homes to live in, more food to eat, more jobs for people, more money in pay envelopes," Clayman said.

By a wide margin, the delegates voted to raise the per capita payments from 75c to $1.25, pointing out that lack of funds was hampering the international in its organization campaign and in servicing local unions.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The two-year struggle of Oregon telephone workers to have the union of their choice, free of the attempted dictation of the company has ended in complete victory.

When the Oregon telephone people, more than two years back, decided to affiliate with TWOC, their wishes were challenged by the company. They were forced in hearings and disputes and, finally, an election by the company's opposition.

By the time the election was scheduled TWOC had become part of CWA-CIO. Last week the Oregon workers made their choice in the NLRB vote. Despite the bitter campaign waged by the company the vote was 2246 for CWA-CIO against 1896 no union.

The sincere congratulations of the entire CIO will go to June McDonald for her fine work in directing the Oregon campaign and to the CIO and CWA staff people who worked with her.

Another great victory was recorded last week in New Kensington, Pa. There a crew of raiders from the AFL thought they could steal the big aluminum plant represented by the CIO STEELWORKERS. In a resounding rebuke, the employes voted 2,543 to 485 to continue on with CIO and the STEELWORKERS who have brought them so many benefits in wages and working conditions.

The CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers face an important election in Belle, W. Va., where approximately 4,000 DuPont employes will vote Oct. 12 and 13 in an NLRB election. For two years the employes have been without contract protection because a small majority of them believed the false promises of a group who claimed they could obtain union benefits without voting for a union.

CIO Reg. Dir. James J. Leary reports that in a union shop election held at the Jensen-Salsbury Laboratory and Biological Farm, Kansas City, Mo., the vote was as follows: 129 eligible to vote; Local 150, UPWA-CIO yes 117; no, 2.

CIO Reg. Dir. Joseph M. Walsh of Wilkes-Barre, reports that members of the Independent Union of the Gas Division of the Luzerne County Gas and Electric Corp., Hazleton, Nanticoke and Kingston, have voted to affiliate with CIO. The vote on affiliation was 58 to 5. A charter for Local 383 has been issued by the CIO-Utility Workers and negotiations are underway with company officials to have this local replace the independent union as bargaining unit. CIO Field Rep. Frank D. Vrataric handled the transfer to UWUA-CIO.

In an NLRB election among the employes of the Elite Mills, Inc., of Scranton, Pa., the workers voted 61 for TWUA; 32 no union; and 3 challenged. TWUA Reps. Samuel Fiore, Joseph Bellas, Raymond Munts, and Elwood Taub handled the campaign.

CIO Reg. Dir. Robert Starnes reports that in an election at the Flintkote Co., Meridian, Miss., the workers voted as follows: Eligible 383; IWA-CIO 228; UCLGW-AFL 146; void 3; no union 1.

Pres. Morris Pizer of the CIO Furniture Workers, reports that in an NLRB election conducted at the McCoy Couch Mfg. Co., BENTON, ARK., the workers voted, UFWA-CIO 150; no union 99.

CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Mann reports the following victories in NLRB elections: American Car and Foundry Co., Chicago, Ill., eligible 1002; UAW-CIO 574; AFL 117; against 13. Chicago Railway Equipment Co., Chicago, Ill., eligible 11; UAW-CIO 9; against 2. Lyon Metal Products, Inc., Aurora, Ill., eligible 305; USA-CIO 167, against 113.

NMU Bars Fascists, Reds From Membership

THE SEVENTH biennial convention of the CIO Maritime Union, meeting in New York City, began getting down by the start of its second week to the major issues—porkchops and internal disruption.

The fight against disruptive groups within the union was still undecided, although the first round went to the Union's administration, led by President Joseph Curran. The first round battle consisted of two proposals—one submitted by the Resolutions Committee and the other by the Constitution Committee.

The Resolutions Committee proposal reaffirmed the convention's "faith in the United States and what it stands for and makes it clear that we will defend our country against any enemy, including the Soviet Union." It was introduced by "whereases" which condemned statements by Communist Party leaders throughout the world "that in the event of an armed conflict between the Soviet Union and their native country they will 'support' and 'welcome' the Red Army."

Vice Pres. Jack Lawrenson, one of the leaders of the anti-administration group, argued to remind the more than 600 delegates that it should be the aim of labor unions to promote peace and not add fuel to the fires of war. In a half-hour oration he urged the delegates not to be confused by war propaganda in the American press. When the vote on the resolution was called for, however, he abstained from voting.

Then amid punctuations of wild applause, Curran urged the delegates not to be confused by "the constant attempt to divert attention from the real purpose."

NMU HELMSMEN: These men steer the CIO Natl. Maritime Union. The picture taken at the NMU convention at New York City shows Jack Lawrenson, vice president in charge of the Pilot, education and publicity; Neal Hanley, secretary; M. Hedley Stone, treasurer; Joseph Curran, president; Hulbert Warner, vice president in charge of contract enforcement dept., and Adrian Duffy, vice president in charge of organizing.

"I support," Curran declared, "a resolution which tells me the land upon which my family lives, the land upon which my ancestors have lived, wherever they came from before, is to be inviolate."

On roll-call vote the resolution was overwhelmingly adopted.

The convention, also adopted an amendment to its constitution to bar from membership members of Nazi, Fascist or Communist organization. The administration succeeded in obtaining the required two-thirds by a bare majority of three. The final vote was 405 for, 198 against and 12 abstentions. Both Curran and Lawrenson took the floor on this question which both sides in the convention considered a test of strength for their factions.

Curran scored the opposition for what he called contradictions which appeared in their remarks. As the votes were being counted some of the delegates came forward to change their votes. There was some confusion with both factions claiming victory until it became clear that the rank-and-file had voted to uphold the administration.

At another session, Curran delivered his 76-page report on the state of the union in which he placed the repeal of Taft-Hartley at the top of the list of things which the union would have to fight for.

Also presented as a main objective of the union for the coming two years were winning the 40-hour week through amendment, if necessary, of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 to give the Maritime Commission authority over hours as well as wages; obtaining an employer-financed health and welfare plan, and putting the union on a strict efficiency and economy basis.

Curran also recommended adoption of a policy with regard to alien seamen of closing the union's books in the future "to all but citizen seamen or those in possession of valid first papers," and removing "from its present membership all aliens who are eligible to become citizens but do not do so."

In his report Curran took the initiative in requesting the Constitutional amendment which would bar Communists from the union and empower the officials "to bring up on charges as 'dual to the union' those Communistt members who continue to 'harass and disrupt' the organization." An amendment package to effect the last part of his request was defeated by lack of the required two-thirds vote at the Tuesday session of last week.

Mayor William O'Dwyer, in a speech to the delegates, expressed understanding of the seamen's problems, having been a maritime worker himself.

He urged the convention to support of CIO-PAC-indorsed candidate for New York State Senator, former Gov. Herbert H. Lehman. He scored the failure of the 81st Congress to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act and stated that election of Lehman and other liberals like him would insure understanding and courageous fighters for the New Deal program of social welfare.

AP Resumes Talks After Guild Brings Charges

THE ASSOCIATED Press is a big business cooperative, owned by and operated for the newspaper publishing industry.

Since the inception of the CIO Newspaper Guild in 1933, AP has fought the organization of its editorial employes. Shortly after the Guild's organization, AP fired Morris Watson from its New York staff for union activity and did not reinstate him until ordered to do so by the U. S. Supreme Court.

For several years AP bargained with the Guild on a bureau-by-bureau basis, but refused to recognize the union on a national scale.

This year AP editorial employes throughout the land chose the Guild as their bargaining agent in a Natl. Labor Relations Board election by a vote of 1166 to 212. Since then—six weeks ago—there have been several bargaining sessions, but AP continued to fight the Guild by making offers which it should have known would be unacceptable to its employes, according to the Guild.

Finally the Guild put a management proposal to the vote of the membership, which rejected it 651 to 93.

When negotiations were resumed, management seemingly unimpressed by the rejection of its proposal, refused to bargain, the Guild charged.

AP said in effect "either put up or shut up." The Guild "put up" by bringing an NLRB charge of unfair labor practices. Whereupon negotiations were started again last week.

A major point of dispute has been the disparity in wage minima among the AP bureaus. Management proposes a top experience pay range of from $85.25 weekly in a number of cities up to $110 in Chicago, New York and Washington.

Other major issues are AP's refusal to grant a general wage increase and its refusal to write its employe pension plan into the contract.

Win 15 Cents

THE 12-WEEK strike of 2500 members of Locals 117 and 117A of the CIO Shoe Workers against the Selby Shoe Co. plants in Portsmouth, O., and Ashland, Ky., has ended with a 15-cent per hour increase in minimum rates.

Settlement also included incorporation of the 22-cents-per-hour cost of living bonus into the piece rate structure with a company guarantee against loss of income; an additional paid holiday; payment of approximately $160,000 in vacation pay earned under the old contract.

The agreement included arbitration of the union's demand for elimination of an escalator clause. The arbitration board, with Union Representative Russ Hutchinson dissenting, voted to continue the clause.

Three NLRB Rulings Support TWUA Against Employers

IN THREE instances the NLRB last week slapped down employers for attempting to beat CIO Textile Workers' organizing efforts by means of veiled threats or bribes.

The Chicopee Mfg. Corp., Georgia, was ordered by the Board to

- Stop questioning employes about their union activities.
- Stop threatening to discharge those who join or refuse to resign from TWUA or any other union.
- Stop offering to help and attempting to force workers to resign from TWUA.
- Stop threatening to close and move its plant if the union succeeds.
- Stop interfering with the employes' efforts to organize in any other manner.

The union contended that the foreman had questioned one worker about the union activities of two other employes. During the conversation he allegedly commented that a union had once before tried to oragnize at the plant and "they had failed getting it in, and all that was there that had fooled with it wasn't there then."

ANOTHER INSTANCE cited by the union was a remark by a checker at the plant to the wife of an active TWUA member.

After the union's defeat in a representation election, the checker was said to have warned: "There's going to be a lot of moving around . . . That little 149 that voted for the union won't be forgotten for a long time."

The Board found that both remarks constituted an implied threat and thus violated the law, even if no direct coercion was involved.

IN ANOTHER TWUA case—this one against the Schwarzenbach Huber Co., Altoona, Pa.,—the NLRB set aside a representation election and ordered a new one on grounds that the employer's action just before the election were timed to "thwart" unionization.

One of the violations charged by the union was that the plant superintendent, Carl S. Schott, just before the Oct. 7 election, addressed each shift, frankly saying the company didn't want the union in the plant. During the speeches it was charged, he announced the company was "considering' a pension plan.

Since a large number of the employes are older workers, this was a subject in which they were vitally interested. In its organizing efforts, the union had previously issued literature outlining benefits enjoyed by workers at the company's Columbia, Pa., plant, which is under TWUA contract. Pensions were listed as one of the benefits sought by the union in current negotiations at the Columbia plant.

Because the management at the Altoona plant had never mentioned pensions until the eve of the election, the Board ruled that "the employer's purpose in suddenly making the announcement about possible benefits in the form of pensions was to thwart the self-organization of its employes."

In such a case, the board concluded, the employer was not protected by the Taft-Hartley "free speech" provision.

"The new amendment of a new development in company policy on a subject of vital concern to the employes, on the eve of a representation election, made for the purpose of winning away votes from the campaigning union, clearly implied a promise of gain," said the NLRB.

THE THIRD TWUA case was wth the Standard-Coosa-Thatcher Co., Ridgedale, Tenn. The NLRB ruled unanimously that wearing of a union button by a worker does not permit an employer to question him about his union affiliation or sympathies.

The board ordered the firm to rehire with back pay Kenner Walker, discharged illegally. It also ordered three days' lay off pay paid to Frances Bailey.

"The subtle pressure created by interrogation results from the realization by the interrogated employe that his employer is concerned with his union affiliation or activities and will, therefore, act to the employe's detriment," the board said.

Carson is Confirmed For FTC

CONSUMERS scored one of the biggest victories of this session of Congress when the Senate last week confirmed the nomination of John Carson to the Federal Trade Commission, 45 to 25, with the Republicans voting almost solidly with the special interests opposing Carson.

All the votes for Carson were from Democrats except four. All the votes against him were cast by Republicans except for two Dixiegops—Byrd, of Virginia, and McClellan, of Arkansas.

In the closing debate, Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D., Minn.) accused the Republicans of lining up with the Natl. Tax Equality Association and against consumers, cooperatives, and independent voters. He said Carson was supported by independent voters and consumer interests, and nothing had been brought out against him except his opposition to vested interests.

Sen. Warren Magnuson (D., Wash.) led the fight for Carson, asserting his whole career had been in roles where he fought for consumers and learned "both the strength and the weakness of the American economic system." Pointing out the Federal Trade Commission's job was to fight monopoly, he said the cooperatives with which Carson had been associated were formed to fight monopoly and create competition.

OPPOSITION to Carson was led by Senators Bricker (R., Ohio), Malone (R., Nev.), Kem (R., Mo.) and Reed (R., Kans.).

Bricker underlined the fact that Carson had been an employe for several years of the Washington office of the Cooperative League of the U. S. A. "There is a cleavage today between the cooperative movement and business as such under the private-profit enterprise," Bricker warned his colleagues. "In many communities that is acute."

Magnuson, replying to the Ohio Republican, reminded the Senate that about 10 million people in the U. S. are members of cooperatives, most of them formed out of the conviction of farmers that "other types of business enterprise—corporations and partnerships—were taking undue advantage of the position in which the farmer found himself.

"They formed their cooperatives in order to obtain a greater profit for themselves and to insure that there was real honest-to-God competition in the fields in which they operate."

Barkley: 'Democratic Party Never Afraid of Being Called Names Because It Served People'

By BILL MILLIS

TWO-THOUSAND Western Democrats brought a conference on "Land, Water and Jobs"—and politics in 1950—to a close in San Francisco last week with a burst of spread-eagle oratory by Vice Pres. Alben W. Barkley condemning Dixiegops "who want Uncle Sam to sit aside the dome of the Capitol, look around, draw his salary and do nothing."

Pinning the Administration's campaign in next year's congressional elections to defense and extension of the "Fair Deal" program for labor, agriculture and small business, Barkley declared:

"We have been told we are on the last mile to collectivism. Well, if we are on the last mile, we might well ask who started us on the first mile?

"We are not concerned by those who cry statism or welfare state.

"I'd like to ask those who raise this cry to go into the cities or farms of this nation and tell the people if they are in favor of withdrawing price support, soil conservation or rural electrification programs, if they propose to repeal social security, unemployment insurance or public housing?"

"POUR IT ON, pour it on," a crowd at the final public rally of the conference shouted as Barkley continued.

"The Democratic party is not afraid of an epithet," the Vice-President declared. "Jefferson, Jackson, Bryan, Wilson and FDR were not—and Harry S. Truman is not afraid of one either.

"The Democratic party has never been afraid of being called names because it served the people."

What Barkley called "the increased devotion of the Democratic Party to the welfare of the West" on such regional problems as power, water, reclamation and conservation was reflected in the attention given to the two-day San Francisco meeting by ranking members of the Truman Administration.

FOUR CABINET members—Labor Secy. Maurice Tobin, Interior Secy. J. A. Krug, Agriculture Secy. Charles Brannan and Commerce Secy. Charles Sawyer—and Leon H. Keyserling, vice-chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, participated in the formal panels.

William B. Boyle, Jr., Democratic national chairman, hailed the San Francisco meeting—patterned after the recent Des Moines farm-labor conferences—as setting "a new pattern of government and politics."

Plainly the goal was capturing 24 seats in the House of Representatives and two in the U. S. Senate from the 11 Far Western States now held by Republicans, along with holding all Democratic posts.

The most optimistic prediction on this score came from Tobin, who declared "we need eight more congressmen to do the job of repealing Taft-Hartley. I think we can get 50 across the nation—perhaps 20 in the West—for an overwhelming majority to repeal Taft-Hartley in the 82nd Congress."

A FULL representation of organized labor, headed by PAC Dir. Jack Kroll and Joseph B. Keenan, AFL Labor League for Political Education, participated in the conference, along with state and local officials of AFL, CIO, Railroad Brotherhood and other independent unions.

Kroll told the rally "it is to the best interests of all the nation that the great rich, natural resources of the West be developed and exploited for the benefit of the many, and not a privileged few.

"And while our reactionaries may term this a development of the 'Welfare State' or 'Statism,' we are reminded of the pickpockets who travel in pairs, and while one diverts the attention of the intended victim, the other guy picks his pocket.

"But they will not succeed. The voters of America in the past have proven that they are not fooled by slogans or by editorials in the newspapers, or by radio commentators, or poll takers. That was definitely proven in November of 1948, and it is my feeling that, come November, 1950, they won't be fooled again."

PAC Wins Victory in Buffalo

THE ERIE County (N. Y.) Political Action Committee, taking part in a primary campaign in Buffalo for the first time, proved a powerful force in the victory of an independent candidate for the Democratic Party nomination for mayor. Judge John D. Hillery defeated his machine-indorsed rival, Steven Pankow, present county clerk, 40,340 to 19,203.

Also nominated was James McCabe, president of Local 2497, CIO Steelworkers, who polled 20,794 votes for high man in a 10-man race for councilman-at-large in the Democratic primaries. McCabe was machine indorsed as well as having PAC support.

Harold Troidl, CIO Auto Workers' staff member, and John P. A'Hearn, CIO Rubber Workers, also ran as independent candidates for councilman-at-large, but were defeated, A'Hearn by a narrow margin.

James Miller, Buffalo CIO Council secretary and secretary of the Erie County PAC, directed the efforts of the CIO unions in the primaries and is expected to take a leading part in the coming election campaign to elect Miller, who at present is chief city judge.

A highlight of the campaign was the picketing of a suburban home Pankow is building by AFL workers who charged that non-union labor was used on the project. The AFL, which took no part in the campaign, also charged Pankow used non-union labor in building operations at an automobile agency he operates and at his summer cottage.

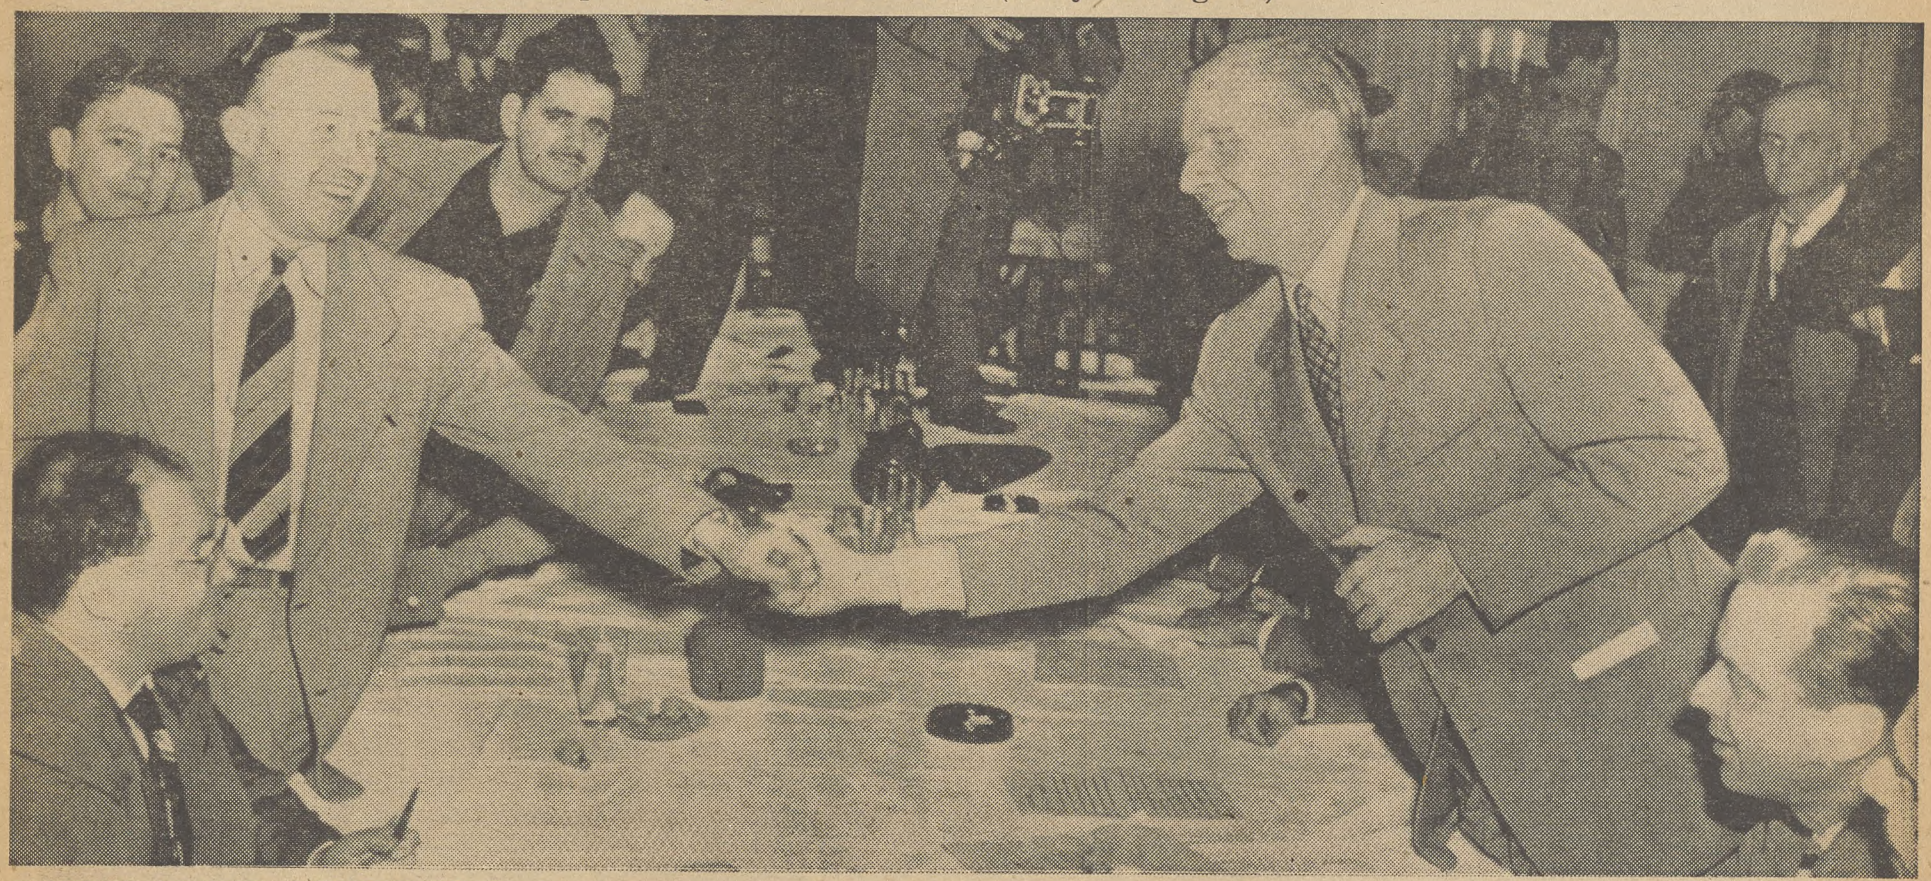
Steel Strikes, Ford Settles

STEEL DEADLOCK: CIO Steelworkers went on strike after U. S. Steel refused to accept the recommendations of the President's fact-finding board. The company insisted in ignoring the board's proposal that it bear the entire cost of the health insurance and pension plans. Seated at the table, front to back, on the left: James G. Thimmes, USA vice-president; David J. McDonald, secretary-treasurer of the union; Philip Murray, CIO and USA president; Arthur Goldberg, CIO and Steelworkers general counsel; Murray Lattimer, the union's insurance consultant; on the right side, representing U. S. Steel, are: Web Lorenz, assistant to vice-president; R. Heath Larry, attorney; John Stephens, vice-president; R. M. Blough, general solicitor; Robert Tyson, assistant controller; A. R. Mathieson, pension administrator. (Story on Page 3.)



HAPPY ABOUT AGREEMENT: At the conclusion of a bargaining session lasting 40 hours, which ended in a signed contract, Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers and John S. Bugas, Ford vice-president, shake hands. In the left foreground is Ken Bannon, UAW Ford director, and right is Mel Lindquist, Ford manager of industrial relations. The agreement calls for payment by the company of 8¾ cents for pensions and 1¼ cents for health insurance—the latter in last year's contract—plus a $280 per worker "package" health and medical plan. See story on Page 3.

THE RIGHT wing would have won all three top officers in the Electrical Workers' convention if a large number of delegates had followed the instructions of their members, the right-wing says.

Albert J. Fitzgerald, on the convention vote, was re-elected president of UE by a margin of 2335 to 1500 over Fred Kelley. Both came from Local 201, Lynn, Mass. If delegates from nine locals had followed instructions, the result would have been Kelley 1957 and Fitzgerald 1878.

On the face of convention votes, Secy.-Treas. Julius Emspak was returned to office by a margin of 2301 to 1529 over Michael Fitzpatrick, Local 601, Pittsburgh. If the delegates had followed intions, Fitzpatrick would have won 1986 to 1889.

James Matles, organization director, won re-election at the convention by 2340 to 1519 over John Dillon, Local 425, Jamaica, N. Y. In the instructions had been followed, Dillon would have won, 1976 to 1928.

"The vote on election of the three top officers was as follows:

Fitzgerald	2335
Kelley	1500
Emspak	2301
Fitzpatrick	1529
Matles	2340
Dillon	1519

"It must be remembered that this tabulation shows the so-called left wing and right wing votes that were seated by the Credentials Committee, however, the above figures lose significance when it is pointed out that the delegates from nine locals wholly or in part disregarded either the specific instructions or the expressed desires of the members in their local unions. Details are revealed in the following tabulations:

"Following were instructed to vote right wing but disregarded instructions and voted left wing:

Local	Delegates	Votes
617	All	68
201	4	64
813	All	59
767	1	10
1117	All	5

"Following local was uninstructed. 8,000 members signed petition asking for special meeting to give instructions but were refused. Over the protest of the 8,000, the regular meeting set for September 20 was postponed to September 29. This local delegation introduced resolutions urging withholding of CIO per capita tax:

301	All	160

"Following local was instructed to vote right wing but cast its vote only for Fitzgerald and abstained from voting on other officers and issues:

1145	All	45

"Following local sent instructed right wing delegation which was denied seating by Credentials Committee and a left wing delegation seated in its place:

768	All	38

"Had the expressed will of the local memberships been followed, the result would have been:

Kelly	1957
Fitzgerald	1878
Fitzpatrick	1986
Emspak	1889
Dillon	1976
Matles	1928

"This tabulation does not take into consideration other factors reflective of the desires and opinion of rank and file UE members.

"1 In an undetermined number of instances international representatives and field organizers picked up and used credentials from locals in small plants which sent no delegates or from locals or plants which had closed or were out of business. The General Electric local in Meriden, Connecticut, is one case in point.

"2 In many local unions elections of delegates were not held. Yet because of the manner in which the local constitution was ignored or applied, these locals had administration supporters represent them and cast left wing votes, such as:

Locals: 203, 271, 268, 209, 210, 262, 237, 254.

"Three of these locals represent 83 votes which were cast for the left wing.

"3 23 locals are under suspension and therefore their members were not represented."

Real Action

The loggers and mill workers of Dierks, Ark., really take their political action seriously.

H. C. Scoggins, chairman of CIO Woodworkers Local 369, has been elected mayor of the town. The local's members, through active interest in politics, have brought about a number of improvements in the school system and other facilities of Dierks.

You Need PAC—and PAC Needs Your $1

LOCAL 201, of the CIO Electrical Workers, by membership meeting vote, has suspended UE Pres. Albert J. Fitzgerald on charges of failing to follow the local's instructions at the UE convention.

Suspended along with him were three other delegates, Intl. Rep. Joseph Turkowski and local executive board members Jerome Flynn and Leo Corcoran. Charges are being prepared against them by members of the Lynn, Mass., local, who will demand expulsion. Fitzgerald announced he would fight the move.

At the UE convention, Fitzgerald took the microphone during the roll call on president and said: "Delegate Albert J. Fitzgerald votes for the man he considers best for the job of president, Albert J. Fitzgerald." The other three delegates also ignored the instructions of the local, adopted in a referendum by a vote of 7500 to 3500. Fitzgerald's opponent was Fred Kelley, also of 201. Six other 201 delegates, including Kelley, followed instructions.

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, former UE President, praised locals for action against delegates who defied instructions.

The right wing conference of UE has announced that enough delegates ignored local instructions to have defeated Fitzgerald and his running mates, Secy.-Treas. Julius Emspak and Organization Dir. James Matles.

THE LYNN membership gave enthusiastic approval to a right-wing launched move at the Cleveland convention to keep the UE in CIO, and cheered Business Agent Kelley, who flew from the New York General Electric-Westinghouse conference to report that "the Commie-dominated left wingers will never drive us out of the CIO."

Local 201 membership went further in its approval of Kelley by instructing almost unanimously delegates to the District 2 Council to vote for the business agent as council president.

Thus, the October meeting of the New England Regional governing body will see another bitter left-versus-right wing fight for control of the council, since the present president, Paul E. Seymour, is a Fitzgerald supporter.

Left-wingers were able to delay action only for a time at the meeting, and the membership gave strong voice approval to a Right-wing committee formed at the Cleveland caucus, authorizing nine men to assist Kelley in his conference with CIO Pres. Philip Murray to keep UE in the CIO, despite alleged left-wing attempts at cleavage.

The membership then supported their action by voting Kelley full right to travel to fulfill the wishes of the membership with regard to right wing activities and they further voted to have Local 201 approve all his expenses. Then they requested that he go to the CIO Cleveland convention Oct. 21 to carry out their wishes.

ACTION ON the motion voting suspension of Fitzgerald, Turkowski, Corcoran and Flynn was swift. Kelley, was instructed to prepare charges against the four members in writing. This he was to have ready before week's end so that immediate action could be instituted.

Prominent among the left-wingers who expressed opinions at the meeting was Robert Goodwin, ex-recording secretary of the local, an avowed Communist who was defeated at the last election by right-winger Thomas E. Gilroy. Others included Nate Mills Felix Ditto, Edward Freeman and Jake Zeramby.

At one point, Zeramby an international organizer and member of 201, challenged the right of a pensioner to vote. He was Gail Smith, first Local 201 president, who served for three years.

Smith, a member of the Lynn Housing Authority, told the meeting that he was given an honorary life membership when he retired with full right to vote. "That privilege has never been taken from me" he declared.

"You have seen tonight the way the Communists operate," said Smith. "I ask you to be warned. They will try to outlast you and will raise every barrier they can to prevent an expression of free thought here. I ask you to stay all night if necessary to defeat them at their own game."

Haywood Misquoted

CAREER, the official publication of the Office & Professional Workers, has joined the organs of other left wing unions to blast CIO policy.

The latest issue included an attack on CIO Vice Pres. and Orgazination Dir. Allan S. Haywood. The article was based on complete misquotation of Haywood's remarks at the meeting of the New York State CIO Executive Board. Here are three examples:

1 Career says that Haywood asserted "any union which by the time of the National Convention does not go all out will be expelled."

Haywood says he did not say that. He declares he was referring to the May action of the CIO Board, which called on all board members to adhere to CIO policy, once it had been adopted, or that the convention would take action to make those unions appoint representatives who would follow policy.

2 Career said "Haywood went so far as to issue threats of physical violence against progressive delegations. He stated that the national CIO would have 'brass knuckles' ready to do a job on any delegate who stepped out of line."

Haywood denies making such a threat.

3 Career went on to declare "he said that union leaders like Harry Bridges deserved no consideration because his union represents only 65,000 to 100,000 members."

That's not whaat he said, Haywood observes. Obviously many small unions deserve consideration, he asserts. What he was criticizing was Bridges' failure to organize more workers. "The Career piece is a typical party line blast at CIO," he said.

HONORED ON RETIREMENT: More than 350 members of the CIO Textile Workers and their friends in Philadelphia were guests at a dinner marking the retirement of Joseph Steiner as a TWUA representative after 47 years in the labor movement. The Philadelphia Joint Board, TWUA, and the guests presented Steiner with a television set and his wife with flowers. Pictured here are Pres. Harry Boyer of the Pennsylvania CIO Council, Secy.-Treas. Harry Block of the State CIO; Steiner; Manager Joseph Hueter of the Philadelphia Joint Board; Bus. Agent William Miller of TWUA Local 33; TWUA Natl. Secy.-Treas. William Pollock; Pennsylvania TWUA Dir Sol Stetin and TWUA Rep. James Coyle.

Firms Defy Board, Steelworkers Strike; Ford Company Settles With Auto Workers

THE NATIONWIDE steel shutdown—warded off for 77 days by three separate union postponements—finally became a reality last week as industry chieftains refused to the bitter end to accept recommendations of the Presidential fact-finding board.

Neither the last-minute agreement at Ford, which some expected to set a pattern for steel, nor persistent efforts of government mediators nor the widespread public praise of the fairness of the fact-finders' recommendations budged adamant industry negotiators from their determination to make the workers pay part of the cost of a pension and insurance program.

In the name of the Steelworkers, CIO and Steelworkers' Pres. Philip Murray accused the industry of saying "no" to the American people, "no" to the President of the U. S., "no" to the workers, "no" to everybody concerned in the situation. He placed the strike blame directly where it belonged, in the hands of industry.

One steel company to agree to the non-contributory "six-and-four" plans was Portsmouth Steel, an Ohio company employing 4000. But acceptance by the industry's traditional "non-conformist company" was insufficient to set a pattern or substantially break the solid ranks of some others. A small number agreed.

As always in steel negotiations, the smaller companies abided by the pace set by U. S. Steel, and "Big Steel" wasn't budging. It made no claims it was unable to afford the 10c package suggested by the three-man panel. In fact, U. S. Steel offered to pay the recommended 6c for pensions and 4c for insurance—provided workers also contributed.

But this would have constituted a pay cut for the 500,000 workers involved, Murray insisted, and he would have none of it. The union had reluctantly agreed to abide by the Presidential board's recommendation that it forego a wage increase. The union certainly wasn't going to accept a wage cut, Murray said.

TWO DAYS before the strike deadline, negotiations at three companies had broken off completely and both sides began digging in for the walkout. With the announcement by Crucible Steel that it wouldn't pay 10c an hour for pensions and insurance, even if workers were to contribute, employes walked out 36 hours before the deadline.

Talks at Bethlehem and Republic, second and third largest companies, collapsed completely after union negotiators turned down their plan to pay four cents into an insurance fund with workers contributing two cents.

Days before the 12:01 a.m. deadline on Oct. 1, the industry made clear its intention not to veer from its stand to avert a strike. Some companies began cooling off blast furnaces as early as Wednesday. By Friday, day before the zero hour, Republic, Bethlehem, Jones & Laughlin, Inland, Midland, Carnegie-Illinois, Youngstown Sheet & Tube, Natl. Tube, Geneva and others were already shutting down.

Crux of the stalemate between the union and companies ever since issuance of the fact-finding report was the principle of non-contributory pension and insurance plans.

Before the Presidential panel, industry witnesses had argued that such plans, if shouldered entirely by the company, would cause loss of self-reliance and dignity to the workers.

This was disputed by the fact-finders, who noted that most of the country's 3 million workers covered by pension and insurance plans do not contribute and have suffered no loss of dignity or self-reliance.

THE BOARD gave five reasons for backing the union's insistence that employers bear all the cost of such plans:

1. The general trend is in that direction. (The steel industry, nonetheless, termed the non-contributory principle "revolutionary" and "dangerous.")
2. Non-contributory plans cover all the workers. They do not exclude those workers who cannot afford to forego some of their current income.
3. Employer-paid plans cause no reduction in take-home pay.
4. Employer-paid plans promote stability because costs can be integrated into the labor cost structure and computed over a long-term period.
5. Taxwise more insurance can be bought for a given number of dollars than if the employe contributed from his own earnings after paying a tax on them himself.

UE And GE

The CIO Electrical Workers will resume negotiations with Westinghouse on Oct. 4 and with General Electric no later than Oct. 12.

Union officials said that if talks lagged, union negotiating committee are authorized to prepare to take a strike vote.

UE is seeking a $500 annual wage boost, pensions, social insurance, and a reduction in hours without a reduction in weekly pay.

McCarran On Own In Spain—Truman

President Truman has announced that the visit of Sen. Pat McCarran (D., Nev.) to Gen. Francisco Franco in Spain is entirely unofficial, and that McCarran has no authority to make any commitments for the government. McCarran had announced before sailing that he would discuss recognition and a U. S. loan in his talks with Franco.

McCarran also intends to make his investigation of Displaced Persons camps. As head of the Judiciary Committee McCarran has blocked action on a bill to ease present immigration restrictions, and a move to take the bill out of the hands of the committee is under way.

Wins Raises

Wage boosts amounting to 8-cents-an-hour for 1,800 plant employes and one-half of one percent in commission increases for 1,200 salesmen were won by the members of Local 83, CIO Dairy Workers, Detroit. Settlement of the wage dispute came after the union had requested and participated in a state-conducted strike ballot.

"Of all our natural and national resources, our human resources, are the most precious and useful, and should be most carefully hoarded and protected. These human machines need the same kind of treatment for depreciation and disability that the other machines are getting."—Report of the Presidential Steel Fact-finding Board.

FROM NOW on, the 115,000 workers in the Ford Motor Co.'s 48 plants will receive something like the consideration the company has given its machines all these years. A company-financed pension will take care of them in their old age.

Two hours after the CIO Auto Workers' midnight deadline last Friday, union and company negotiators finally left the hotel conference room, this time with a settlement in hand. While Ford locals throughout the country stood by for strike instructions, the talks wore on for 35 hours.

The agreement averting a walkout provided a non-contributory, funded pension plan. The entire fund will amount to $200 million and will be financed by company payments of 8¾c an hour per worker.

ACTUALLY, IT was the controversy over the intricate problem of funding that consumed most of the final two weeks' negotiations and aroused most of the tempers. Insisting that the plan be set up on a sound, "Rock-of-Gibralter" basis, the UAW held out for a funded plan.

That is, the plan would go into effect with the entire $200 million already set aside in a fund, to be retired over a long-term period by the 8¾c payments. The union negotiators were undoubtedly intent on averting the fate of the United Mine Workers' welfare and pension fund, which recently capsized when employers stopped making royalty payments into the kitty.

WITH THE 1¼c already being contributed by Ford toward a hospital and health insurance program, the settlement is in keeping with the 10c package recommended by the steel fact-finding board.

The board recommended that companies subtract existing payments on pensions or insurance from the suggested 10c. The Ford plan, therefore, is the maximum that would have been required of the company under the recommendations.

Together with social security pension payments, the Ford plan will provide a $100 monthly pension for workers retiring at the age of 65—or later—with 30 years seniority.

Details of the agreement:

- A fully eligible retiring worker gets $100 a month, consisting of his social security benefits plus whatever is necessary from Ford to total $100. Thus, if federal payments are increased, the amount required of the company fund would automatically be less.
- All hourly-rated workers (that is, all members of the UAW bargaining unit) are eligible for payments at age 65 with 30 years' seniority. Retirement at 68 is compulsory unless a worker who has not yet accrued 30 years seniority wishes to stay on until he becomes eligible for maximum payments.
- Workers may retire between 60 and 65, or with fewer than 30 years seniority, but would receive proportionately less.
- The $200 million fund is to be set aside by March 1, 1950.
- Benefits will begin April 1, 1950.
- All eligible workers leaving the company after July 16, 1949, will draw benefits beginning April 1, 1950.
- Administering the program will be a joint Ford-UAW board of trustees who will pass on eligibility of workers. The company alone will be responsible for investing the funds.
- The pension plan will not be subject to renegotiation before March 1, 1955.

As part of the medical-hospitalization program negotiated with Ford last year, the company agreed to add an in-hospital medical program which would provide each hospitalized worker with $4 a day for medical expenses up to 70 days.

Although the plan is financed by 1½c an hour contributions from both the company and the employes, the additional benefits are to be financed by the company alone. Under the program, hospital, surgical and maternity expenses of workers and their families are completely paid for. A worker receives $36 in cash as a disability payment while hospitalized, plus the added payment now of $4 a day for medical expenses.

Demonstrating the need for adequate pensions, UAW officials pointed out that three-fourths of the aged in Detroit now receiving federal pensions are also receiving public assistance. Federal old age benefits in Detroit average $26 a month, they say.

Strike Won At Goodrich

The one-month strike against B. F. Goodrich Co. by 17,000 CIO Rubber Workers ended last week as workers won substantial improvements in the company's insurance and pension programs and other major contract benefits.

Exact terms of the agreement were not known as the CIO News went to press, but these provisions were said to have been included:

- Improvements—at company expense—of the sick and accident program and larger pension payments under the retirement program. These will cost the company 10c an hour per worker.
- Improved holiday pay provisions.
- Improved vacation clause.
- More liberal employe service credit rules.
- Improved special wage guarantees.
- Wage reopening in 1950.

Terms of the settlement were placed into an interim agreement which will be in effect until locals conclude their separate negotiations on special plant-by-plant problems.

THE CONTRACT itself will run 2½ years with a wage reopening in April 1951.

In addition to the pension plan, the union won major concessions on such issues as temporary layoffs and seniority. One UAW spokesman said, "Ford workers consider these issues about as important as pensions and insurance."

As he emerged from the conference room, weary but pleased, UAW Pres. Walter Reuther told reporters he considered the settlement "a historical step forward in labor's drive to destroy the double economic and moral standards in American industry" (This referring to the hefty pensions companies usually give executives but deny workers).

"It is an important milestone in welfare and security in the industry," he said, and will "not only serve for stability of the auto workers but should point the way in the steel industry."

Reuther also said he expected the settlement to be used as a basis for agreement with Chrysler, whose employes last week voted 9-to-1 to walk out if no settlement is reached.

While the spotlight in the auto industry shifts to the Chrysler negotiations, Ford locals and the 120-man Ford Council, meeting this week in Detroit, will be voting on acceptance of the new contract. The locals will have the next three weeks in which to ballot.

BELL PICKETS FLEE GAS: In a further attempt to demoralize the CIO Auto Workers on strike at the Bell Aircraft plant at Buffalo, N. Y., deputy sheriffs use tear gas to disperse pickets. The strike has been marked by repeated police interference with picket lines and the arrest of strike leaders.

Workers Bore The Brunt

Remember how it was back in the early part of this year?

There were price reductions here and there and the news paper "experts" were having a field day.

They were saying, gleefully, that inflation had run its course, that the "normal readjustment" was under way and that, of course, the new trend knocked the props from under union arguments for higher wages.

Ah, yes, there were columns and columns of the stuff—and most of it sounded good.

You don't read anything about the "downward price trend" these days—and for a very good reason. There isn't any such thing.

Here are the facts:

The reduction in the cost of living since the all-time peak of last fall has amounted to 3% or slightly less. This decrease followed an increase of 27% since the end of the war.

There was a "downward trend" but it was in employment, not in prices. And there was a similar trend in production.

Coupled with these were the highest corporate dividend payments in all history!

And here's what it all adds up to:

Workers who bore the brunt of inflationary prices also bore the brunt of the "normal readjustment." Instead of cutting prices, the corporations cut production and employment.

Despite some recent improvements in the picture, there are about twice as many out of jobs today as there were a year ago.

So, don't let anybody kid you about how much better off wage earners are than they were last year.

'No, No' Year For Industry

Perhaps it was the "normal readjustment" which caused leading industries this year to buck nearly every request made by unions in an effort to improve the lot of American workers.

None of the giants in the steel, auto or electrical fields showed any willingness to budge an inch from their adamant "no" position until faced with strike threads.

This wasn't surprising in the light of the big squeeze which industry put on the workers through price increases and later through lay-offs when the demand for high-priced merchandise decreased.

There is much evidence that industrial and financial leaders decided many months ago that this was the year to "crack down" on the unions if they could do so without arousing public ire.

And there's much evidence to support the suspicion that the men who dominate industry have been doing their best to maneuver President Truman into a position which would require him to invoke the Taft-Hartley injunction procedure.

It looks as if a large portion of industry is swinging back toward the old "workers be damed" attitude. ★ ★ ★

Gallup Poll On T-H Injunctions

Dr. George Gallup, whose predictions regarding outcome of the last Presidential election turned out very, very bad, has conducted a poll which purports to show union members strongly in favor of the T-H injunction procedure.

We're, frankly, not very curious about why Gallup's pollsters asked a loaded question to get the results reported, but——

We're very curious about those who answered the question. Just for the heck of it, we'd like for all readers who participated in the poll to drop us a postcard.

Commies Will Shout and Scream, But--

Their Noise Will Be Poor Substitute For Strength They Don't Have

By ALLAN L. SWIM

ABOUT A MONTH from now a group of pro-Communists will take seats at the CIO convention in Cleveland in full possession of the knowledge that they're going to take the worst beating of their ideological lives.

They, of course, will scream like stuck pigs. They'll charge that their democratic rights have been abrogated. They'll declare that the CIO has ignored trade union autonomy.

And—if they dare to do in open convention what they've been doing elsewhere—they'll charge that Philip Murray is a ruthless dictator who has played footsie with the KKK and has sold the CIO down the river.

But all the noise they can make and all the charges they can hurl won't alter the outcome of the voting—and that's what counts.

JUDGED SOLELY by the furor they create, the Commies would appear to be a potent force inside the CIO.

Actually, the unions they and the fellow travelers control or over which they exercise any measure of control contain less than one-tenth of the CIO's membership.

And that doesn't mean that one-tenth of all CIO members are pro-Communist. It merely means that party liners have been able to gain strategic positions in 11 unions, most of which are small.

Commie control and influence is one thing. Commie strength is something else entirely.

And the party leaders will soon learn this if and when they try to form a Communist trade union federation.

DESPITE THE fact that the open anti- and pro-Commie battle inside the CIO has been going on for nearly two years there apparently are many persons who do not know or understand the principle issue involved.

The Commies (and pardon the play on words) have dragged many Red herring across many paths in an effort to confuse the issue. They would have you believe autonomy and democracy are the main points involved.

But the big question—to be answered at the convention—is:

Will the Commies—or any other group—be permitted to flout convention mandates, ignore CIO policy, thumb their noses at Executive Board decisions and still remain a part of the CIO?

The Commies argue that they should be permitted to do so. Murray and his followers argue that no group should be allowed to flout democratically-determined policy decisions.

THE LEFTIES are trying to peddle the phony idea that individual political freedom is one of the big issues involved.

"Phil Murray can't dictate to us about how we should believe and how we should vote," they declare.

Murray's position on this point has long been clear. He has said time and again that an individual's beliefs and the manner in which the individual votes are none of the CIO's business.

But, he argues, those who believe in Communism or any other ism must not be permitted to use the CIO to further their own political purposes—unless, of course, the CIO reaches a democratic decision to the contrary.

THE TACTICS used by the Commies are in themselves enough to justify harsh treatment from the CIO convention.

Their attacks on the CIO leadership haven't been in the nature of constructive criticism. They haven't even been within the loose bounds which ordinarily surround rough-and-tumble political battles.

They've been operating out of the gutter and the swill barrel. They've raised character assassination to a new high—or, if you prefer, have plunged it to a new low.

The lefties have asked for it.

And they're going to get it!

CIO's Lone Fight Averts Main Line Bus Boost

THE GOOD people of Philadelphia's Main Line, in Montgomery County, Pa., have the CIO alone to thank for the fact that their bus fares have not been raised to 10 cents.

The Montgomery-Chester Counties Industrial Union Council last winter heard that the bus company had asked the State Public Utility Commission to allow it to raise its fare from two rides for 15 cents—8c straight fare—to a straight fare of 10 cents, or three for a quarter. The IUC tried to get other organizations in the area to join in a common front to fight the increase. All refused even to get in the fight on their own.

So, the IUC decided to make a lone fight. It retained M. H. Goldstein, Philadelphia labor attorney, and told him to do everything possible to avert the fare boost.

Needless to say, the bus company retained an expensive utility lawyer. It had the gall to include in its brief the fact that the lawyer would cost it at least $50,000 and that expenditure was an added reason for the increase.

Not a single borough or township aided the fight for their residents.

First, last February, Goldstein won the initial round when the PUC voted, 4-1, to grant only a straight 8-cent fare.

The bus company appealed to the State Superior Court from the PUC decision. Goldstein followed with a brief and a personal appearance before the court. When he had finished his oral presentation, the court reaffirmed the PUC decision and thus made permanent the victory the CIO alone had won for the people.

Particularly active in the fight were Pres. John Lynch of the council, and the Steelworkers' district office.

". . . and I bequeath $1000 a month pensions to each employe who has been with me for 20 years or more. Of course, none has but it will look good on paper."

Right To Seek Union Members Is Upheld

The Michigan Supreme Court at Lansing has ruled that an employe has a legal right to solicit union membership on company property during a lunch period.

The unanimous ruling was handed down in a suit against the Michigan Unemployment Compensation Commission by Mrs. Marion Urick, of Pontiac.

Mrs. Urick was fired by the Stainless Ware Co. of America, an unorganized plant, because she had passed out CIO Auto Workers application cards during her unpaid lunch period.

When she applied for unemployment compensation, the company contested her claim, arguing that her card distribution constituted misconduct. When the MUCC Appeal Board upheld the company and denied payments to Mrs. Urick, the UAW appealed to the courts.

Phone Workers Win Increase, Benefits

An increase of five cents an hour and substantial fringe benefits are contained in a new one-year contract covering 272 members of CIO Communications Workers of America, employed by the Ashland (Ky.) Home Telephone Co., an independent firm. A wage re-opener after Dec. 15 is included.

He Was A Rabble-Rouser And Radical

HE OBVIOUSLY was a guy with a gift of gab and, judged by some modern standards, he was a rabble-rousing radical.

The things he did and said made history—but few of the history books tell his whole story.

They don't mention, for example, the fact that he was often in there pitching for labor and fighting the battle of the common man.

Frequently the reactionaries and conservatives point with pride to his political leadership, but do so without knowing he opposed some of the things which they strongly advocate.

IT WAS DURING a tense and important period of history that the fellow about whom we're writing declared:

"Inasmuch as most things have been produced by labor, it follows that all such things belong of right to those whose labor has produced them.

"But it has happened in all ages of the world that some have labored and others have, without labor, enjoyed a large portion of the fruits.

"This is wrong and should not continue."

Such a statement might easily be construed today as a strong slap at the capitalistic system or at least at the money-lenders and coupon-clippers who are a part of it.

MANY YEARS before the Wage-Hour Law was enacted and the Wagner Act came into being this fellow wrote:

"To secure to each laborer the whole product of his labor, as nearly as possible, is a worthy object of any government.

"It seems strange that any man should dare to ask a just God's assistance in wringing bread from the sweat of other men's faces."

On another occasion he said:

"Labor is prior to and independent of capital. Capital is only the fruit of labor and could never have existed if labor had not first existed.

"Labor is the superior of capital and deserves much the higher consideration."

THIS MAN, who didn't win fame as an orator until after he died, often spoke bluntly—such as when he said:

"All that serves labor serves the nation. All that harms labor is treason to America. No line can be drawn between the two.

"If any man tells you he loves America yet hates labor, he is a liar. If any man tells you he trusts America yet fears labor, he is a fool.

"There is no America without labor and to fleece one is to rob the other."

And he also declared:

"Thank God we have a system of labor where there can be a strike."

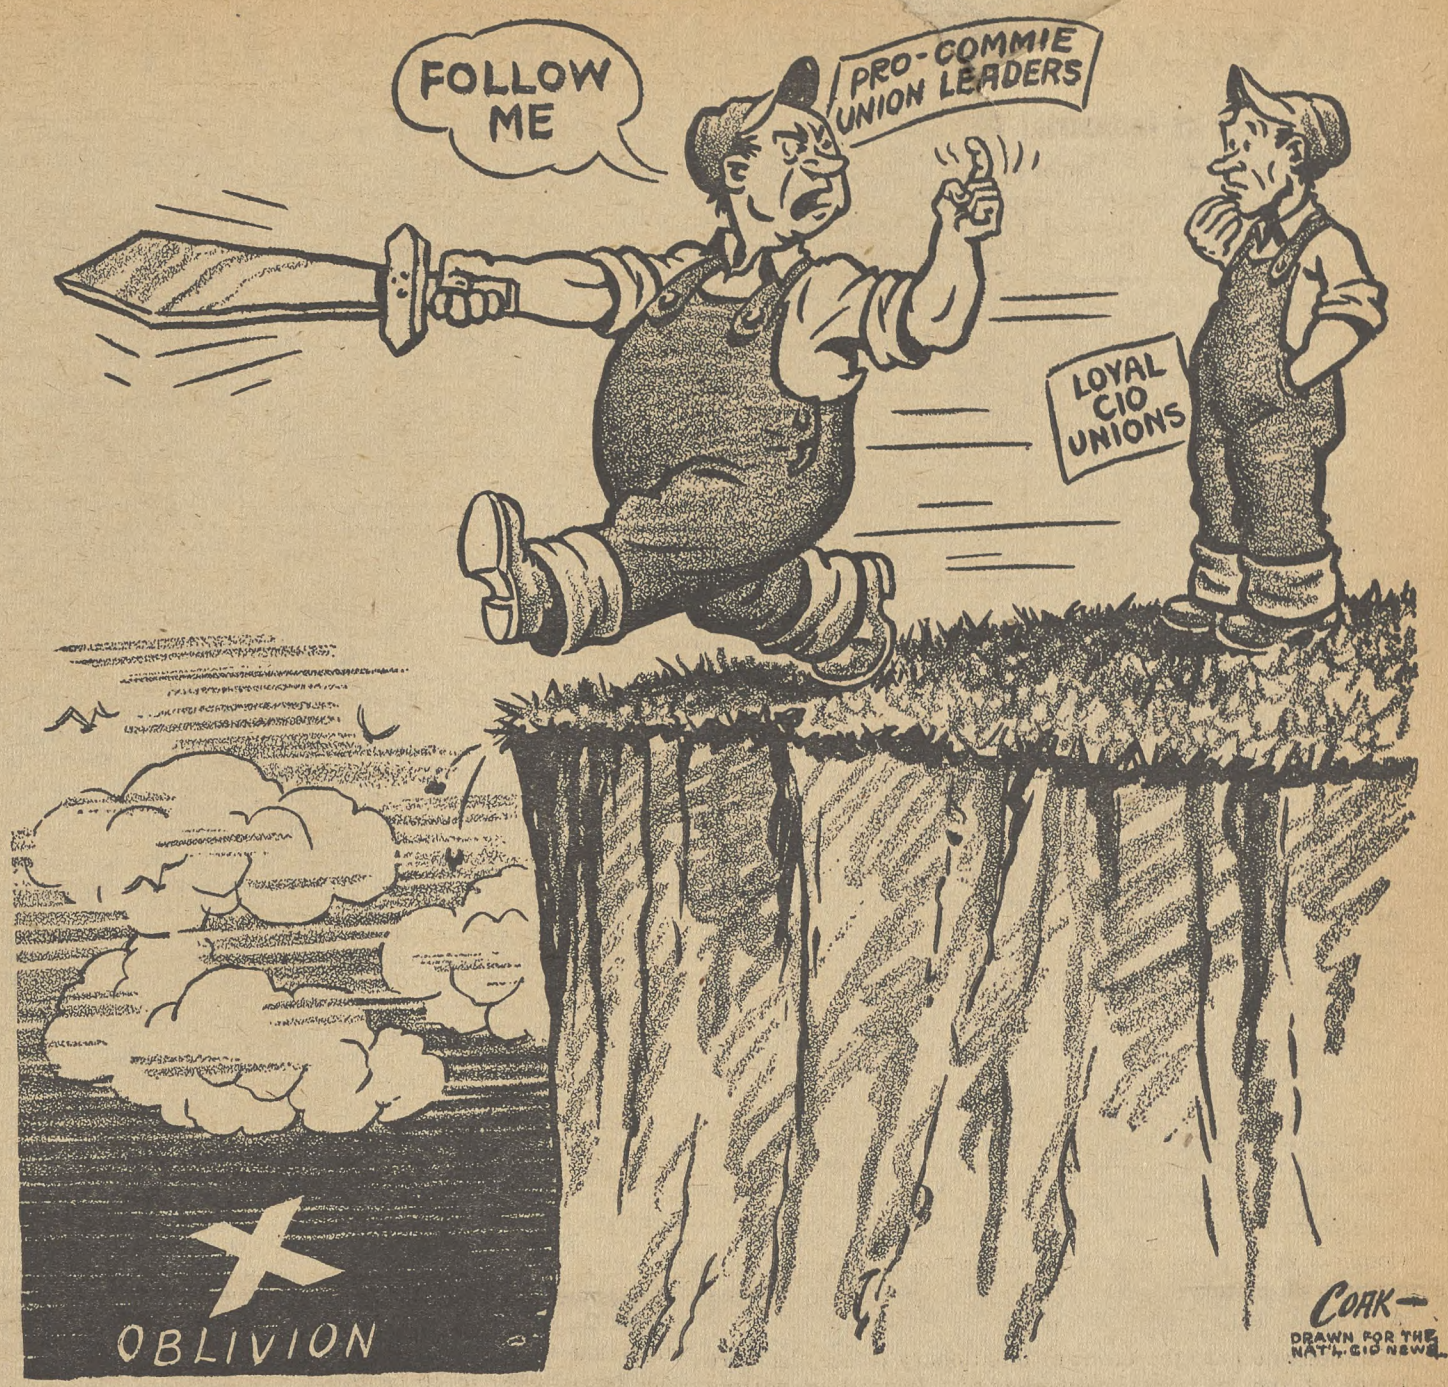
THIS FELLOW, a great champion of civil rights, stirred up a real hornets' nest at the peak of his career.

His campaign to provide the people with equal rights and equal opportunities is recorded in the pages of all American histories.

Nearly every child who goes to school in this country is required to memorize his most famous speech—the Gettysburg Address—but few of them are taught that Abraham Lincoln once said:

"When it comes to a question between a man and a dollar, I am on the side of the man every time." —A. L. S.

'X' MARKS THE SPOT!



Rep. Rhodes:

'Labor's Foes Recognize Importance of Labor Press'

"THE POTENTIAL power of the labor press is tremendous," writes Rep. George M. Rhodes (D. Pa.) in North American Labor. "The maximum effectiveness can be realized when labor leaders and union members recognize its value and give the necessary financial support by getting all members on the subscription lists. This is especially important so far as labor weeklies are concerned."

Rhodes tells of the fight made by reactionary politicians, the commercial press and the radio to discredit the Democrats in the 1948 election. He credits the intelligence of the American people, organized labor, President Truman and many liberal groups for the success of the Democrats at the polls.

The Congressman concludes that "all these factors would not haye been enough to overcome the odds in reaction's favor without the labor press, aided by a handful of progressive farm and liberal papers."

RHODES DECLARES that the labor papers were "a powerful weapon in exposing the lies of reaction, the fakery of the pollsters, and the trickery of columnists and commentators. They created the spirit of determination, confidence and hope that gave reaction its unexpected and most deserving defeat.

"The labor press played a leading and effective role in the political miracle of 1948.

"We must recognize that the labor press is still in its infancy. It needs much in financial and moral support. It needs improvement as a more effective educational organization and political weapon.

"Many international publications have developed over the past few years into attractive easy-to-read, informative and effective papers. They inform union members and their families on social, economic and political issues. They make a big contribution toward arousing the political consciousness of the worker.

"The local weekly labor papers need to be developed, strengthened and improved. They are the means that can bring united political action by unionists of all trades and industry and the liberal forces in the communities.

"The local weekly labor publication is a potential influence that offers a tremendous opportunity in building a better informed, more intelligent labor movement and an aggressive political force.

"ALL THE might of the reactionary commercial press and radio cannot equal the power of the workers' political organizations on a local and precinct level. The local labor weekly must be the means of keeping the local group informed and working together. It must be the educational and inspiring force essential to success.

Rhodes pays tribute to the strides made by CIO-PAC, the AFL's League for Political Education and independent Machinists and the railroad unions in political action, but asserts that the information furnished by these agencies must be carried to the local level by the labor press.

For this reason, he says:

"A good news and picture service is indispensable. The daily labor press and the radio commentators campaign for reaction throughout the year. They glorify reactionaries and play down liberal members in Congress and the various legislative bodies in the states. Much that happens in Washington never gets in the daily commercial press.

"In seeking to weaken labor, economically and politically, it was natural that reaction would strike at the labor press. Of all the evil designs of Taft-Hartley, nothing is more dangerous that its attack on the labor press.

"THE REAL BLOW planned by Taft-Hartley on the labor press was never felt, fortunately. The Supreme Court differed from Senator Taft's version on the meaning of the law pertaining to labor publications. Taft, one of the authors of the law, insisted that it was illegal for the labor press to indorse candidates for political office and even to publish the voting records of members of Congress.

(Ed. Note—It was by the order of CIO Pres. Philip Murray that the July 14, 1947, issue of the CIO News published a front page article in behalf of the candidacy of Ed Garmatz, Baltimore, for Congress. It was this article which led to the Supreme Court ruling.)

"More important than even the Supreme Court's interpretation was the 1948 elections, which prevented the explosion of the T-H time bomb.

"The Taft-Hartley attempt to gag the labor press is evidence that labor's foes fully recognize its importance and influence."

Rep. George M. Rhodes, who wrote the accompanying article, is Democratic Congressman from Berks County, Pa., and was elected in 1948 with united labor support. He is still general manager of The (AFL's) New Era, Reading.

Life or Death Struggles:

Auburn, N. Y., Fights To Keep Intl. Harvester Plant

IT WAS almost prophetic that the early inhabitants should have chosen the name Auburn for their little village in upstate New York.

For Auburn was the name of British poet Oliver Goldsmith's "Deserted Village"—the once-lovely community, turned ghost town.

And today the Deserted Village's American namesake is fighting desperately to escape the same fate.

Last June Auburn—latest census gives it a population of 35,763—got the dread announcement: Intl Harvester was going to close down.

To a town in which one-fifth of the population is directly dependent on IH for its livelihood, the announcement on the plant bulletin board was a death warrant. It would mean disaster for all Auburn, not only the 1800 workers and their families

Dependent on Harvester pay envelopes also are the entire business community, the professions, the city and county themselves, which last year collected $34,300 in real estate taxes from the sprawling 25-acre property.

It didn't take the townspeople long to recover their equilibrium after the blow fell.

THE UNION at Harvester—CIO Farm Equipment Workers Local 180—formed an Emergency Committee of Harvester Workers. The Chamber of Commerce dug in and came up with another committee. The mayor appointed still another group to see what could be done.

Today, marching together behind the "Save Auburn" banner, you can find the union, the Chamber of Commerce, the prominent doctors, clergymen, the mayor—even arch-conservative Republican Rep. John Taber, who hails from Auburn.

It's an almost unprecedented coalition, and it demonstrates the panic permeating the town which has welded all factions into a single unit.

Rubber Union Sets Up FEPC Dept.

The CIO Rubber Workers have set up a Fair Employment Practices department to check on discrimination. The action of the convention meeting at Toronto, Canada, followed a report which said that "the danger exists that the present wave of unemployment will largely eliminate colored workers from the industry." The report said that in Akron, colored workers make up 6% of the working force, but constitute 16% of those laid off.

There are two factors in the Harvester story which embittered the workers more than anything else.

ONE IS the fact that as taxpayers, IH employes helped dig their own grave.

Had the company not been able to pick up at a low price four modern war plants, built by taxpayers' money, Harvester wouldn't be getting ready to shut down today.

According to the union, which obtained its information from War Production Board records, IH in 1946 acquired the four plants—and this doesn't include the equipment—at a cost of $27,451,685. They had been built by the government at a cost of $43,920,000. Including the equipment, the union estimates IH paid 12 cents on the dollar for the whole works.

In addition, the government had turned over $47,692,000 worth of structures and equipment for Harvested to operate for profit during the war.

Because they are more modern, these plants can be operated at a greater profit margin than the 46-year-old Auburn plant. Presumably, then, the IH plan is to transfer goods normally manufactured at the Auburn plant either directly to one of the former war plants to to another structure, whose production would be shifted to one of the war plants.

The big question Auburn workers want answered is: Has a company which owes its unprecedented prosperity to the taxpayers no obligation at all to those taxpayers, to the workers who made possible the profits, or to the community in which it flourished for 46 years?

THE SECOND thing which embittered IH workers is that they feel they were duped by the company.

For several years Auburn residents had heard rumors that Harvester was planning to shut down.

Each time the rumors cropped up, Harvester did something to allay the town's fears. In January 1948, IH Pres. John L. McCaffrey and Vice-Pres. Ralph Archer came to Auburn.

On the plant bulletin board, Archer was quoted as praising Auburn's employes for their production turnout. Of all the IH plants, he said, "only Auburn came close to 1947's production schedule." This, the bulletin board announcement said, Archer ascribed "to the cooperative way Auburn management and Auburn employes get along."

Then the bulletin quoted McCaffrey: " . . . in reference to those 'I-H is leaving Auburn' rumors, he stated that he could 'see no reason why I-H won't always be in Auburn.'"

With that IH workers breathed a sigh of relief, started spending more freely—the way one does when he's reasonably sure of his job. Some bought homes, others cars.

UNDOUBTEDLY IH employes recalled the company's strong statements about human relations and business being part of the community and workers and management pulling together for common objectives when they first glimpsed the stark company notice in June.

When a plant closes down, what becomes of the new homes with mortgages, the new cars, the new members of the family, the workers, the merchants—the whole town?

Auburn residents know it spells certain disaster.

So far the storm aroused by the IH announcement has forced one little concession out of IH. Three months after posting the notice of closure, Harvester announced it would sell the plant and equipment for $1 to some "properly constituted body" which "would use or dispose of the property for the benefit of the people of Auburn."

But the offer didn't meet with the enthusiastic reception Harvester apparently anticipated. The union turned it down as being no solution to the problem and determined to redouble its efforts to keep Harvester in Auburn.

The local newspaper, the Citizen-Advertiser, editorially voiced its own doubts about the scheme. In the first place, it pointed out, the city and the county would lose more than $34,000 in taxes annually if the city took over the buildings and failed to find an occupant.

And the prospect of finding an occupant might not be too good, since much of the plant is of obsolete construction. "There are other drawbacks of course," added the editorial, "all well-known to Harvester employes in particular and Auburnians in general."

Having failed to budge IH in its determination to leave Auburn, the townspeople are looking to Uncle Sam as their last resort.

This phase of the battle was summed up this way by Dr. Frank L. DeFurio, chairman of the Citizen's Committee to Save Auburn: "If Harvester hadn't received war plants from the government, they would stay here. The government should move in and say: 'Look here, we gave you those plants, but you have no right to use them to disrupt a whole community.'"

BOTH THE New York State AFL and CIO passed identical resolutions urging Congress to "determine the feasibility of rescinding all sales of war plants to IH . . . until such time as a satisfactory guarantee is obtained that no use will be made of such plants as will threaten the economic life of Auburn or any other established community."

Auburn folks don't feel they're asking any big sacrifice of IH. After all, they say, they're fighting for their very existence; to Harvester it's only a question of super profits or medium profits.

Harvester isn't being asked to operate in the red. The Auburn Works have always been profitable, Auburn people say. Auburn's main production item is a one-man haybaler, a consistently good seller. In fact, Auburn profitability was so good that the company drew up ambitious plans for its modernization and expansion—until it got its hands on the new, made-to-order government war plants.

Then, apparently, plans for Auburn went up in smoke.

WITH THE company still adamant after 3½ months of futile pleading by all segments of the town, people are looking to government intervention to avert the catastrophe. So far a sub-committee of the Congressional Joint Committee on the Economic Report has only sat on a resolution calling for a Congressional investigation.

Most of the IH employes are over 50, own homes in Auburn, have families. Where can they go, and how easily can they get jobs elsewhere at that age? They're wondering.

Then, too, they're wondering whether the federal government is going to permit itself to be a party to the destruction of a whole town.

Last year IH net profits were a record-smashing $55½ million. Will a whole town of 35,000 people have to be sacrificed so that Harvester can make more in 1951?

New Wrinkle in Conciliation

A new wrinkle in labor conciliation—by a committee of union representatives—succeeded in settling the strike of Lodge 760 of the Intl. Association of Machinists against the Minnesota and Ontario Paper Co. at International Falls, Minn.

After Carl Carlgren of the U. S. mediation and conciliation service failed to secure any agreement, union leaders formed their own mediation committee. It included representatives of Local 33, CIO Woodworkers, and the AFL locals of the Papermakers, Firemen and Oilers, Operating Engineers, Plant Guards, and Electricians.

After briefing themselves on the IAM demands—a half-a-cent an hour pay increase, automatic promotion from helper to class B journeyman and three more paid holidays, the mediation committee urged the company to back down from its previous refusal. The result—the company accepted a compromise which the strikers also backed, 83 to 23.

The strike, which promised to be a long and hard one, was over in less than six days, thanks to mediation "by unions, for unions and of unions."

'It's the Real Thing'

Asserting that "this time, it's the real thing," Business Week magazine last week warns that "labor's present political effort has come to be worth taking very seriously indeed." CIO Delegation Likens Israel Labor Party to PAC

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THE REPUBLIC of Israel "is a bastion of democracy in the Middle East," but it requires extensive financial help—in the form of gifts, loans and private investment—to establish the "wide-scale industrial expansion" which the country needs for survival and growth, a CIO delegation declared in a report issued last week.

Members of the delegation, appointed last spring by CIO Pres. Philip Murray, were Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers; Pres. Joseph Curran of the Natl. Maritime Union; and Maxwell Brandwen, counsel to the clothing workers union. Their "Report On Israel" was published by the CIO in the form of a 32-page illustrated pamphlet.

In an introduction to the Report, Murray noted that the "CIO has always looked with favor and sympathy on the efforts of men and women everywhere to win freedom and achieve economic progress." He cited the report as "an authoritative and interesting description of the great progress being made by the people of Israel and by their splendid trade union organization."

THE delegation reported that it was "greatly impressed with the vigor, intelligence and democratic spirit of both Histadrut (the General Federation of Labor in Israel) and the Israeli government."

"Histadrut's methods and pioneering spirit are being studied and examined throughout the entire region," the delegation declared. "As President Truman's 'bold new program' for helping the people of backward areas moves toward the action stage, the Histadrut method may well be recognized as the best method of helping colonial peoples to help themselves."

Noting the importance of economic progress in Israel to the wellbeing of the entire Middle East, the delegation said "it is important . . . that Israel be permitted to develop freely along the democratic road which it has charted for itself. The CIO, as well as the AFL and the railroad brotherhoods, have in the past supported all measures designed to help make Israel a powerful force for progress throughout the world, and more particularly in the Middle East. Such support should be continued in even greater measure."

The report contains a detailed examination of the structure and policies of the Histadrut labor organization, and of Mapai, the closely-related Israeli labor party which polled the largest number of votes in Israel's first election and which is the core of the present government.

The delegation said allegations that Israel is either Soviet-dominated or Communist-dominated constitute an "utter falsity."

"Domestically, Mapai's program —as we saw it from discussions with party and union leaders—is much the same sort of Fair Deal program, adjusted to the country's particular needs, that PAC (the Political Action Committee of the CIO) follows in this country, or that democratic labor parties seek to carry out in other sections of the world."

There is "no question," the delegation commented, "that labor in Israel looks primarily to the United States for guidance toward the democratic ideal." Israel's "neutrality" in many post-war disputes between the U. S. and the Soviet Union has been motivated by its own desire to build a new state and to take steps to insure continued immigration by Jews from the iron curtain nations.

"We recognized that this attitude . . . in no way conflicts with the strong democratic spirit of the government and its people," the delegation reported. "It is important that American unionists understand Israel's problem as a small new state; and that we interpret Israel's position in world affairs in the light of its people's humanitarian desire to give sanctuary to hundreds of thousands of eastern European Jews."

The report noted that labor's voice "is heard and respected everywhere in the country and in the government of Premier Ben Gurion," who is a former executive of Histadrut, the union organization. The delegation praised the unions for encouraging the unionization of Arabs in Israel, and said that "Arab workers have profited by Histadrut membership, which has brought them tremendous improvements in what was once their coolie standard of living."

The economic framework created by Israel's union is "impressive," the delegation reported. "Histadrut takes care of people from the cradle to the grave, from the reception camps for new immigrants to the financing and development of new industries."

"Histadrut's collective bargaining follows many of the same patterns that we find in the United States," the report said. The organization "clearly reserves the right to strike—but in recent years it has resorted increasingly to arbitration of disputes."

Histadrut's cooperative service activities developed, the delegation reported, because the British mandate after the first world war provided few governmental services.

"Having moved into these realms of government activity, it seems likely that Histadrut will continue to operate its numerous social welfare plans," the CIO officials said.

"Histradrut is a labor organization of only about 200,000 workers—but its functions are broader than those of any other labor organization in all the world. Today, a year after formation of the Israeli government, Histadrut is the foundation stone of the democratic state."

THE REPORT urged CIO support of "further substantial loans" by the U. S. government to Israel, and pointed out that "in its first year the Israeli government has demonstrated a sense of mature responsibility . . . Additional U. S. government loans will be an investment that is sound both in terms of economics and of international good will."

The delegation also called for encouragement of contributions to U. S. organizations raising funds to help the people of Israel, and support of "big scale private investment in Israeli economic projects."

The existing shortage of capital in Israel "imperils the humanitarian goals of the Jewish state," the CIO delegation declared. "Israel must develop its private industry far beyond present levels, so that it may become self-sufficient and able to contribute to the economic well-being of the entire Middle East. . . . These economic needs cannot be met by mere expressions of friendship or encouragement. Tremendous outlays of capital are immediately necessary. . .

"We hope and expect that Americans—those possessing great resources and those with only modest savings—will soon come to realize that their funds can perform a constructive—and profitable—service through investment in the economy of Israel."

A&P Ads Can't Hide Record Of High Prices

By NATHAN ROBERTSON

HOUSEWIVES would do well to think twice, or even three times, before they accept the claim of the A&P stores that the government's anti-trust suit against the big food chain would mean higher food prices.

The stores already have been convicted of illegal practices which force millions of consumers to pay higher prices than necessary.

There is no question but that the A&P stores often offer prices lower than you can find in other stores. But previous court decisions show they frequently do so at the expense of consumers in their own stores elsewhere and in rival stores.

In other words, there is no assurance you will always get the lowest prices in A&P stores, or that if they were put out of business (which the government is not trying to do) you would have to pay higher prices. But if the government is successful in its suit you should get lower prices in other stores.

The A&P is trying to bury these previous court decisions under millions of dollars worth of advertising. It took out full page advertisements in 2000 newspapers, picturing the government as trying to put it out of business and force higher food prices.

It claimed the suit was brought by a bunch of crackpot "anti-trust lawyers in Washington" who believe "any big business must be destroyed simply because it is big."

THESE advertisements were filled with direct misstatements and omissions of fact. They did not mention, for instance, nor did the news stories which somehow got into many of the newspapers at the same time, that the A&P had already been convicted on the same charges the government is now bringing against it.

The charges, therefore, are not the charges of a bunch of wild-eyed lawyers in Washington, but the findings of sober federal judges, including a unanimous three-judge Federal Court of Appeals.

Nor is the government trying to put the A&P out of business, as the advertisement said in big, black headlines. The government is trying to break the 6000-store chain up into seven smaller, but still big, chains. It also is asking the courts to separate the retail chains from the manufacturing and wholesale operations which have resulted in illegal operations.

The previous court decisions made clear that the government was not attacking A&P for its bigness, but because it was using its bigness for illegal operations that were costing consumers a great deal of money. It was doing this in two ways:

FIRST, THE A&P was convicted of using its power, as the biggest buyer of food in the country, to force a two-price system on producers and wholesalers which benefitted the A&P with low prices, but forced other stores, and therefore other consumers, to pay more. The A&P was entitled to savings resulting from quantity purchases, but not to additional price cuts it used its power to get.

Second, the A&P was convicted of selling below cost in some of its stores and driving competitors out of business, at the expense of its customers in other stores, who therefore had to pay higher prices to maintain the A&P profit level. The implications of this are that once the A&P has killed off competition you have no assurance of continued low prices.

This is the system monopolists have traditionally followed since the days of John D. Rockefeller and the Standard Oil Trust. The evidence showed, for instance, that the A&P was purposely losing money at one time in Baltimore, Washington and Richmond, but partially recouping in Scranton, where a price fixing system had been worked out with competitors.

As a special campaign was opened against a new competitor in Richmond, Division Headquarters said, "the hotter we can make our program, the quicker this outfit will realize that they have no place in the supermarket in Richmond."

THE COURT of Appeals called this "lethal competition." It warned that if carried far enough, such policies could drive every independent retailer and even smaller competing chains out of business. No competitor can match the A&P's present resources in manufacturing, wholesaling and retailing. Profits from manufacturing and wholesaling can be used to kill off competition in the retail field.

But where would consumers be, once the A&P had killed off all competitors? It is one thing to take business away from competitors through low prices resulting from efficiency, as the A&P claimed to have done in its advertisements.

But the court records are filled with evidence of A&P stores selling at a loss for years on end to "increase volume" which means taking the business away from competitors unfairly, at the expense of consumers elsewhere. If A&P's efficiency resulted in such low prices, why did it have to sell at a loss to gain new business?

Housewives and their husbands would do well to consider another angle in this A&P case. They are not only consumers, they often are fathers and mothers. Do they want their children to have a chance to work only as hired clerks or hired store managers, or do they want their children to have a chance to own their own businesses?

In the last case the A&P got a fine of only $175,000 for years of illegal operations. That is a drop in the bucket to such a large business, only a fraction of what it paid last week for a single advertising splurge.

It has persisted in its monopolistic practices in the face of previous court suits and prohibitory legislation. That is why the government is now trying to break it up into smaller units—not to destroy its efficiency, but to destroy its power to harm competitors and consumers.

Wood OK's Getting out Of WFTU

The CIO Woodworkers' Union has approved the action of the CIO Executive Board in disaffiliating the CIO from the World Federation of Trade Unions.

Approval was one of the first actions taken at the 13th annual convention which was held at Vancouver, B. C., with 600 delegates and visitors attending.

The WFTU was assailed for failing to serve the purpose for which it was created, and for being used "as an instrument of vilification and abuse against free and democratic governments and free and democratic trade unions."

Discussing trade relations between the U. S. and Canada, IWA Pres. J. E. Fadling said "we cannot have reciprocal trade between countries if we start excluding commodities at the request of every industry which would like world trade to be a one-way street for their particular product."

Regarding unemployment in the lumber industry, Fadling said the real reason was not importation of logs and lumber from Canada, but rather "the squeeze the large companies in the states are putting on the gyppo logger to force down log prices or force them out of business altogether."

William Mahoney, western director of the Canadian Congress of Labor, told the delegates they had set the pattern for dealing with disruption within the union. "You have made it clear that workers in the United States and Canada will not go along with the sort of treacherous leadership displayed by Pritchett and Dalskog in their secessionist movement in British Columbia last year," Mahoney said.

Fight For Detroit Co-Op Apartment is Won

THE GOING is tough, and you have to fight not only the real estate lobby, but government agencies. But the CIO and AFL in Detroit have shown it can be done.

Ground will be broken next month for the Schoolcraft Gardens Cooperative project, and canstruction of the first of 500 cooperative apartments will begin this fall, with occupancy of the first 60 units expected next spring.

It took a year of battling with the Federal Housing Administration before the way was cleared.

The project was started with the encouragement of Michigan liberals, including Gov. G. Mennen Williams. "Cooperative housing," he said, "is a fine manifestation of the American way of doing things, of the capacity of our people to get together and help themselves meet their own needs."

ENDORSEMENT and help also came from Victor G. Reuther, CIO Auto Workers' education director, and Finley C. Allan, the AFL building trades secretary. The cooperators bought a 70-acre tract near a city park, set to work with an architect on plans for two, three and four-bedroom apartments. When the figuring ended, they had an attractive offering for prospective home buyers.

Then the FHA started making trouble. It raised one legal obstacle after another. The cost of the co-op apartments is estimated at $9.90 per square foot; the cost for comparable private industry building averages $12.05. Yet the FHA, under prodding from the real estate lobby, kept hemming and hawing about financing, sponsors of the project said.

The coop group met disappointment after disappointment, and many times the project seemed doomed. But finally, after a year of haggling, the FHA has virtually consented to a mortgage loan covering 90 to 95% of the construction costs.

The fight has been won, but it has demonstrated that cooperative housing has no real legal status under government financing plans. The Sparkman-Spence bill, in Congress now, would make cooperative housing easier, by specifically authorizing direct loans to co-ops.

The Sparkman-Spence bill (S. 2246) has been reported out by the Senate Banking & Currency Committee. The House passed a diluted version of the bill and cut out the provisions for loans to co-ops.

Monthly payments for Schoolcraft's first units will range from $58 to $75, considerably under privately-built homes of the same size. Under the Sparkman-Spence bill, a two-bedroom unit in the Detroit project could be financed over a 50-year period for only $36 a month.

Bridges Trial Set For November 14

The trial of Pres. Harry Bridges of the CIO Longshoremen's Union on charges of perjury and conspiracy, will start at San Francisco Nov. 14, Federal Judge George B. Harris announced. He will hear argument Oct. 4 on defense motions to dismiss the indictments against Bridges and two other union officials. If the defense wins, the criminal trial set for Nov. 14 will be cancelled.

AFL, Machinists Indorses Lehman

The candidacy of former Gov. Herbert H. Lehman for U. S. Senator has been formally indorsed by the non-partisan committee of the New York State Federation of Labor (AFL). Lehman is opposed by John Foster Dulles, Republican, appointed to the Senate by Gov. Dewey upon the resignation of Sen. Robert F. Wagner. Lehman has been indorsed by the New York State CIO, at whose convention he started his campaign.

Lehman's candidacy on the Democratic ticket has been indorsed also by the New York State Council of the Intl. Association of Machinists. The council representing 50,000 members, will work for Lehman through a nonpartisan political league.

W. Va. CIO Votes To Aid Steel Union

UNQUALIFIED support of the CIO Steelworkers in their fight to bring security to themselves and to "American labor" was pledged by the 12th annual convention of the West Virginia CIO Council.

"Our full economic and numerical strength will be joined with that of the Steelworkers in their fight for American labor," stated a resolution adopted by the convention, which met in Parkersburg.

The convention—best attended in the history of the council—unanimously indorsed the action of the National CIO Executive Board in demanding that all members of the board adhere to CIO policy or resign. The resolution urged that the Board "create organizations with which loyal groups may affiliate."

THE CONVENTION advised its membership to aid formation of chapters of the Natl. Labor-Religion Foundation.

PAC Dir. Jack Kroll urged intensified political action to retain the liberal Congressmen and Senators from West Virginia. He stressed the need of electing other officials and legislators "favorable to the cause of organized labor." Evidence of the effectiveness of his talk was indicated by contributions of delegates to PAC.

Delegates also contributed $200 to the emergency polio fund.

One resolution charged General NLRB Counsel Denham with "mis-application of the Taft-Hartley law." Another resolution, demanding repeal of T-H, was met with a thundering "yea" vote.

Speakers included R. J. Thomas, Assistant CIO Director of organization; G. George DeNucci, CIO Regional Director, Columbus, Ohio, and Charles Sattler, State Commissioner of Labor.

Council Pres. John B. Easton and Secy. A. D. Viller were unopposed for re-election and were chosen by acclamation. In 1924 Easton was elected president of the State Federation of Labor and served in that office until shortly after the formation of CIO.

Eubanks Wins In Guild Poll

Sam Eubanks, executive vice-president of the CIO Newspaper Guild, has been re-elected, defeating Jack Deegan of New York, in a referendum vote. With 96% of the eligible vote in, the count was Eubanks 7125; Deegan 5790.

Voted into office with Eubanks was the entire pro-Guild slate. Chosen vice presidents at large were: Joe Collis, Wilkes-Barre; Chan Forman, Chicago; Zula Ferguson, Los Angeles; Mike Lapine, Cleveland, and Bem Price, Atlanta.

Named regional vice presidents were: Charles Leveroni, Boston; Adolph Rahm, St. Louis; Al Dipman, San Francisco.

Harry Martin, president, and Ralph Novak, secretary-treasurer, were unopposed. Collis led the pro-Guild ticket with 7265 votes; Dillard Stokes, Washington, with 5775 was second high on the "Free Guild ticket."

Top Economists Urge Congress To Prepare for Recession, Inflation

ONE OF THE most important economic reports in many years was submitted to the Congressional Economic Committee by the National Planning Association.

It was a dual report unanimously approved by more than a dozen of the nation's leading economists, asserting that the national economy might move either toward inflation or deflation and that Congress should prepare at once for either eventuality.

The economists agreed the country should have "positive assurance that the government will be prepared to act promptly either if prices should display a sharp and continuous upward swing, or if unemployment should increase substantially." They recommended that "Congress should plan ahead and announce the actions to be taken in either contingency" by enacting preliminary legislation to be effective when needed.

LEGISLATION should be enacted at once, the economists said, so that if unemployment should increase to a level of 5,000,000 (it is now below 4,000,000) a number of corrective steps could be put into effect at once, including:

1. Repeal of the wartime excise or sales taxes.
2. Temporary abatement of the lower brackets of income tax, or an increase in exemptions to increase purchasing power. Other tax rates should not be changed, leaving revenue to decline as business activity fell. The Committee agreed unanimously that deficits in time of depression were proper and wise.
3. Lengthening of the period for payment of unemployment benefits. This should be legislated in advance, the economists said, so that workers could count on this added protection.
4. Expansion of public works. This also should be arranged in advance, the economists recommended, so that economically desirable projects would be ready which could be started promptly.

CONGRESS, they said, also should enact at once legislation to go into effect in case we should head into another inflationary period. This should include:

1. An increase in lower bracket tax rates, or a lowering of exemptions.
2. Continuation of the wartime excise taxes, or if they had been repealed, replacement with other taxes. (Here the group failed to follow liberal, Fair Deal recommendations for an excess profits tax.)
3. Reduction of public expenditures, holding civil public works to a minimum, and deferring all but the most urgent military expenditures. Large farm benefits also should be prohibited.

These recommendations for immediate action, together with a progressive report on long range economic policy, came from a group of professors called together by the National Planning Association at the suggestion of Sen. Paul Douglas (D., Ill.) to advise the country on the best policies to be followed by the government in the near future.

The group met at Princeton for three days and agreed unanimously on all its recommendations. The reports were submitted to the Congressional Economic Committee by H. Christian Sonne, chairman of the Board of NPA, and Dr. Simeon E. Leland, of Northwestern Univ. Other top economists who joined in the recommendations included:

Dr. Howard R. Bowen, Univ. of Illinois; Dr. J. Kenneth Galbraith, Harvard Univ.; Dr. James K. Hall, Univ. of Washington; Dr. Albert G. Hart, Columbia Univ.; Dr. Clarence Heer, Univ. of North Carolina; Dr. E. A. Kincaid, Univ. of Virginia; Dr. Paul A. Samuelson, Massachusetts Institute of Technology; Dr. Lawrence H. Seltzer, Wayne Univ.; Dr. Arthur Smithies, Harvard Univ.; Dr. Tipton R. Snavely, Univ. of Virginia; Dr. Jacob Viner, Princeton Univ.; Dr. Donald H. Wallace, Princeton Univ.

Joe Ball Gets Job As Ship Lobbyist

Ex-Sen. Joseph Ball of Minn., a strict Taft-Hartley man before he was upset by Sen. Hubert Humphrey, is now a full-fledged, journeyman lobbyist.

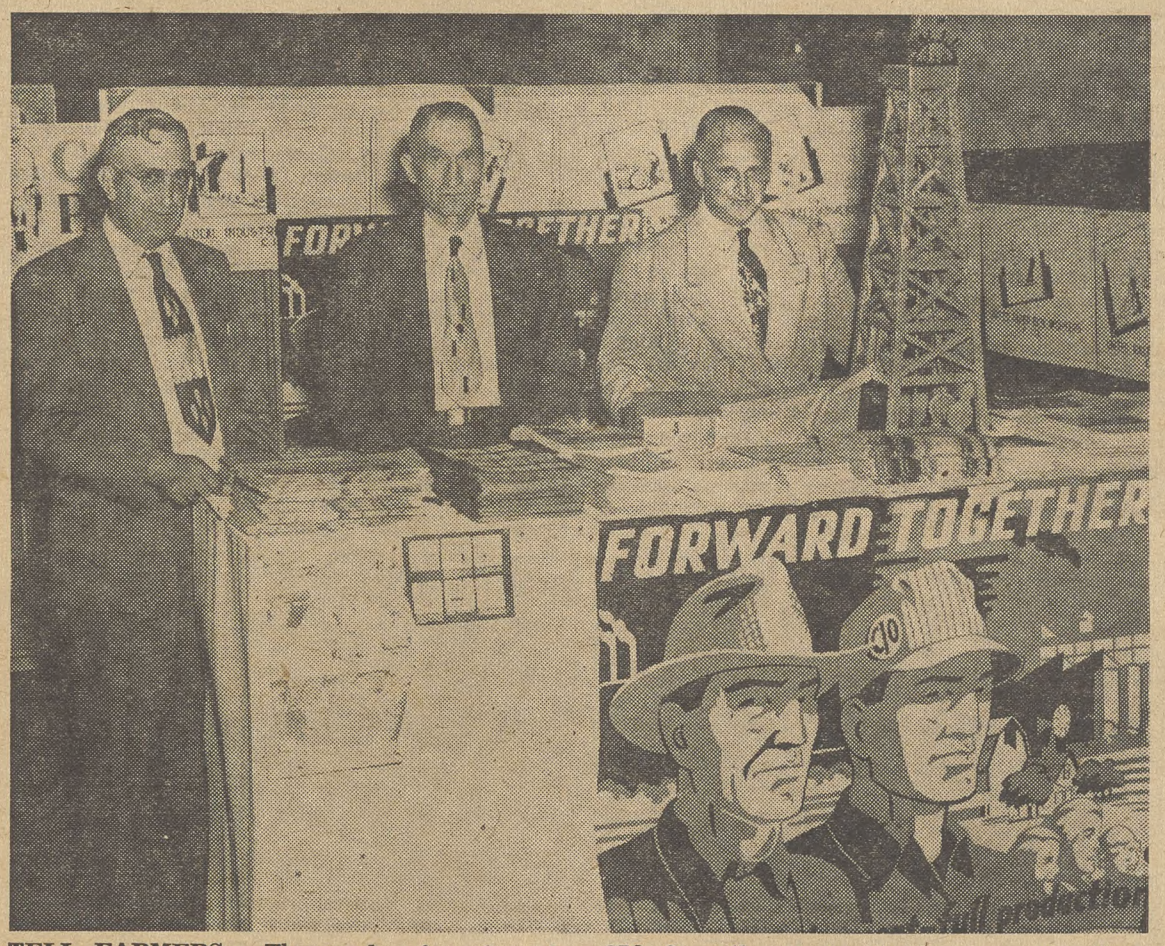
Ball has been named vice-president of the Association of American Shipowners and manager of the group's Washington office.

The one-time senator served his apprenticeship last spring when he helped veteran lobbyist Gerald Reilly fight Taft-Hartley repeal. Reilly, while toiling in behalf of General Motors and General Electric, turned some hack work over to Ball and paid him rather handsomely—some $3500.

In making public Ball's new job, George W. Morgan, president of the Association, said the shipping industry was glad to have the "counsel and advice of a distinguished and experienced public figure who will bring a fresh point of view and a new vigor."

CWA Blood Program

The Corpus Christi (Tex.) local of the CIO Communications Workers has set up a file of blood types to be made available to union members and their families as well as to Corpus Christi hospital staffs and individuals who need quick transfusions. Over 100 union members have had their blood typed in the program.



TELL FARMERS: Thousands of copies of CIO and PAC literature were distributed at this booth at the Kansas State Free Fair at Topeka, which was sponsored by the CIO Regional Office at Kansas City, Mo.; the Kansas CIO Council and the Steelworkers, the Auto Workers, the Packinghouse Workers and Oil Workers. Behind the counter are CIO Regional Dir. James J. Leary; CIO Field Reps. Henry A. Schwarzott and William E. Lewis.

Lorain, Ohio Paper Faces Anti-Trust Suit

IN THE FIRST anti-trust suit ever filed involving a newspaper and competing radio stations, the U. S. government charged that the Lorain, Ohio, Journal, is attempting to monopolize the dissemination of news and advertising by injuring a competing radio station.

The suit was first made public in Washington by Atty. General J. Howard McGrath but was filed in the Federal District Court of Cleveland. Named as defendants are the publishing company and four of its officers, including the editor of the Journal.

The government charges that the Lorain Journal refuses to accept advertising from enterprises which advertise over radio stations WEOL and WEOL-FM in Lorain and nearby Elyria in an attempt to gain control of the radio outlets.

The government also charges that the Journal refuses to accept the advertisements of concerns which buy space in the Lorain Sunday News, a weekly newspaper, and also has sought to keep the Elyria Chronicle-Telegram from circulating in Lorain.

The government suit is a civil action seeking a court order stopping the allegedly monopolistic practices. If an order is obtained under the Sherman anti-trust act, the Journal must obey it or be held in contempt with heavy fines and jail sentences the possible penalties.

CP's Morris Warned Against Secession Moves!

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

OUTSIDE the hall where the Electrical Workers' convention was held, a group of eager young Communists were handing out a drab-looking pamphlet.

This was on the third day of the UE convention. Inside the hall, the delegates had just adopted a resolution which authorized the board to withhold per capita from CIO if CIO Pres. Philip Murray did not meet the conditions of an ultimatum from UE.

The drab-looking pamphlet was by George Morris, "labor" editor of the Communist Daily Worker. It is called "Where Is the CIO Going?" Beginning at the bottom of Page 29 is this startling statement by Morris—and we quote:

"One of the major reasons for weakness of labor in the past has been the tendency of advanced groups to split away from the main stream and set up 'pure' and highly disciplined n e w unions. With very few exceptions, such ventures turned out a failure.

"In effect, secession or the voluntary isolation of progressives to their own corner is a form of escape from the far more difficult struggle of winning the workers away from the reactionaries and doing so within the labor movement where most of the workers belong.

"One of Foster's (William Z., top Commie) greatest contributions to the labor movement of America was to call a halt to such tendencies of left isolation.

"The often-heard charge from right-wing quarters that CIO progressives plan to split away is not only a falsehood, but an attempt to fan secession."

Yes sir, that's what Morris wrote about six months ago. I had not seen the pamphlet previously. It calls itself "A Program for Militant Trade Unionism."

Now that I've had time to read it through, I'd like to analyze it.

MORRIS IS somewhat of a rarity in party circles—he has some sense of humor. I've run into him a lot around the CIO circuit and have found him a pleasant conversationalist who can take it most of the time. But, I hasten to protect his job security in the party by assuring the boys at 35 E. 12th St., New York, that I have never seen or heard George deviate the slightest iota from the party line.

In his pamphlet, Morris starts off with:

"What happened to the CIO? The question is heard on all sides. For some time it has been evident that the CIO was being led away from the fighting, drive-ahead spirit that won it great support in earlier days.

"The sweeping o r g a n i z i n g drives and pace-setting economic gains that made it so attractive to the workers in the past are now giving way to internal strife, inter-union raiding, Red-baiting (The capital R is Morris', not ours), witching-hunting, stagnation and decline."

Then he poses some more questions:

"What's behind this division in the CIO? Who is responsible for it? How can the CIO be brought back to the forward-looking path it followed in its earlier days?" To arrive at his answer Morris says, "We should first trace the CIO's development both at the time of its birth—days when it was united and progressive—and further back to the historic conditions that led to its rise."

Morris points out that in the early days of CIO, all CIO leaders were called Communists or Reds. Now, he complains that what he calls the "dominant right" has lost its militancy because it calls a Communist a Communist.

Morris, with a grand gesture, gives what he calls the left almost entire credit for industrial organization, militant strike strategy, independent political action, trade union democracy, elimination of racketeering, aid to Negroes, the shop steward system, internationalism, rank and file control, unemployment insurance and old age security.

THEN, SUDDENLY, Morris says, "The breakup of the united front through which the CIO made its historic advance began when Murray and his associates in the 'middle' turned their back on the past program and went full hog for the Truman Doctrine and the resultant Marshall Plan."

"'Slave labor' was suddenly discovered in the Soviet Union," Morris says (it's amazing that he didn't qualify that more; is the party actually admitting that there is slave labor in the USSR. a fact accepted by everybody else?)

Morris really goes off the deep end when he writes, "Wage raises, organization of the unorganized, and other such objectives were effectively side-tracked" by CIO following the split with the left.

That is certainly news to the Steelworkers, the Auto Workers and other militant unions loyal to CIO. It apparently isn't news to left-dominated unions whose "militancy" apparently consists in sitting back, screaming, and waiting for Steel and Auto to set a pattern.

Morris then goes ahead to list what he considers the "differences" between the "left" and CIO:

Organization: "The Left calls for a return to the 'Spirit of '36' when ability and devotion and not one's political pedigree counted in the choice of organizers.

It is possible that in 1936 the party lads were in favor of sound organization, but only because the party told them to be so; The party's real role has been disruption, wrecking and a return to reaction.

Labor unity: "Only the left, having no interest in maintaining the division (between CIO and AFL), could view the problem from the standpoint of its basic significance for the working man." (G stands for George and Gibberish.)

"Fighting Wage Policy": Here we go again, boys. Morris says the early days of CIO had an atmosphere which was "hardly the kind in which leaders like Murray, Rieve and Reuther could flower out with their theories of labor-management love." Now, now, George!

Morris uses the industry council plan of CIO in his attempt to prove Murray and the others love the bosses. That is extremely odd, since the CIO has been urging the industry council plan since 1940. There is not an indication, either in the convention proceedings or in the recollections of veteran convention-goers, that the "left" ever opposed industrial council plans. Does that prove they love the bosses?

Independent political action: He brushes off the old arguments in favor of the zany "Progressive" Party of Henry A. Wallace.

"Peace" policy: It means, of course, giving Russia everything—except Morris, who obviously likes American food and liquor better.

Political freedom: Maybe you didn't know it, but the left wing did you a favor at the Portland CIO convention last fall. Morris says: "While some of the left-progressive delegates explained why they are for the Progressive Party, the left block (what happened to the word "progressive?") did not demand in its political resolution an endorsement of the Progressive Party." Darn nice of them.

CIO Democracy: Moscow style, that is.

End red-baiting: Morris gives the Communists just about all the credit for organization of almost every union. So, he wants us to stop saying that George Morris is a Communist.

Negro Rights: The CP, self-appointed champion of the Negro people, accuses the right wing of refusing to aid the Negro, especially in electing him to office.

Now, George, you spent the week of Sept. 19 at the convention of the Electrical Workers. UE has been lauded by you and other Commies as an ideal "progressive union." How come UE does not have a single Negro among its national officers?

"True internationalism: Morris wants us to go back to the Communist-Dominated W o r l d Federation of Trade Unions. He can have it.

He then embarks on a trade against Murray. "What caused him to agree with the Wall Streeters who supervise the government's foreign policy?"

He quotes an American Magazine piece by Murray in which the CIO leader said "we have no classes in this country."

From that statement, Morris uses typical Commie "logic" to arrive at the conclusion that "a leader who denies class division must, sooner or later, deny the necessity of struggle by labor and must come to the conclusion, as Murray does, that the interests of a union can best be served through a policy of servility to employers."

Let me ask yon one thing, George, Is this the same Murray who caused such anguished cries from steel industry executives when he called them a "sanctimonious band of robbers" before the Fact-Finding Board? Maybe George had better look up "servility" in the dictionary.

Morris accuses the Social-Democrats and the Association of Catholic Trade Unions of being responsible for CIO strife. He claims that the Vatican ordered Catholics in non-Catholic controlled unions to have an association to guide them, in this case ACTU.

I checked this statement with Ed Marciniak, one of the best interpreters of Papal encyclicals I know. Marciniak says that an encyclical in 1931 advised Catholic in non-Catholic-led unions to set up bodies purely for religious guidance. He says that any interpretation that such bodies would, by Papal order, interfere in the inner workings of a union is completely wrong.

ACTU, while it obviously has some religious character, goes beyond that. It serves as a sort of a caucus, just like the left and right wing caucuses in the Auto Workers, for instance. It doesn't back only Catholics, as witness its support of Reuther.

MORRIS CALLS for a new coalition, because, he says, "resurgence of CIO will not come with the approval of the Murrays and the Reuthers." He says that the coalition's policies don't have to be "left." That is certainly magnanimous. But, here is the policy he wants followed:

Restoration of "autonomy"; organizing; "abandonment of the paralyzing theories of management-labor cooperation"; shift in wage policy; elimination of "Taft-Hartleyism" from CIO's blood stream"; end of red-baiting; internationalism; struggle for Negro rights; one federation.

After reading Morris' "Where is the CIO going?" the question arises:

"Where is George M o r r i s Going?

CSC Institute Held At Atlanta

The Southern CIO Community Services Institute was held last week-end at the Atlanta, Ga., CIO Council Building under the joint auspices of the Natl. CIO Community Services Committee and a special sponsoring committee headed by Dir. George Baldanzi of the CIO Southern Organizing Drive.

Speakers listed on the program included Baldanzi, Secy.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the CIO Auto Workers; Irving Ambramson, Ted F. Silvey and Leo Perlis, chairman, secretary and director, respectively, of CSC; Everett Kassalow, executive secretary of the CIO Full Employment Committee.

Also, Larry Rogin and Kenneth Kramer, education and publicity director, and social insurance director, respectively, of the CIO Textile Workers; William Crawford, director, Dist. 35, CIO Steelworkers; Wilbur F. Maxwell, director, labor participation dept., Community Chests and Councils, and Dr. H. B. Trimble, dean, School of Religion, Emory Univ., Atlanta.

Govt. Workers' Union Urged By Meeting

REVOCATION OF the charter of the United Public Workers and the establishment of a new national Organizing Committee for federal, state and local employes was strongly urged on the CIO by representatives of the government workers at a meeting in Washington.

Support for this position came from the District of Columbia CIO Council which passed a resolution declaring that "the UPW has brought the name of the entire CIO into disrepute in this most strategic area, the nation's capital."

Present at the strategy conference were representatives of the Government Workers Union, (affiliated through the Shipbuilding Workers), the CIO American Civic Employees Union (affiliated through the Utility Workers), and of other government workers unions which had withdrawn from the left-wing UPW during the past two years.

These organizations claim to represent 10,000 members in 58 locals of federal, state, city and county employes in 14 states and the District of Columbia.

In a letter addressed to CIO Pres. Philip Murray, the conference charged the UPW with having "dismally failed to organize the public workers," and accused UPW leaders of having "brought disrepute and discredit on the CIO by its consistent sabotage of CIO policy and slavish adherence to the Kremlin line."

It urged the CIO, at its next convention, to establish a separate national organizing committee for public employes.

Litho. President To Be Elected

Edward Swayduck, New York, president of the CIO Amalgamated Lithographers Association biggest local, will oppose incumbent John Blackburn for the presidency. They were nominated at the closing session of the ALA convention at St. Paul, Minn.

The only other contest in a rank-and-file referendum will be for the vice presidency of the central district, where Fred W. Rose, St. Louis, is stepping out after 30 years in office.

FEPC Bill Reported Minus OK

THE BILL to establish a federal FEPC went to the Senate last week with a wishy-washy "no recommendation" comment from the Senate Labor Committee.

The Committee forwarded the bill without any positive suggestion for action after it had been unable to break a 6-6 tie on a motion to write a favorable Committee report.

Sen. Elbert Thomas (D. Utah), chairman of the Senate Labor Committee, said there would be no action on the Fair Employment Practices Commission measure at this session of the 81st Congress.

The Labor Committee forwarded the bill to the Senate by an 11-1 vote, with Sen. Hill (D. Ala.) casting the sole opposing vote. Earlier the Committee had turned down by 7-3 a Taft proposal for an FEPC without real power, and having only the right to seek to mediate disputes.

The Administration's FEPC bill would give the commission fairly broad powers to move in on situations involving job discrimination based on race, color or religion.

ALTHOUGH THE Labor Committee's final session on the bill was held behind closed doors, columnist Drew Pearson reported that it brought forth some sharp debate between conservative Sen. Forrest Donnell (R. Mo.) and Fair Dealers.

Donnell ranted that Pearson had given him "undue credit" for holding up the bill, or that he had resorted to "technicalities" to slow down action on FEPC. That brought a derisive hoot of laughter from his fellow Senators. Then the Missouri Republican calmly proposed that the Committee hold some more hearings.

According to the Pearson account, liberal Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D. Minn.) took up the argument.

"How many more hearings do you think we need?" Humphrey said. "We have already heard from 250 witnesses who have filled 2000 pages of testimony."

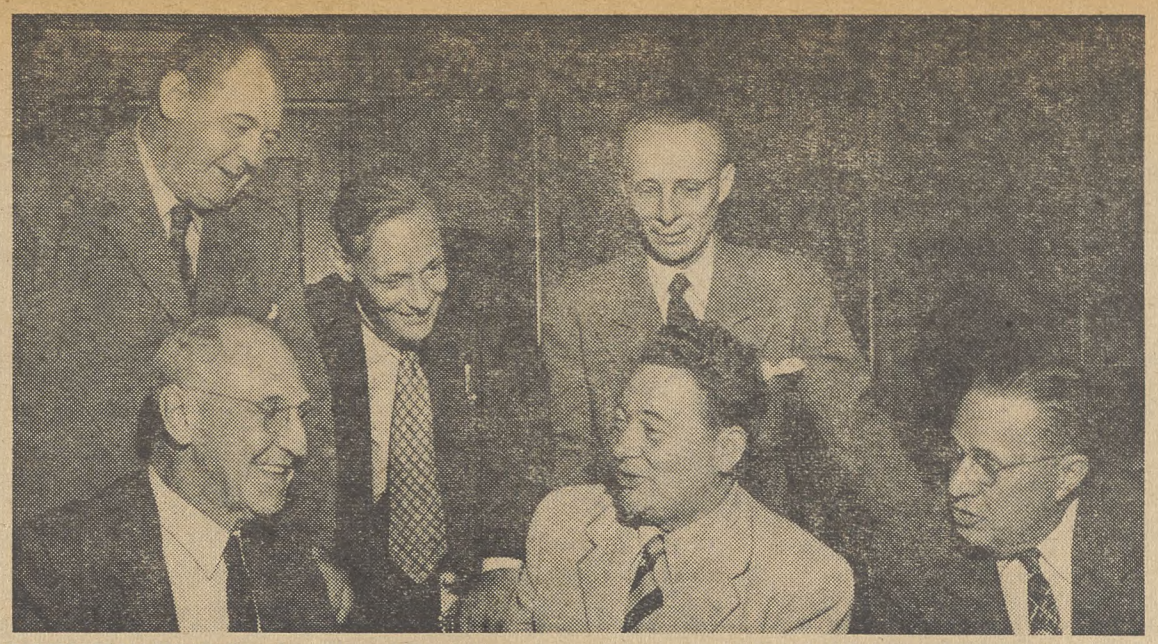
Much Child Labor Found In Florida

Florida is near the bottom of the list in school attendance, according to a recent survey made by students of the Florida State University.

A report issued by the Florida Children's Commission states that research conducted by the students indicates that "child labor certainly does its part in putting Florida well down on the school attendance list."

Florida is reported to be 38th in school attendance among the 48 states. At least 43,000 children in Florida, and probably many more, are working, according to the child labor supervisor of the State Industrial Commission, who made a survey covering children from 14 to 17 years old.

He reported widespread violations of the child labor law, the largest number in canneries, where youngsters without working certificates are frequently employed. More than a thousand cases involving industrial accidents to minors were handled last year and others are pending, he stated.



DANISH VISITORS: A group of Danish trade unionists are in this country to study our methods in order to help increase the productivity of their industry. They were recently guests at a Washington, D. C., luncheon. Standing: Secy. K. Lindberg of the Danish Congress of Trade Unions, CIO International Affairs Dir. Michael Ross, Pres. O. A. Knight of the CIO Oil Workers; seated: Clinton S. Golden, ECA labor adviser; Eiler Jensen, president of the Danish labor congress, and Bert M. Jewell, ECA labor adviser.

AFL Meet Defies Plea To Ban Political Unity

Political co-operation with the Minnesota CIO was left by the Minnesota Federation of Labor on an informal basis—despite the plea of top AFL leaders to ban such action.

Delegates at the MFL convention at Duluth, Minn., voted to table a resolution forbidding joint AFL-CIO political action after Minneapolis delegates, led by Harry Leonard of the Electrical Workers, insisted that such a ban would "result in crucifixion of some of our representatives."

Ewing Says Doctors Lack 'Paying Patients'

The real reason the United States doesn't have enough doctors and hospitals is that there are not enough "paying patients" to support them, Federal Security Administrator Oscar Ewing told the convention of the Natl. Association of Retail Druggists meeting at New York City. National health insurance, and the resulting distribution of medical purchasing power, would go a long way to remedy this serious bar to good health.

Union members from Iowa were the first to use the CIO Auto Workers' Region 4 Union Center at Ottawa, Ill., since the $300,000 property was dedicated, when they attended a week-end school Sept. 23-25. Three more such schools are scheduled for October.

Classes are under the supervision of the union's Education Department. The Educational Center is expected to extend its facilities next year to members for vacations, outings, and many union activities.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Thos. J. Gallagher, Director of Organization, IUMSWA-CIO, reports that in a union shop election held at the Joseph P. Cattie & Bros. plant at Camden, N. J., the results were as follows: Eligible to vote 71; PMC-IUMSWA 52; against 12; void 2.

CIO Reg. Dir. Edward McCrone reports that in an NLRB election held at the Elm City Rubber Co., New Haven, Conn., the URW-CIO was victorious by a vote of 53 for URW-CIO, to 23 for no union and 3 challenged.

CIO Reg. Dir. Roy Atkinson reports that in an NLRB election held at the Northwest Wire Works, Inc., Spokane, Wash., the workers voted 15 to 0 for the USA-CIO. Reps. Hugh Matthews and Frank Richmond of USA-CIO were in charge of the campaign. In a NLRB election held at the Swift & Co., Spokane, Wash., the workers voted as follows: Eligible to vote 85; UPWA-CIO 50; Meat Cutters-AFL 30; no union 1. CIO Field Reps. John Glenn and R. E. Engelking assisted in this campaign.

CIO Reg. Dir. Frank Banacci reports that in a union shop election at the plant of the Structural Steel & Forge Co., Salt Lake City, Utah, the workers voted in favor of USA-CIO by a vote of 140 to 28.

CIO Reg. Dir. George De Nucci reports that an agreed election between the CIO Brewery Workers and the District 50, United Mine Workers at the Archer Distributing Company of Nelsonville, Ohio, resulted in the victory of the Brewery Workers by a 5 to 4 majority. Special Rep. Joe Emmons of the Brewery Workers was in charge.

Reg. Dir. George DeNucci reports that in an NLRB election held at the Kaiser-Permenate Co., Newark, Ohio, CIO Steelworkers received 113 votes to 35 for the AFL Aluminum Workers, and 19 for the AFL Electrical Workers. Intl. Rep. Bill Neal handled the campaign under the direction of Dist. Dir. I. W. Abel.

An important meeting was held in Boston, Mass., Sept. 26, when an organizing structure was perfected and the drive launched to organize the telephone operators in all the New England States except Connecticut. Al Zankle, CIO Representative, a well-trained man, was picked as director of the drive.

Present at the meeting was CWA Pres. Joseph Beirne and CWA Director of Organization J. J. Moran. The writer together with the CIO Regional Director's staff and the staff of Zankle participated. This is the first campaign started by the CWA-CIO. It is expected that the Company will put every obstacle in the way and raise every objection that they can. But we have started the drive and no matter how long it takes or how many elections are held, CWA-CIO will let persistence be its guide.

The Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America are conducting a drive to assure the purchase of union made clothing with the union label in it, in every section of the land. Let every male member of the CIO insist upon the union label on the inside pocket when buying a suit. Take nothing else.

Election In Saloon

Employes of Minnesota Mining & Manufacturing Co. voted 1507 to 108 for a union shop although the voting took place in an unfinished saloon, a fire hall and a tent at St. Paul, Minn. The company refused to allow the NLRB to conduct the election on its premises to validate a maintenance of membership clause in a contract with the CIO Chemical Workers.

Chipmunks Organized

Monkeys are funny, but chipmunks have more sense. They're organized, and how. When they forage in the forest for nuts, each chipmunk works only his territory. If he strays, the union committee smacks him down. So says Harold E. Broadbrooks, University of Michigan (Ann Arbor, Mich.) researcher, who found all this out by observing the habits of 557 chipmunks.

Joint Unit Studying Wage Bill

THE FUTURE of the wage-hour law is being worked over this week in a joint Senate-House conference committee.

Bills increasing the minimum wage in interstate industry from 40c to 75c an hour were passed by both branches of Congress, but the House bill was filled with amendments which will cut more than a million workers out of wage-hour coverage.

In addition, language in the House bill is apt to throw many wage-hour issues into the courts for months and years, and to weaken enforcement of the law for workers who are covered by its provisions.

Members of the conference committee working on the task of bringing out a single bill for both House and Senate are Senators Thomas (D. Utah), Pepper (D. Fla.), Murray (D. Mont.), Taft (R. Ohio) and Aiken (R. Vt.); and Reps. Lesinski (D. Mich.), Barden (D. N. C.), Kelley (D. Pa.), Powell (D. N. Y.), McConnell (R. Pa.), Brehm (R. Ohio) and Gwynn (R. N. Y.).

'Cheap Labor' Bill Flayed

SHARP OPPOSITION to a bill that would provide large scale farm operators with a flood of "cheap labor" from Mexico was voiced last week by the CIO.

Nathan Cowan, CIO legislative director, wrote to Chairman Harold Cooley (D., N. C.) of the House Agricultural Committee that HR 5557 and related bills are "neither essential nor desirable."

The bills "would bulwark the disgraceful exploitation of agricultural labor by large scale farm operators," Cowan wrote.

"Whatever temporary arrangements may have been necessary during World War II to bulwark our agricultural manpower supply, it is neither essential nor desirable that Congress approve plans either (1) to continue the wartime emergensy procedures, or (2) to open the floodgates for the admission of cheap foreign labor."

Under those procedures, thousands of Mexican peasants were brought into this country for jobs on "factory-type" farms, at wages far lower than prevailing U. S. standards.

Congress would do better to lift the minimum wage for farm workers and to eliminate "abominable working conditions" on the factory-type farms, Cowan said. "Equitable action" along these lines would be a more "constructive" approach to farm manpower problems," he pointed out.

N. Y. City Council Acts To Protect Tenants

An ordinance to protect tenants whose landlords obtain rent boosts under the "fair net operating income" provision of the federal rent control law has been passed by the New York City Council. The measure allows the City Temporary Housing Rent Commission to stop eviction of a tenant who refuses to pay what the commission considers an excessive rent boost granted the landlord under the federal law.

Utilities Try To Smear Olds, Public Servant

A PRESSURE-GROUP struggle involving millions of dollars of consumers' money is taking place in Washington—but you'd never know it by reading the daily papers.

On the surface, the issue is Senate confirmation of Leland Olds for another five-year term as a member of Uncle Sam's important Federal Power Commission. Olds, a Roosevelt appointee, has been on the FPC for 10 years and has helped strengthen rate regulations over the gas and electric industries.

Behind the talk in Senate chambers, and the smear campaign being conducted by gas and electric trade associations, is the more important issue—whether the Federal Power Commission should act in the public's interest, or whether it will be a mere pawn in the hands of the utilities it is supposed to regulate.

The FPC has been split 3-2 in favor of the public, with Olds leading the majority group. Should the Senate refuse to confirm Olds and force appointment of a weaker personality, the utility lobbies will have been completely successful in their campaign.

As might be expected, the trade associations and their allies in Congress have pulled out two smear campaigns: "Communism" and "statism."

(It would be easier to prove that Santa Claus is really J. P. Morgan than to prove that Leland Olds is a Communist.)

Before a Senate Interstate Commerce sub-committee — heavily packed with foes of Olds —the words are flying thick and fast.

William Bonner, Houston, Tex., attorney for two of the country's biggest gas and oil trade associations, described Olds as a "punk" "more interested in 'security' and 'statism'" than in "freedom or opportunity. He has showed a callous disregard for anything American."

And James Upham, president of the Ohio Oil and Gas Association, let loose with charges that Olds has sought to nationalize the gas industry—a charge which has little factual basis.

The smear campaign became so violent that Sen. Lyndon Johnson (D. Tex.), sub-committee chairman, who has registered opposition to Olds, reminded witnesses that "there is no testimony that Olds is a member of the Communist party or is disloyal to the U. S."

Basis for the smear job is the fact that from 1922 to 1929, Olds wrote a daily economics article for Federated Press, at that time the country's only daily labor news service, and that the Communist Daily Worker, as an FP client, occasionally printed some of the Olds' pieces.

BUT OLDS, IN a 12,000 word statement, made clear that he is no Communist and that his writing was an effort to awake America of the 1920s to some of the economic facts which Pres. Roosevelt later translated into action.

"My articles were not written as an advocate of any program," Olds told the committee, " . . . They were designed to reveal the irresponsible conduct of the big corporations and the financial system during the 'golden twenties' . . . and the extent to which such irresponsible conduct created increasingly serious problems which labor and farmers must solve through enlightened economic and political action."

In 1929, Olds went to work for a New York State utility corporation and research project set up by FDR when he was governor; later he worked as chief of staff of the New York State power authority, and in 1939 was named as a member of the Federal Power Commision.

LELAND OLDS
Faces Opposition

In his statement to the Senate group, Olds offered no apology for his record on the FPC.

"It has always been my position, and I intend to stand upon it," he said, that when Congress passed legislation to regulate the utilities, it wanted "effective accomplishment" and not a sham appearance of regulation without effective action.

The Olds hearings are expected to last for several days.

CIO Backs Olds

Donald Montgomery, Washington representative for the CIO Auto Workers, testified for CIO in favor of Leland Olds.

Said Montgomery: "Much has been accomplished for the consuming public during Olds' service and he has played a leading role in these accomplishments. More remains to be done. But if the Senate refuses to confirm the appointment, it will in effect be serving notice that honest, vigorous and capable public service is not approved by our highest legislative body."

Montgomery wound up with: "We urge you to appraise carefully the significance of your decision and to vote for honesty and ability in the public service."

Vol. XII WASHINGTON, D. C., OCTOBER 10, 1949 82 No. 4(

WHERE THEY SPEND THEIR LIVES: Like thousands of other CIO Steelworkers throughout the United States, these three pickets are on duty at an approach to a steel plant—in this case, the Carnegie-Illinois at Rankin, Pa. They are wondering why the steel industry is refusing to follow the recommendation of the President's Fact-Finding Board that the companies pay the entire cost of pensions and insurance for the workers who spend their lives in the plants. This picture is typical of the peaceful picketing that prevailed during the first week of the strike. (See Story on Page 3.)

Philco UE Local Backs Steel Strike

LOCAL 101 of the CIO Electrical Workers, composed of employes of Philco's Philadelphia plant and home local of CIO Secy-Treas. James B. Carey, has pledged its full support to CIO and Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray and the Steelworkers in their current strike.

The local, which has sharply criticized the action of the UE's convention and officers in attacking CIO policy and threatening to withhold CIO per capita, hailed Murray for placing "himself in the forefront of the fight to enforce" the CIO's policies on pensions and social insurance.

"Before you assumed leadership in this fight," Local 101's resolution said, "American labor unions were forced by fear to sit idle during periods of economic decline and make only feeble attempts to resist wage reductions.

"You are fighting our fight, because our employers stand with the steel interests." Full financial and moral support was pledged.

In Ohio, a group of right wing UE leaders accused the UE of being behind what is called "an illegal and unconstitutional meeting of the executive board in Cleveland last week."

The board suspended two right wing officers from positions in District 7 and cancelled the district council meeting and election of officers scheduled for last weekend at Columbus.

The two suspended officers were E. J. Kraft, Dayton, district executive board member, and Robert Elsner, chairman of the council trustees.

Right wing leaders immediately announced the Columbia meeting would go on as scheduled, even if the left didn't show up.

UE Settles At Bridgeport

MORE THAN 2100 members of the CIO Electrical Workers voted to end the 21-week strike against the Singer Sewing Machine Co. at Bridgeport, Conn., winning a number of contract improvements.

Among the gains, according to Tom Williams, president of the local, is an improved and strengthened seniority clause, protection on standards, day-work wage increases from 2 to 6c an hour, restoration of normal incentive pay, vacation pay improvements, and added benefits in the hospitalization plan at no extra cost to the members.

About 9000 workers are still on strike against Singer in Elizabeth, N. J., second longest strike in the state's history. UE last week launched a nationwide campaign to "make Singer settle," which will involve picketing of local Singer stores, visits to local Singer managers and efforts to enlist the public's aid in refusing to buy Singer products.

After 76 days of refusing to meet with the Union, UE charged, the company sat down, "only to repeat its demand that workers surrender their campaign for better wages, job security and protection against speedup."

Joseph Graber Dies

Joseph Graber, a vice-president of the Michigan CIO Council, an officer of the Monroe County CIO Council and one of the first members of Monroe Local 1003 of the Paperworkers is dead. Services were held Sept. 26 at the Monroe.

Longshore Union Ends Walkout

HAWAIIAN stevedores' long battle for higher wages came to an end last week as employers agreed to a 14-plus-7-cent wage increase formula, 8c of it retroactive to March 1, 1949.

The 14c boost was effective immediately upon resumption of work, and another 7c will be added next March 1. All strikers will be rehired without discrimination, the union said.

Announcement of end of the 159-day walkout came in a surprise statement from CIO Longshoremen & Warehousemen Pres. Harry Bridges as he prepared to board a plane in Hawaii for San Francisco.

Beginning May 1, the strike caused a tempest in both the Hawaiian legislature, Republican-dominated, and the U. S. Congress. Efforts of a fact-finding board appointed by Hawaii's Republican Gov. Ingram M. Stainback and of U. S. mediators, as well as a strike seizure law passed by the Hawaiian legislature, failed to break the deadlock.

Cal. CIO Faces Formal Charges

A THREE - YEAR running battle reached a climax with announcement that formal charges have been filed against the California CIO Council because it is "a notorious front organization of the Communist Party."

The charges, signed by more than a dozen top representatives of the Steelworkers, Auto Workers, and other major CIO international and local unions, are in the form of a petition to National CIO Pres. Philip Murray. They ask Murray to:

1. Revoke the charter of the present State CIO Council.
2. Organize a new Council in California which will give full support to National CIO.

Strong majority support of CIO rank-and-file union members for the final cleanup of the "anti-CIO Council" was indicated by announcement that the charges have been signed by:

Charles J. Smith, District 38 director, Steelworkers, Los Angeles; J. Elro Brown, District 1 director, Oil Workers, of Bakersfield; Marie A. DeMartini, Division 35 president, Communications Workers, San Francisco; Jerome A. Posner, Los Angeles Joint Board manager, Amalgamated Clothing; Joe F. Clark, District Council 13 secretary, Woodworkers, Oroville; Cyril V. O'Halloran, Region 6 director, Auto, of Los Angeles; Floyd Gartrell, district representative, Rubber, of Los Angeles; Arthur Morrison, District 5 acting director, Packinghouse, Los Angeles.

Also, Edward T. Shedlock, national executive board member, Utility Workers, Oakland; Robert Greenock III, Intl. representative, Newspaper Guild, San Francisco; Harold Shapiro, regional director, Shipbuilding Workers, Los Angeles; Philip O'Rourke, vice-president, American Radio Association, San Francisco; Charles Abar, port agent, Maritime Union, San Francisco; and Harry Stillman, regional director, Textile Workers, Los Angeles.

THE CHARGES include a "bill of particulars" that set forth numerous specific acts by which officers of the Council operated "contrary to the true purposes for which the Council was established." These specific charges include:

1. That Council officers on numerous occasions interfered in the internal affairs of California CIO local unions, attempting to turn them against their international unions.
2. That during the 1948 statewide oil strike, Council officers publicly attacked international officers of the Oil Workers Union, causing a disastrous drop in strikers' morale.
3. That the State Council's legislative representative injected himself into the autonomous affairs of CIO Steelworker locals, and attempted to persuade local union members to disregard the policies of their union.
4. That the Council and its paper, the Labor Herald, openly encouraged efforts of a commie-line group to persuade Bay Area members of the CIO Utility Workers to shift their affiliation to the AFL International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.
5. That the Council was closely allied with the Communist Party in attempting, through the Wallace third party, to defeat labor-endorsed liberal candidates in the 1948 elections.
6. That Council officers have endorsed the Communist paper, People's World, and urged CIO members to support this "union-busting, strike-breaking rag."
7. That the Council, in accordance with the commie line, encouraged opposition to the European Recovery Program, which is supported by CIO.
8. That the Council has distributed literature attacking CIO policies and slandering CIO officers.
9. That Council officers, when properly called upon, refused to account for funds collected and spent for political action.
10. That by all these acts, the Council has repeatedly violated the CIO Constitution and CIO rules governing city and state councils. (These rules provide that councils are subordinate bodies to National CIO and must operate in accord with decisions of CIO conventions and, between conventions, of the CIO Executive Board.)

Mayor, Judge Give "Assist"

AIDED BY the mediation of a mayor and a federal judge, Local 18 of the CIO Gas, Coke and Chemical Workers scored a major victory in a 28-hour strike.

At 7 A. M., last Wednesday, the local struck against the gas works which supply Milwaukee, Wis., county and neighboring counties. The plants were shut down completely.

Local courts immediately served an injunction on the local under the state's anti-utility strike laws. The strikers refused to obey the injunction and continued their strike.

At 7 P. M., Milwaukee Mayor Frank Zeidler and U. S. Circuit Court Judge Robert Thehan invited representatives of the strikers and the company to sit in the mayor's chambers and seek a settlement. Both agreed and the meeting began in separate rooms, with the mediators going back and forth. Max Raskin, labor attorney, sat with the union group.

At 8 A. M., the next day the parties announced a settlement, pretty nearly all the union had asked for. There was a pension plan with the company contributing 12.2 cents and the workers 2.8 cents an hour, a 5-cent an hour general increase, retroactive to June 1, shift increases, a group insurance policy increase from $1500 to $2000, etc.

Sidelight of the strike: A group of police waited almost all night outside the mayor's office, ready to arrest the strike leaders if they came out.

Texans Don't Mince Words

DEEP IN the Heart of Texas, they really do their political action with a bang.

The Tarrant County Social & Legislative Conference (Fort Worth)—which is composed of all labor branches and other groups—asks this question in a pamphlet:

"Do You Want Truman's Fair Deal?"

And gives this answer:

"If so—You Don't Want Wingate Lucas!"

Wingate Lucas is the Congressman from the district. He has been thoroughly anti-New and Fair Deal.

The pamphlet says at the top: "No. 1 in a series on Congressman Lucas' record—to be issued monthly until Lucas becomes a Democrat or is defeated."

The Texas State Social and Legislative Conference has these CIO members:

Robert C. Eckhardt, chairman, Communications Workers; J. J. Hickman, Texas CIO; H. E. Ramsey, Oil; D. Roy Harrington, Oil; A. J. Pittman, Packinghouse.

Executive Board Meeting Changed

The CIO Executive Board meeting will be held at 10 A.M., Tuesday, October 25, at the Gold Room, Hotel Olmstead, Cleveland, instead of October 26, as previously announced. The CIO vice presidents will meet with Pres. Murray at the Hotel Hollenden, Cleveland, on Oct. 24.

STRIKE VICTORY: Happy members of the CIO Rubber Workers leave the month-old picket line at the Goodrich plant at Akron, Ohio, to celebrate the signing of a new agreement with the company. The agreement includes payment by the company of 10c for pensions and sick and accident benefits, but the workers will continue their present payments to the pension fund. The pact is expected to set a pattern in the industry.

2 As the strike deadline approached a worker sealed a furnace at the Carrie Works of the Carnegie-Illinois Steel Co., Rankin, Pa. Carnegie-Illinois is one of many U. S. Steel subsidiaries scattered over the country.

Union May Extend Steel Strike, 3 Firms Sign

AS STRIKING CIO Steelworkers ended their first week on the picket lines, two developments appeared on the otherwise quiet scene:

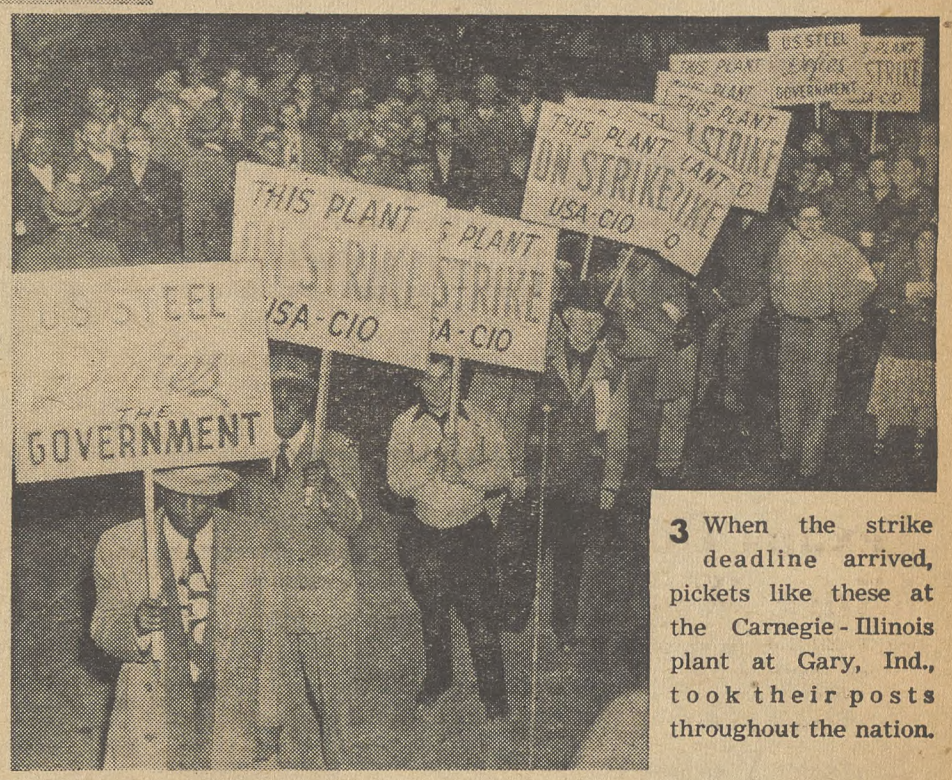
The union announced that unless the steel fabricating plants accept the presidential fact-finding board's "six-and-four" non-contributory formula on pensions and insurance, the 500,000 workers in these plants would be joining their fellow unionists out on the picket lines as these contracts expire.

Later in the week, the union announced the signing of an agreement with the Kaiser Steel Corp. at Fontana, Calif., providing pensions and insurance as recommended by the fact-finding board.

While details of the insurance plan for the 3500 workers are being worked out, the company will set aside 4c an hour, beginning Oct. 1, 1949. Similarly, the company will begin paying 6c an hour into a non-contributory fund for pensions while details of the plan are being drawn up. In both instances, joint studies are to begin immediately.

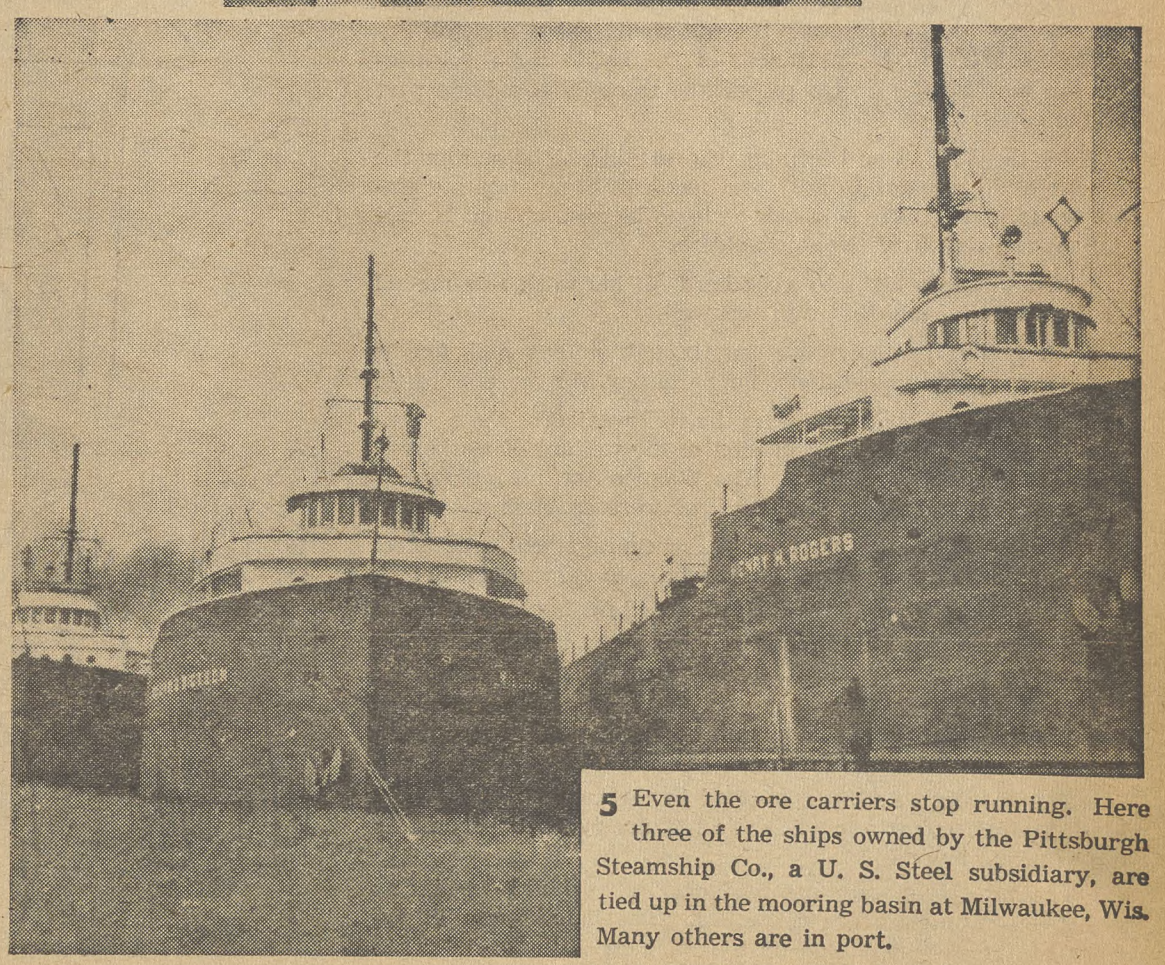
The Kaiser plant now has a hospital-medical center, staffed by doctors, surgeons and specialists. Workers who participated in the plan previously received complete health services, which they financed themselves. These same services will now be available, it is understood, at company expense alone.

Portsmouth Steel, with 4000 employes, and American Can Co., with 14,000 employes, have also reached settlements with the union, both agreeing to provide pensions and social insurance without worker contributions.



3 When the strike deadline arrived, pickets like these at the Carnegie-Illinois plant at Gary, Ind., took their posts throughout the nation.

4 As long as the strike continues, strikers can get soup for one cent a bowl at the restaurant at Lorain, Ohio, operated by Charles deBracy (standing) and Frank Ursic (not shown). Edward Bayus (l.) and Michael Bvar, both employed by the National Tube Co., are eating the soup.



5 Even the ore carriers stop running. Here three of the ships owned by the Pittsburgh Steamship Co., a U. S. Steel subsidiary, are tied up in the mooring basin at Milwaukee, Wis. Many others are in port.

Matter of Principle

The CIO Steelworkers went on strike in an effort to firmly establish the principle of non-contributory pension-insurance programs in the basic industries.

It was as simple as that, on the surface, but behind the scenes the close observer sees another important battle in the long "war" of human rights vs. property rights.

The union isn't merely attempting to get the steel industry to agree to set aside 10c an hour for each employe to finance insurance and pensions.

It is attempting to force open and widespread recognition of the fact that industry should shoulder a larger measure of responsibility for the welfare of those it employs.

Or, to put it another way: The union is fighting to establish the principle that men should be given as much consideration as machines.

Industry certainly has no illusions about the importance or magnitude of the principle involved. It has long fought for the "superiority" of property over men.

Unions, since their very beginning, have been challenging this concept.

Unions were forced to strike to obtain recognition, to establish union security, to set up realistic grievance procedures, to obtain a shorter work week, to secure paid vacations.

Now the CIO steel union is engaged in a campaign to establish another important principle.

The future of millions of workers outside the steel industry probably will be greatly affected by the outcome of the walkout.

Really Worth Fighting For

You've got to go back many years to grasp the full significance—and full importance—of the battle the Steelworkers are now waging on the picket line throughout a large part of the country.

As the U. S. was becoming a great industrial nation the owners and managers of mills and factories began treating employes as if they were so much coal—to be used up and burned out for the benefit of the stockholders.

A man had a right to work hard—if his work was needed at the moment—and that was about all.

Gradually men got together through unions and fought for better working conditions, for more pay, for more security.

And back at about the time the CIO was born, the government began giving real recognition to the welfare of workers—and to the rights of workers. The Wagner Act, unemployment compensation and social security laws were enacted.

Despite legislation and official encouragement, the steel union and others had to fight bitterly even to gain recognition.

This was so because the unions battled for human rights.

The battle has taken many forms. Many unions have contributed to the advancement that has been made.

Now another fight is going on. It's being waged between the financial and industrial giants of the nation and a strong union.

The amount of money involved in the current controversy is, of course, important. But it's not nearly as important as the principle involved.

The industry already has recognized the principle insofar as many top executives are concerned. The union wants it extended to those who actually make the steel.

Message To Striking Steelworkers:

Lefty Paper Says Your Union 'Crawls On Its Knees' To Employers

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THIS IS addressed to the guys who are "pounding the bricks" at steel plants throughout the country.

Just a few days before you went on strike against the big industrial giants, the lefty "Union Voice" declared editorially:

"The Murray type of outfit fights with extraordinary zeal against those who believe in militant rank and file trade unionism . . . But the Murray-type of union lays down and crawls on its knees in the face of an employer's surly look . . .

". . . Murray's rush to grab a no-raise settlement can be interpreted only as the act of a coward who has no heart for his fight and who was desperately searching for the first convenient exit from the arena."

Makes your blood boil, doesn't it?

YOU FELLOWS ought to know that "Union Voice" is a rather insignificant newspaper, sponsored by pro-Commie groups in New York City who bolted the CIO some time ago.

But you should know, also, that the line peddled by the "Voice" is the same one the Commies and fellow travelers are following throughout the country.

The Mine-Mill union at its recent convention sharply criticized the program for which you're striking although a M-M local at about the same time agreed to continue work despite a 15c wage cut.

This is the union which charged your president, Philip Murray, collaborated with the Ku Klux Klan down at Bessemer, Alabama.

THE PROGRAM for which you're fighting—and fighting the militant way—came in for a lot of criticism at the recent Electrical Workers convention.

The UE, which threatened to withhold its per capita from the CIO, began negotiating with the electrical giants back at about the time your dispute began.

But the "militant" leaders of UE haven't even ordered a strike vote yet!

You fellows might easily get the idea that they're awaiting the outcome of your strike.

Perhaps that's OK and maybe a UE strike vote would have been inadvisable. But they shouldn't rave about their own "militancy" and intimate you and the officers of your union are weak-kneed softies.

THE FORD Motor Co., for our money, showed much better judgment than U. S. Steel and its cohorts. Ford agreed to a pension plan just before your strike deadline was reached.

But the agreement came only after Ford workers had voted overwhelmingly to go on strike.

As you know, UAW is headed by a fellow named Walter Reuther, and the Commie crowd has been trying to paint him as a sissie who doesn't believe in militant trade unionism.

Murray and Reuther are often linked together by the lefties as a couple of "sell-out artists" and Reuther's opponents sometimes refer to him as "the bosses' boy."

If you follow the Commie line of thinking you can now refer to Murray as a "stooge of U. S. Steel!"

Such a charge would be as realistic as many the Commies have been hurling at him.

YOU FELLOWS have a real fight on your hands and you know it. You could ordinarily expect the country's big corporations and a certain number of newspapers to fight you.

But the sniping from those who claim they're the best trade unionists in the country is hard to take, isn't it?

Their action lends considerable weight, doesn't it, to the charge that the Commies are interested in tearing down—not building up—the trade union movement?

Don't let anybody kid you about militancy having anything to do with your being on the picket line. You're just company union stooges, according to the Commies.

Of course the Commies are liars, but that doesn't seem to bother them.

Taft Supporters Spend $95,000 To Alter Ballot

OHIO'S "BIG money boys" are footing the bill for Senator Robert A. Taft's attempt to meddle with the State's election machinery, the State CIO Council charges.

Already Taft henchmen have reported to State authorities the expenditure of $95,000 to get enough necessary signatures to get the referendum on the ballot.

The referendum is an attempt by Taft to get an entirely new and complicated ballot in use in Ohio. His plan, according to CIO Council, calls for confusing enough voters so he will be able to "sneak back into office."

The nearly $100,000 came from two of the state's wealthies, Chambers of Commerce, National Manufacturers Association satellites, bankers, insurance executives, industrial leaders and Taft henchmen, the Council says.

Taft's chief lieutenant, former Congressman George Bender, has publicly stated that the ballot-proposal will mean an additional 100,000 votes for Taft in 1950.

The proposed ballot would make it impossible to vote a straight party ticket by making one mark, would list the candidates office by office, and would cause confusion by abandoning the ballot which has been in use 58 years.

Here's a list of the organizations that kicked in: Cleveland Chamber of Commerce, $19,000; Cuyahoga County Republican Committee, $8,000; Mahoning Valley Industrial Council, $3,000; Stark County Tax League, $500.

The record also shows individual contributions like these: E. C. Kaeser, $750; Ben Tate, $3-000; Joe Bowlby, $1,000; E. W. Edwards, $1,000; John Evans, $3,000.

All of the contributors live in Cincinnati. A check shows that all are jointly tied up with big business and Taft, according to the Council.

"Believe me, Senator; in this town this IS a crowd."

Memorial Planned For Smog Victims

The Society for Better Living, meeting at Webster, Pa., was scheduled to draft plans for a memorial to the 22 persons who died in the tragic "Smog Disaster" in nearby Donora.

The Society announced that within a month it expected the U. S. Public Health Service to report on its nine-month inquiry into the cause of the 22 deaths.

The deaths occured when Donora was suffused with a mysterious, poisonous gas. Many believe the gas emanated from the Donora Zinc Works of the American Steel & Wire Co., which blamed the deaths on an "act of God."

He Told His Story To The Wrong Man

JUDGED BY his dress and manner as he strolled into the railway dining car, he was every inch the successful business executive.

This man, whom we shall call Joe, was carefully studying the menu when a well dressed, obviousy successful manufacturer took the seat across the table from him.

Long before the meal was finished Joe and the stranger, whom we shall call George, were engaged in pleasant conversation.

Later they went to the lounge and talked about music, books, medicine, politics, legislation, taxation, education and labor unions.

DISCUSSION of organized labor caused George, the manufacturer, to remark to Joe:

"You seem to know a lot about unions, so, maybe, you can give me some good advice.

"I'm on my way out to the mid-West to try to smash an effort to unionize one of our big plants. Some of those damn CIO radicals have been nosing around and I've got information that they intend to move in fast. I hope to smash their drive before it gets started—if I can."

Then, after a bit of prodding from Joe, he outlined the tactics he intended to employ.

JOE listened attentively, asked pointed questions, and then told George his plan sounded like a good one.

"But I've got a couple of suggestions to make," he said.

He recommended several minor changes in the union-smashing plan, then switched the conversation to colleges and universities.

Soon Joe was arguing that Harvard was a better school than Princeton, and George was disagreeing violently.

They had a night-cap just before the bar closed, shook hands, said they'd enjoyed talking to each other and headed for their berths.

THE NEXT morning, after leaving the train, George went to the office of his company and Joe checked in at a hotel.

Shortly before noon Joe began addressing a group of union organizers:

"As you all know, I've been sent out here to direct the organizing drive at ———— plant. I had a bit of luck last night; met the top guy of the company on the train and he told me all about how he intends to fight us.

"I'm going to let one of you fellows 'front' for the drive, so I can stay in the background. For all outward purposes, just forget I'm around for a few weeks."

ABOUT TWO months later Joe walked into George's office, sat down in a big chair, looked directly at George and said:

"As you probably know by now, I've been directing the union organizing drive at your plant. We have about 80% of the workers signed up. We'd like to obtain union recognition without having any trouble but are prepared to strike if you make it necessary."

After a lengthy conversation, during which angry words were exchanged, George said:

"I'll recognize your damn union—but before I do you've got to tell me one thing. How did a Harvard man like you get mixed up in this union racket?"

"Harvard man?" Joe mused. "Why I only went to high school."

"Well, anyhow, you did better than I did; only finished the 10th grade myself."

They laughed, shook hands—then laughed some more. —A. L. S.

Rod and Staff, They Comfort Me!

Pastor Tells Big Steel: 'What's Sauce for Goose . . .'

The hypocrisy of the stand taken by U. S. Steel in refusing to bear the entire cost of pensions and health insurance is attacked in this open letter to U. S. Steel Pres. Benjamin Fairless written by the Rev. Clair M. Cook, pastor of Bethany Methodist Church, East Rochester, N. H., for Zions Herald:

Dear Mr. Fairless:

I have read your protest over the presidential board's recommendations — your statement that imposing a "non-contributory principle" in pensions "is a revolutionary doctrine of far-reaching significance." Perhaps we need a revolution—one which will, in the fact-finding board's words, make adequate pensions and social insurance "one of the fixed costs of doing business—one of the first charges on revenues before profits."

As I understand it, your company and others annually lay aside millions of dollars as fixed charges (tax-free) against plant and machinery obsolescence, but nothing, or next to nothing, against "human machinery" obsolescence: it is not necessary to buy such replacements, but only to hire them by the hour.

I understand that you have a pension awaiting you from your company when you reach the age of 65, amounting to about 32% of your present salary. Our Methodist bishops receive pensions equalling 40% of their salary; but perhaps that is excusable, since your pension would pay twenty-one of theirs at $3,600 per year.

Of course, I understand that only the first $50,000 of the annual pensions for you, Mr. Olds, and Mr. Voorhees are fully paid by your company.

Still, the entire $110,460 annual pension which President Homer of Bethlehem Steel may expect in 1961 (assuming his present salary level) costs him no contributions. Did you mean that the principle is revolutionary, or only its application to union members?

Although I was once a dues-paying member of the United Steelworkers, Mr. Murray has not authorized me to speak for him. But perhaps he would be willing to play fair, Mr. Fairless, by accepting a pension plan which applied your own executives' rules down the line.

If your services are worth $103.95 an hour as compared to the average $1.65 an hour, and your pension will be over 63 times the $100 a month set by the board, why not just scale your own plan down and apply it?

On that basis, since you and your board chairman, Mr. Olds, and your finance committee chairman, Mr. Voorhees, start off with $150,000 of your total $210,675 pensions paid by your company, you might offer to pay $71.40 out of that monthly $100 without worker contribution.

And since you and the company join in paying for the balance of your own pensions, you and the workers should join in the other $28.60 per month, to insist on your contributory principle.

But aren't you deducting payments from every worker's pay check now for that very purpose? And aren't you by law making company contributions also to their retirement under Social Security? As I understand it, average federal retirement payments are about $30 per month now.

So counting up both, you can follow your own established practice with a clear conscience and still arrive at $100 a month. This plan has a further beauty for negotiating; not only do you keep your principle, but the worker may keep his whole pay check.

Incidentally, the workers will hardly forget that you gentlemen received raises of more than $20,000 each within the past year. That average of 13% more would mean over 21c an hour, applied to the average worker.

Yours for the Golden Rule,
Clair M. Cook

Ability of Handicapped Stressed

Varied programs were held in more than 8000 cities last week in the observance of National Employ the Physically Handicapped Week, which was established by an Act of Congress.

During the week the capability and the carefulness of the handicapped worker were stressed—facts that are supported by studies made by the Dept. of Labor in cooperation with the Veterans Administration.

These objectives were set up:

1. To find new job opportunities for the hundreds of thousands of handicapped workers who are able to work if selectively placed, but are unemployed;
2. To emphasize the importance, in an increasingly selective labor market, of retaining in their jobs the millions of handicapped persons currently employed;
3. To help 1,000,000 severely disabled persons currently outside the labor force to obtain needed vocational rehabilitation to fit them for suitable work.

The Left-Right Battle Within CIO—Why

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

IT WAS LATE on the afternoon of Monday, Nov. 18, 1946, in Atlantic City, N. J.

The annual report of Pres. Philip Murray had just been referred to the CIO convention's Committee on Officers' Reports. Then, Murray took the mike and asked that the convention rules be suspended to consider a "special statement of policy" adopted by the CIO Executive Board the day previous.

Murray told the delegates: "For some weeks prior to the convening of this convention, and particularly in the course of the last few days, the news organs of the nation, in so far as their columns are concerned, were literally deluged with a great amount of material concerning the position the CIO convention might take with regard to an extremely important issue, that issue being one with which the delegates are fully conversant.

"It deals primarily with the allegations contained in the newspapers and disseminated throughout the land that this organization of yours and mine, this great big mighty trade union movement, was Communistically dominated."

Murray went on to say that he had consistently denied such allegations. "I have taken occasion repeatedly to assert that this union has not, and must never be, Communistically controlled or inspired."

He revealed that he had brought the matter before the Executive Board on his own and had no prior consultation with anyone. He also said that he had consulted no one on the makeup of the six-man committee which was to draft the statement of policy.

He declared that there should be "a very distinct understanding that, through the voluntary democratic processes within the framework of our national unions and our CIO, there should be a strict adherence to the policy statement. It portrays rather vividly this union's allegiance to one country, and that is the United States of America."

He then read from the now famous statement of policy, which says in part:

"We, the delegates to the eighth constitutional convention of CIO resent and reject efforts of the Communist Party or other political parties and their adherents to interfere in the affairs of the CIO. This convention serves notice that we will not tolerate such interference."

There was no debate and on a standing vote only two delegates arose in opposition. (They later came to the platform and asked to withdraw their opposition.)

Thus came into the open a cleavage within CIO over the attempts of the Communist Party to dominate CIO's thinking. This split, which held itself in check during the war, had begun almost as soon as the Japanese surrender was signed.

IN THE period between Aug. 15, 1945,—end of the Japanese war—and the CIO convention of '46, a virtual revolution had taken place in the CIO Maritime Union. The NMU's president, Joseph Curran, who had been long identified with the Left, broke abruptly with that faction.

Curran demanded all Communists be defeated for office. He carried his fight into the NMU's biennial convention of 1947 and there won a narrow victory over the suspension of Joseph Stack as New York port agent.

In the referendum election which followed, Curran's slate won by wide margins over Left-supported candidates. Curran filed charges against several of the ex-officers, including Stack and Ferdinand Smith, former secretary, and they were expelled from the union by a trial board.

At this year's biennial convention, Curran's program won full indorsement. The convention upheld the ousters of the former officers.

Curran has been a strong supporter of Pres. Murray in CIO board meetings.

IN 1945, Walter Reuther, long a foe of Communism, won election as president of the CIO Auto Workers, but by a narrow margin. The majority of the executive board was against him.

The Daily Worker believes Reuther can do nothing right. The paper and the Communists attacked him bitterly and gave rather grudging support to his opposition.

In the fall of 1947, the Auto Workers' convention at Atlantic City saw Reuther re-elected by a wide margin, along with both pro-Reuther vice presidents, the secretary-treasurer and most of the board. The Communists were squelched.

The Left Wing is still noisy in the UAW, but, at this year's convention, 17 spoke with a weak voice.

THE RICH Irish brogue of Michael Quill was long associated with the left. His Transport Workers' Union was considered one of the strongest in that camp.

In the fall of 1947, the Left Wing decided to run Wallace for President the following year. They called in Quill and told him what they had decided. He asked if they had consulted Murray or any other top leaders. They said no. Quill asked if they intended to go through with this even if it meant splitting the CIO. They said they did and demanded that he back them.

Quill balked. He resigned as president of the Greater New York City CIO Council denouncing the Communists as "crackpots."

Quill's TWU executive board—the majority of it— assailed his action. They were so beholden to the party that they reversed themselves on support of a New York City 10-cent fare in order to get their members badly-needed raises. Quill stuck to his support of the fare boost and won a 24-cent-an-hour increase for his members.

Quill vowed he'd throw out the party liners at his next convention. The Left Wing retaliated by setting the convention in Chicago, far from the center of TWU's membership, a large portion of which is in New York and Philadelphia. Quill charged this was a plot to wreck the union's treasury.

The first day of Quill's convention was one of the most exciting in union history. In the space of less than 12 hours, Quill and his backers had succeded in adopting new rules and electing an entire pro-Quill, pro-CIO slate of officers and executive board by overwhelming margins.

While all this was going on, Quill was carrying on his duties as a member of the New York municipal Council and was in the middle of a fight to clean up the CIO Council. He and a group of others filed charges with the CIO board against the council and its officers. A trial board was set up and issued its decision to the CIO board just before the Portland convention. The decision: the charter should be lifted. The board concurred and since no appeal was made to the convention, the decision stood.

The charter was lifted and a new council was formed, with Quill being elected president.

THE 1947 CIO convention had many instances of splits between left and right and many indications that the Commies were still trying to grab control of CIO.

Then came the now famous speech by George Baldanzi, executive vice president of the CIO Textile Workers, which had the major portion of the delegates standing and cheering.

"Two world wars in my lifetime have convinced me," Baldanzi asserted, "that I'll be damned if my little son is going to grow up to become cannon fodder for a lot of ideological chatter.

"I am tired of these efficient systems of government where all they do is reduce humanity to a lot of trash and reduce women to a lot of brood mares to feed the machines of war.

"Are we being unreasonable when we denounce people like the representatives of Russia who have been denouncing every responsible representative of ours, including the President of the United States, and stating that he is another Hitler? He could not be another Hitler, because if he were a Hitler, Russia would work out a pact with him like they did with Hitler."

SAID REUTHER: "I am mindful of the fact that one other CIO convention discussed foreign policy and I take you back to the Chelsea Hotel convention in Atlantic City in 1940.

"It was during a period that the war was in a stalemate (America didn't enter until December, 1941), when the British were calling for help and everybody who dared raise their voice in America to try to gear the productive power to her aid, those who stood against Hitlerism and Fascism were called Warmongers.

"The very people in the convention who were calling Roosevelt a warmonger are now calling Truman a warmonger. These people have made a complete cycle since 1940 to 1947. Between these two historic dates they have embraced Hitler and they have embraced Roosevelt."

Murray finished the debate with:

"Every delegate in this convention, when he votes for this resolution, pledges himself and his organization to support these ideals. And he cannot betray them, either through the use of subtlety or evasions or in hidden places or in open forum and be loyal to CIO. He cannot subvert them. He is not privileged to do that.

"Personally I favor the Marshall idea (the Marshall Plan had not yet been put on paper)."

The convention hadn't been over a minute before the Left began attacking the Marshall Plan. They haven't stopped since.

FOLLOWING that convention—which was held in Boston—the Wallace nomination was made on a platform opposing the Marshall Plan and praising no one but Russia.

In January, 1948, the CIO board met and took two major actions which led to a group of left-wing leaders deciding they had the right to defy CIO policy after it had been decided by the democratic vote of the board.

The two decisions:

1. Against the Progressive party of Wallace.
2. In favor of the Marshall Plan now known as the Economic Co-operation Administration.

The left tried to insist that as board members it didn't have to follow CIO policies. The Leftists tried to persuade the CIO's local county and state IUCs to go along with them but council after council voted that the CIO's way was the best. Many councils which had been left wing

How Officers Line Up

Moscow Radio—Of All Things!-

THE MOSCOW Radio, like Communist party mouthpieces in this country, has little regard for the truth.

Four days before the deadline for the steel strike, the Soviet Overseas Service beamed a program in English to North America, which spoke of the steel labor crisis:

"The magnates refused to raise wages and contribute to a pension fund. Their cool and confident manner was not accidental. They knew that (CIO and Steelworkers Pres.) Murray made a secret promise last year to one of the largest steel companies, U. S. Steel Import Corp., that he would not insist on a pension being established.

The charge was made by John A. Stephens, U. S. Steel vice president in charge of labor relations, and was categorically denied by Murray. Thus, Moscow radio calls Murray a liar.

"Murray's treacherous deal . . . the steel magnates did not doubt Murray would do all he could to break the strike and they were not mistaken.

"Pres. Truman was quick to act and, despite the Taft-Hartley Law, immediately appointed a fact-finding committee to ascertain the causes of the conflict, thereby automatically postponing the strike for 60 days, keeping the T-H Law in reserve should the committee fail to break the strike.

"The decisions of the board qualified the workers' demand for a wage increase as unlawful and said it should be turned down.

The board never said the demand for a pay increase was unlawful.

"The interests of the businessmen came first as far as the President's board was concerned.

Query: Then why did industry refuse to abide by the board's recommendations on non-contributory pensions and social insurance?

switched leadership and became loyal to CIO.

The Greater New York City CIO Council was one of these. Two other large councils which changed leadership in favor of CIO were Wayne County, Detroit, and Los Angeles.

By April of 1948, more than 90% of CIO's councils had backed the Executive Board's stand on the third party and the Marshall Plan.

The office of CIO Dir. of Councils John Brophy was swamped with messages from councils willingly pledging loyalty to CIO.

In the Los Angeles situation a plan recommended by CIO Vice Pres. and Organization Dir. Allan S. Haywood was adopted.

Just last week, loyal CIO locals in California filed charges against the State CIO council.

IN AUGUST, the Left again howled when the Executive Board indorsed Truman and Barkley.

Came Nov. 2 and Truman was in. Wallace ran fourth, even behind the Dixiecrats.

THE 1948 CIO convention opened Nov. 22 at Portland, Ore.

After four or five preliminary speakers, Pres. Murray started his opening address. The expectant delegates didn't have to wait long. In the seventh paragraph of his speech, he said:

"It is a definitely well-established fact that the Communist Party about two years ago determined through the exercise of its might and power through Moscow to drive Truman out. They did not care whether Dewey was elected or the devil was elected."

Later in his address, he criticized the failure of certain unions to organize their fields. He specifically mentioned the Government field, the white collar field and the retail field. He said: "If a Communist is leading a labor organization in the CIO, and after years of existence he is unable to demonstrate his fitness to organize the unorganized, then, in justice to the people he should resign."

WHEN THE officers' report came to the floor, Donald Henderson of the Food, Tobacco Workers (who has since "resigned" from the Communist Party) came in with a minority report.

The report was an attack against the majority position, against CIO policy in favor of the Marshall Plan, against CIO officers, against other CIO unions, etc.

Murray remarked: "The opposition to the plan (ECA) expressed by Delegate Henderson is reflected in the same kind of opposition that has been manifested by men like Delegate Henderson in other countries.

"I do not say that everyone who is opposed to the Marshall Plan is a Communist. But I do say every Communist is opposed to the Marshall Plan.

"It is clear the Communists are doing their utmost to wreck the entire recovery efforts of Britain and the European countries which have accepted the American offer of cooperation and financial aid.

"I am interested in knowing what the attitude of Delegate Henderson will be and what the attitude of his associates will be after this convention acts upon this proposition. We either have policy or we do not have policy."

MURRAY NOTED that left-wingers had been charging that top CIO officers were cooperating with Wall St. in support of ECA.

"God knows no one could ever say that the president of this organization ever engaged himself in collusive practices with big business," he said. "The president of this organization did not support Mr. Wallace because he did not want to elect Tom Dewey —and Tom Dewey is Wall St.

"I have witnessed in the past 12 months the sorry spectacle of degraded thinking going on in the councils of CIO. The protagonists of the Soviet system of thinking have never stood upon a floor, either in an executive board meeting or a convention hall, and criticized a single, solitary thing that Russia has done since the end of the war.

"Never has there been a word emitted from their mouths of the rape of Poland, of the many things that have transpired in other European countries — the murder of innocent citizens in other countries, without benefit of trial, being shot and executed; helpless thousands of them, since the end of the war. But has there been a comrade in America who stood upon a public forum or even in a convention hall or a meeting of the CIO Executive Board and attempted to chastise or criticize the Soviets? Not a word. Not a word.

"Let these apostles of Communism stand up, and be counted like men."

Reuther joined in the debate after several left-wing speakers had attacked Murray. Said Reuther:

"Brother Murray does not have to apologize for his stewardship. His record of building unions stands as a monument. He does not have to apologize about the right and ability to win contract concessions. The Steelworkers' record will show they know how to do it."

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey declared:

"Oh, please, Mr. Molotov and Mr. Vishinsky and Don Henderson, if you cannot help us in the way workers need help, please stay out of the way so other people can do the job."

IN RESPONSE to an attack by UOPWA Pres. James Durkin, Murray said that he had tried in every way possible, even to writing the Prudential Co., to aid UOPWA win and extend contracts.

"I tell you frankly and candidly," Murray said, "that the state of dry rot which prevails in Durkin's union is due to his (Durkin's) leadership. There is just not any question about that.

"The trouble with Jim Durkin is this: he does not understand trade unionism. It is going to be extremely difficult for him to get to understand it. He cannot chain his thinking along trade union lines.

"Why he engages himself in these deliberate falsehoods is beyond me. I suppose that is how he lives. He cannot help it. As we go down the road, we discover many elements of irresponsibility. Those are accidents of birth or what have you. They are things that belong to the chemical content of the human body. These are afflictions that pursue men. I am not going to assume responsibility for the shortcomings of men like Jimmy Durkin."

DURING THE discussion on organizing, Baldanzi asserted: "All the money we can raise, all the energies of the staff and every effort of the personnel that we have in the South (he is now director of Operation Dixie) will be wasted until we can wipe our face, and face the workers as a 100% American organization.

"I think we are all getting tired of this so-called dialectical minestrone, as I call it. Hell, I have been in North Carolina trying to organize and have gone into local meetings among workers interested in improving their condition, only to see some hack come in there to pass a resolution condemning Marshall.

"So let us not throw stones if we live in glass houses. That is merely incidental. I am convinced that the jurisdictional problems of this union would just disappear like snow in the sun. We do not have raids in CIO. We have revolts of workers against Communist domination."

ON THE organizing resolution, Vice Pres. and Organizational Dir. Allan S. Haywood told of many efforts to help the UOPWA. But, he said, "is there one word about the contribution that was made? No, this is the line of attack—'The Murray we once knew.'

"I gave Durkin my telephone number at a little cottage I have up in the mountains. Lo and behold, the employer calls me at that number. Who gave him that number? The UOPWA gave him that number. And yet the propaganda goes out and Durkin has never corrected it, that we were collaborating with the company."

UAW Pres. and CIO Vice Pres. Walter Reuther at the Portland Convention:

"Henderson, Durkin and the people who have signed the minority reports don't accept the democratic will. They want all the rights, all the privileges, all the protections, all the help the CIO means, without any of the obligations that go with CIO membership.

"It is a question of loyalty. Are they going to be loyal to the CIO or loyal to the Communist Party? Are they going to be loyal to this country or loyal to the Soviet Union? You cannot be loyal to both. And they have to make up their minds on that."

The industry did offer to make payments—if the workers also contributed.

"On the one hand, Murray wants at all costs to break the strike, yet he cannot sell out openly and thus expose himself completely in the eyes of the workers. On the other hand, Murray is afraid that the workers, convinced of his treachery, might call a strike on their own initiative.

"Philip Murray's subservience to the steel magnates has become so evident that it is doubtful that even the President can succeed in vindicating the traitor in the eyes of the American workers.

This "subservient" Murray is the same Murray who called the steel industry's spokesmen a "sanctimonious band of racketeers," causing loud protests.

"Murray's policy to postpone a strike once again exposes him in the eyes of the working masses as an agent of the monopolists in the labor movement."

Late in the evening of Sept. 30, Murray, acting under the Steelworkers' constitution ordered more than 500,000 basic steel industry workers out on strike.

How did the Moscow radio later explain Murray's calling of a strike which it said he was going to "sell out?" Here's how easy it is for Communists to lie:

"Rank and file action put Murray in a dither. It had become obvious that he might find himself a general without an army. Afraid of exposing himself completely as an agent of the employers, and lacking the power to hold back the pressure of the great mass of unionists who are fighting for their vital interests, Murray finally had to call the strike."

We wonder what Moscow Radio will conjure up if the Steel Union calls out 500,000 fabricating workers?

'Wall St.' Not A Catch-All Phrase For Bell Strikers

By GLORIA CAPLAN

UP IN Buffalo, N. Y., where strikers have been hauled into jail en masse, held without arraignment or charges, held incommunicado, trampled by mounted police, attacked by armed scabs, intimidated by a low-flying, company-owned helicopter and clubbed by deputies—they can still sing. One of the ditties carrying a CIO Auto Workers Union label goes like this:

"Larry used to like to pose
As just a worker from the ranks;
Now he jumps when Wall Street whistles—
Just a clerk for Wall Street banks."

The "Larry" in question is Lawrence D. Bell, founder and president of the Bell Aircraft Corp., whose 1400 production workers are now in the 18th week of the country's bitterest strike this year.

To Bell strikers "Wall Street" isn't just a catch-all phrase you throw around as a substitute for a better cuss word. In this case, Wall Street is the very real enemy, and Bell strikers trace their difficulties back to the moment a Wall Street investment firm—First York Investment Co.—started trying to grab off a majority of the Bell stock.

TWO TO ONE: Just another example of deputy sheriffs' intervention in the Bell strike occurred when these two policemen arrested this woman picket.

LAST JUNE, WHEN UAW negotiators were trying to get a 10c raise and pensions into a new contract, they were baffled by a new attitude on the other side of the table. For the first time in 12 years of amicable relations, Bell not only said "no" to every contract proposal—it also refused the union's offer to extend the old agreement another four months without changes, pending establishment of a nation-wide settlement pattern.

Bell refused to extend the contract four months, demanding instead that wages be frozen at least a year.

It didn't make sense to the UAW. Why, they asked, should Bell seem so anxious for a strike at a time when the plant was fairly bulging with $30 million worth of orders and work through 1950?

The Union's researchers soon discovered at least part of the answer in the financial pages of a number of newspapers.

On June 12, the day management refused to extend the contract, some of the financial pages reported that First York was trying to buy Bell stock and was willing to pay $2 above the market price.

The strike began June 13, and by June 27 First York had succeeded in increasing its holdings from 37% to more than 51%.

As summed up by the union in its subsequent unfair labor practice charges filed with the NLRB, "A strike was welcome because it might facilitate the financial manipulations of First York, enabling it to buy stock which weren't available (at terms acceptable to the corporation) on the market."

WHEN THE UNION researchers began investigating Bell's new owner, they found that First York was part of a giant pyramid of Wall St. investment firms, at the top of which stood two families—the Huntington family (one of America's 60 most powerful) and the David M. Melton family, whose head married John D. Rockefeller's daughter.

They also learned that Equity Corp., which controls American General Corp., which in turn controls First York, believes in rough treatment for unions.

And rough treatment the 12-year-old UAW local at Bell has been getting!

The story of Bell's methods in the walkout sounds more like the union struggles of previous decades—with their accompanying police violence, and open police-company collaboration—than of the 1940's.

But the strike has held firm despite these things:

- Fifty-three strikers have been arrested and 18 warrants are still outstanding.
- Bail has been set so high that the union has already posted $331,000.
- Arrests have been indiscriminate. For example, one striker —Frank Burke, a steward—was charged with violating an injunction at a time when he was in the hospital.
- In one instance of mass arrests for alleged violations of an injunction, N. Y. Supreme Court Justice George H. Rowe has ordered all 34 strikers to be tried at one time in a mass trial. The union is contesting the ruling.
- Strikers have been hauled into jail, some placed incommunicado —without an arraignment or issuance of any charges against them. (The union has obtained a warrant against the Niagara County Sheriff, charging him with these and other illegal acts.)
- Mounted police, tear gas and clubs have been used against the strikers.
- Scabs, armed with clubs, lead pipes, rubber, hose, blackjacks, and some with pistols, arrived in busloads, accompanied by deputies.
- A helicopter—Bell's gift to the sheriff—has been used to drop tear gas bombs directly on the strikers. Another plane is being used to fly strikebreakers into the plant.
- The company early in the walkout obtained an injunction limiting picketing.

So far the company has succeeded in luring only an estimated 300 production workers into the plant in its back-to-work attempts. Once it did succeed in obtaining 1000 takers from among the strikers. The 1000 reported for work, walked out 40 minutes later, accompanied by the few genuine scabs who were inside.

Through a high-powered publicity campaign the company first attempted to smear the strike as inspired by subversives. These charges were smashed when the union published a May 2, 1949, letter to the local's members from the company's vice-president.

"You have elected a new group to represent you and to establish the policy of your union," the letter read. "You and your fellow workers have indicated that you don't want your union to be dictated to by interests outside of the union . . ."

These are the same officials who, praised in May, became "subversive" in June.

BELL SOON abandoned its "anti-subversive" campaign. Taking its place was a campaign against the union's international representatives.

On July 6, for instance, the Buffalo Courier-Express stated: "Management spokesmen asserted officers of the local union would accept the company's proposals if not hindered by the International."

The union immediately replied with the challenge that management meet the local union bargaining committee without the presence of international representatives. After several such challenges, the corporations finally accepted; but no settlement was forthcoming—and Bell abandoned the "International Reps.," issue for a while.

Never one to be caught without a ready issue, Bell then dug up the "subversives" again.

The Buffalo Evening News on July 26—under a headline reading "Bell Talks Resumed; Curb on Subversives Termed Major Issue"—quoted Bell as saying he would sign no contract which did not contain "provisions necessary to protect the security of the work entrusted to us."

To call the company's bluff, the union the next day agreed to the clause.

And Bell went back to the old "International Reps." call again.

BEHIND ALL Bell's ballyhoo about subversives and international representatives lie the real roadblocks to settlement.

Chief among these is the corporation's six-point ultimatum to the union, delivered Sept. 1. These demands were:

- An NLRB election to prove the local's majority. (In 12 years of bargaining, the UAW's representation had never been questioned.)
- Super-seniority for strikebreakers.
- Return to the open shop by eliminating union shop provision.
- Contract renewal with no wage talks until after a year.
- Company right to decide who is subversive and to discharge accordingly.
- Right to discharge those responsible for violence, threats, or injunction violations. The company would be sole judge.

The local has repeatedly turned down the ultimatum.

MEANWHILE union offers to arbitrate—and mediators' efforts to keep the talks going—have been snubbed by management.

And all the while a Joint Committee to Aid the Bell Strikers—composed of CIO, AFL, IAM and Railroad unions—does what it can to keep the striking families in food, clothes and shelter and to protest ill-treatment of the strikers.

But they know they can't be heard on Wall St. It takes someone big—the government, for instance—to be heard on Wall St.

That's why the union is attempting to get the intervention of the government, for 90% of Bell's production is under government contract. Bell strikers don't think U. S. taxpayers want to foot the bill for Bell's efforts to kill their union and depress their living standards. Besides, Uncle Sam needs the planes.

City Council Flays Bell

The Bell Aircraft Corp. received a strong tongue-lashing from the Buffalo Common Council in a resolution bitterly denouncing the corporation's tactics against the strikers.

The resolution read in part:

"Whereas the people of Buffalo have been treated to the disgraceful spectacle of thousands of its citizens being made a target of unfounded charges by the Bell Aircraft Corp. and in fact many of the workers employed therein have been subjected to physical violence;

"Whereas fully informed persons are aware that reasonable and fair solution of the labor trouble prevailing at the Bell Aircraft Corp. plant has been blocked by the management rather than labor . . .

"Therefore, be it resolved that the Common Council . . . here publicly condemns the Bell Aircraft Corp. for the methods it has employed . . ."

CCL Upholds Suspension of Five Top UE Officers

By JACK WILLIAMS

SUSPENSION of five top Canadian officials of the CIO Electrical Workers from the Canadian Congress of Labour was upheld in a 10-1 vote by delegates to the 9th annual convention of the Congress in Ottawa. The action, coming at the start of the five-day convention, clearly marked the political line of the CCL.

Permanent suspension of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers was taken for granted after the vote on the suspension of UE officers. No appeal had been entered by Mine-Mill.

After the left-right vote, the convention quickly swung its support behind a series of resolutions demanding action on housing, prices and social security.

The five men whose suspension was maintained are: Clarence S. Jackson, Canadian director and president of District 5; George Harris, secretary-treasurer, District 5; Ross Russell, organizing director; Mervin Chambers, vice-president District 5; and Jack Douglas, editor of Canadian UE News.

THE suspension was originally imposed early this year after the UE News carried an editorial condemning officers of the Ontario Federation of Labor, a CCL affiliate, for their support of the Marshall Plan. The OFL officers were charged with union splitting, adopting Hitler-like tactics and war mongering. The OFL filed charges and the suspension followed.

Jackson and Harris presented an appeal at the opening of the convention. Harris devoted a major part of his time to a review of the international situation. Pat Conroy, CCL secretary-treasurer, who led off in opposing the appeal, summed up Harris' arguments as "a lot of damned nonsense."

"We are determined to stop this slandering of union officers," Conroy declared. C. H. Millard, Canadian director of the CIO Steelworkers, opposed the appeal and said the UE "lie campaign" was continuing despite apologies. Sam Baron, Canadian director of the Textile Workers, got a big ovation when he said the CCL and responsible union leaders were through turning the other cheek.

The entire Mine-Mill organization in Canada was suspended earlier this year when it refused to conform with a decision of the CCL executive council turning over jurisdiction in Northern Ontario gold mines to the Congress on a temporary basis. Despite bitter Mine-Mill opposition, the CCL has since won certification in almost all the mines and is now in negotiation. Originally Mine-Mill had 11 contracts in the area but all had been lost and union organization had collapsed before the CCL went into the field.

IN THE opening address Pres. A. R. Mosher told the 800 delegates that political action was essential to labor's interests.

"We can no more separate economic action and political action than we can stop breathing and continue to live," he said.

"One day we fight with the boss for another five or 10c an hour and the next day we send the boss' lawyer to Parliament to make the laws. It is time we sent our own people to Parliament."

Mosher said labor in Canada was recognizing and accepting its responsibilities with regard to the interests of the country as a whole.

British Foreign Secretary, Ernest Bevin, visited the convention during the first few days.

Bevin was cheered to the rafters when he entered the auditorium and again when he had finished speaking. The five suspended UE members sat tight on their hands, though some members of the UE delegation on the floor stood with other delegates.

Speaking as a member of the British government, Bevin said his government never made a move of any importance without consulting the unions.

"There has been an amazing growth of trade union power," he said, "but the most amazing thing is the evolution of its constructive ability and capacity to organize, influence and play a great part in the state in which it finds itself and in the world today."

At a banquet the delegates heard Prime Minister Louis St. Laurent. The prime minister had a friendly exchange with Conroy when he referred to the fact that the CCL has for some years supported the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation as the political arm of labor and opposed St. Laurent's Liberal Party, which swept the country in a recent federal election. St. Laurent said he hoped the relationship between the CCL and CCF was only a trial marriage.

Conroy, in thanking St. Laurent after his speech, said he didn't believe in divorce but anyway the Liberal Party would have to show a good deal more glamor than it had in the past if it were to entice the CCL from the CCF.

As the convention passed its halfway mark delegates had given enthusiastic support to resolutions calling for a broad national labor code, an adequate housing program, general adoption of the 40-hour week, and action to curb racial discrimination.

In a foreign policy resolution the convention gave sweeping support to the Marshall Plan and the North Atlantic Pact. Conroy said that in holding this opinion the CCL was in line with the thinking of 95% of the Canadian people. The only opposition "Was coming from the Communist Labor Progressive Party" which polled one-half of 1% of the votes in the recent Federal election.

Workers, opposed a constitutional change which increased the CIO per capita from 5 cents to 8 cents—earmarked two cents for Southern Drive and one cent for general organizational and other purposes of CIO—Murray remarked:

"It is a very fortunate circumstance that you are not president of this organization today or you would recognize these problems just a little better than you do."

AFTER THE CIO convention, Murray became ill and eventually had an appendectomy. This did not stop the Left from attacking him viciously.

It mounted to a crescendo by April 1949.

Down in Birmingham, Ala., there is a suburb called Bessemer. The iron ore workers had for years been members of the Mine-Mill Union. They became disgusted with the Commie-line tactics of Mine-Mill's leadership and petitioned the Steelworkers to take them into membership.

Thousands of iron ore workers in Minnesota and Michigan have long been members of the Steel workers.

The Steelworkers, reluctant to act, asked the Bessemer group to try to solve its problem within Mine-Mill. The workers tried, but to no avail. They again asked the Steelworkers for aid, were told to try again. One local joined the AFL.

The national CIO, fearing these workers would be lost to CIO, granted them local industrial union charters.

TEMPERS FLARED during the campaign. One night, both sides broadcast programs from the same radio studio, one after the other. Maurice Travis, secretary-treasurer of Mine-Mill came out after participating in the early part of the second broadcast. In the foyer, he met George Elliott, president of one of the locals which wanted to leave Mine-Mill.

Travis called Elliott a filthy name. Elliott had withheld his anger previously when called names by Mine-Mill officials and organizers. But, this was too much, he struck Travis two or three times, knocking him over a desk.

The party network moved fast. Murray was bombarded with telegrams from as far away as Hawaii within eight hours. He was accused of personally ordering the blows which Elliott had struck. He was called a dictator, a friend of the Ku Klux Klan, anti-Negro Brownshirt, a Fascist, everything that came to the minds of the party. Just before the election, Negro workers at Bessemer were told that Murray took his orders from the Pope of Rome.

While none of the charges against Murray had an iota of truth in them—except that he follows the Pope in matters affecting his religion—Murray ordered a thorough investigation of the incident that the Commies were blowing up into an international event.

The investigation, made by men Murray told not to do any white-washing, showed that the Mine-Mill charges were without foundation. The fact that Travis later had to have an eye removed did not alter this conclusion. His use of language was to blame, nothing else.

At the same time, a bitter campaign was being carried on against Pres. Reuther and the Auto Workers by the Farm Equipment Union and the same general methods were used.

The CIO board meeting in Washington in May, took up the matter of the Bessemer incident and, with the Left screaming, denounced Mine-Mill as having used "vilification calumny, slander against and disloyalty to Murray and CIO." Only the left refused to believe the obvious facts.

THAT BOARD meeting was another historic milestone in CIO history. The board did these things:

1. Adopted, after vigorous debate, a policy resolution which stated that:

"All members of the board who are unwilling to enforce the constitution and carry out the instructions of the convention and, between conventions, the decisions of the board, are called upon to resign.

"All unions affiliated with CIO who are represented on this board by members unwilling to (do the above) are called upon to insist upon the resignation of such representatives and to nominate successor representatives who are willing and will comply."

2. Issued Steelworkers charter to the five Bessemer locals.

3. Ordered the Farm Equipment Union to merge with UAW or face possible revocation of its charter at the CIO convention late this month.

4. Withdrew from the Communist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions after Carey and other CIO representatives gave first-hand testimony on the Communist actions in WFTU. Authorized CIO participation in formation of a new democratic world group.

5. Indorsed the Atlantic Pact as an aid for peace. (The Communists are strongly opposed to the Atlantic Pact, the Marshall Plan and other proposals which would keep nations free of Communist rule.)

6. Granted a charter to the Communications Workers over some left-wing opposition, which has since grown.

7. After the Left was soundly rebuked by General Counsel Arthur Goldberg for spreading misleading stories and misstatements on CIO's labor bill position, approved a resolution reiterating CIO's support of the Thomas-Lesinski Bill.

Opposition to those measures varied between nine and eleven votes.

NEXT CAME the UE convention, where the Right Wing mobilized the highest opposition vote it has ever amassed. And, after the convention, it was proved the Right Wing, which has the complete support of Carey in his capacity as a UE member and former UE president, would have won had not a number of Left Wing delegates defied orders of their local membership and voted left.

The Right Wing conference formed itself into a permanent body and voted to send a committee to Murray to assure him that it wished to stay within CIO.

That action was taken because the convention had voted to authorize the UE board to withhold CIO per capita if Murray does not yield to a UE ultimatum.

* * *

So now the issues go before the CIO convention, which opens Monday, October 31, in the Public Auditorium at Cleveland.

CIO, Administration Gear For Fight To Confirm Olds

CIO JOINED the Administration last week in a last-ditch fight to win Senate confirmation of Leland Olds, named by Pres. Truman for a third term as head of the important Federal Power Commission.

Olds, under a barrage-attack from gas and electric utility lobbies because of his consumer-minded regulation of rates charged by the companies, was turned down by a 10-2 vote of the Senate Commerce Committee. Only Sen. Myers (D., Pa.) and Sen. Magnuson (D., Wash.) voted for Olds.

The fight to overrule the Committee on the Senate floor received strong support from the Democratic National Committee. Chairman William Boyle, Jr., sent telegrams to heads of the party's state organizations asking them "to let their Senators know that the people want Olds confirmed."

Boyle said that Olds, during his past 10 years' service on the Power Commission, has stood "for the best interests of the general public in the public utility field. Defeat of his nomination would be a defeat for the millions of Americans who are entitled to fair power rates and a victory for the power lobbyists and the Republican party."

Boyle's statement was backed up by Pres. Truman, in the form of a letter to Senators and in outspoken remarks at his press conference. The President said that opposition to Olds comes from "powerful corporations."

CIO's position was stated in a letter to all Senators from Pres. Murray. It said:

"The issue is oil. If the oil industry succeeds in removing Olds from the Power Commission, it will have gained a major victory in its campaign to escape federal regulation of the price it charges for natural gas. The stakes are enormous.

"Through increased prices of gas at least eight billion dollars will be added to the value of oil companies' known gas reserves. Consumers will pay hundreds of millions of dollars a year in higher gas bills.

"The vote of the Senate on Leland Olds will determine whether oil will again stain the public record.

"The President said: 'We cannot allow great corporations to dominate the commissions which have been created to regulate them.'

"There are the real issues on which you will vote when the confirmation of Olds is before you."

Washington experts say that some two billion dollars are involved in the fate of the Olds appointment. As chairman of the FPC, Olds has headed a 3-2 majority which has stood consistently for protection of the consumers in matters of gas and electric power rates.

Defeat of Olds, and selection of a less militant or experienced person to the Commission, would be a tremendous victory for the power and gas interests—and it would undoubtedly spur industry demands by the industry's lobby for higher rates.

Second Press Agent Quits AMA in Disgust

By DONALD WOODS

FOR THE second time in two years the American Medical Association has been denounced by one of its own press agents for its tactics, in fighting President Truman's health insurance law.

This second blast may be enough to upset the applecart of Whitaker and Baxter, the $100,000 a year team of professional promoters who have taken over since the exit of famed Dr. Morris Fishbein, editor of the AMA Journal.

David Brown, former editor of Liberty Magazine, who after a few weeks with the medical association as $15,000 a year editorial director of their campaign, resigned because he disapproved of their tactics in fighting the President's health insurance program.

The story of Brown's break with the AMA was reported exclusively by Robert S. Allen in his syndicated coumn for the New York Post. Allen had a copy of Brown's letter of resignation and knew what he was writing.

But the story threw AMA headquarters into a turmoil, and it claimed it had fired Brown, "because the quality of his work was unsatisfactory and because he sought to act, without authority, as a spokesman for American medicine on matters of policy."

Brown refuse to comment publicly in any way on his break with the AMA. He disclosed that in order to protect his former client he had made no public announcement of his resignation, and had only disclosed it to Allen when the columnist, an old friend, called to ask about it.

Brown's resignation and the furore resulting from it tossed the AMA into the most serious jam it has experienced since taking on the fight against national health insurance. The most damaging aspect of the whole affair was that it was the second time that it—a professional organization of doctors—had been denounced for unprofessional tactics by its own press agents within two years, or a little more.

IN 1947 THE firm of Raymond Rich Associates, which had been handling publicity for the AMA, resigned with a public protest even more biting than Brown's.

Rich charged the AMA was using dishonest tactics in connection with medical economics, and obviously was putting the selfish interests of doctors above the public interest.

Rich said he was quitting because the AMA had failed to adopt his recommendations to:

"Seek the truth on the economic and social aspects of medicine;

"Put the public first; and

"Become adequate to its responsibilities."

In a letter to the 150 members of the AMA House of Delegates, Rich explained he was quitting because the AMA hierarchy had ignored a year-old mandate from the House of Delegates to adopt Rich's proposals. His protest substantiated the charge of AMA critics that the AMA hierarchy rather than the House of Delegates really rules the AMA.

HolidayCARE Packs Ready

AN "EXCELLENT and timely" way for CIO members to express American solidarity with European trade unionists, is to send them the new CARE Holiday packages, states Irving Abramson, chairman of the National CIO Community Services Committee.

Recently returned from a two-month trip of Europe, Abramson said he was appalled by the "very grim" lot of European labor. Wages are too low to cover living costs, he said, and "workers and their families are generally existing on near-starvation levels."

As for the unemployed, the aged and war-maimed, Abramson said their existence is "indescribably precarious." In many cases, he stated, the aid sent by the CIO-CSC through CARE trade unionists literally constituted the difference between starvation and life.

The new CARE holiday package, priced at $13.50, which features a whole canned turkey, can be ordered for Thanksgiving or Christmas delivery, Abramson pointed out. Orders can be sent to the CIO Community Services Committee, 1776 Broadway, New York 19, or directly to the CIO Representative, CARE, 20 Broad St., New York 5, N. Y.

To insure delivery for Thanksgiving or Christmas, the packages are already being stockpiled in CARE's European warehouses. Delivery is guaranteed to Austria, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Finland, France, Germany (American, British, French zones and all Berlin), Great Britain, Greece, Italy, Holland, Norway and Poland.

Like all other CARE food and textile parcels, the Holiday Package can be ordered for designated friends and relatives or for needy trade unionists to be selected by CIO representatives abroad.

CP-Line Parley

Cold War With Russia Is 'Suicidal'

THE CURRENT cold war against Russia is "suicidal," delegates to the Communist-line Natl. Labor Conference for Peace declared in a letter to be sent to Pres. Philip Murray of the CIO and AFL Pres. William Green.

The conference, a permanent organization with headquarters in Chicago, announced its determination to carry its campaign against U. S. foreign policy to every major industrial area in the country.

Conference spokesmen said an estimated 3500 persons heard Henry Wallace and Paul Robeson at a mass meeting. Fred Stover, president of the Iowa Farmers Union, and Congressman Vito Marcantonio of New York also spoke.

The letter drafted by the conference urged American-Russian conferences to settle antagonism, outlaw use of atomic weapons, seek universal disarmament, defend civil rights, and expand trade with Russia and its satellites.

BERNARD V. McGROARTY of Local 22, AFL Stereotypers, Cleveland, one of the conference founders, was elected honorary chairman. Sam Curry, president of the huge Armour local of the United Packinghouse Workers-CIO in Chicago, was named president. Jim Wishart, CIO Fur & Leather Workers' district research director, is executive secretary of the conference.

Wishart said that the sponsors and most of the delegates to the conference were "rank and filers." No big-name Communist line unionists played public roles. The twelve CIO unions who are under fire for violating "CIO policy" were among the chief pushers of the conference.

A "committee of 100" was nominated to operate the conference, but Wishart said that their names would not be released until all acceptances were received.

NINE TO ONE FOR STRIKE: Chrysler workers in a referendum authorized the CIO Auto Workers to call a strike if necessary. Their desire to back their negotiators was even greater than their fellow members at Ford who authorized a strike by a seven to one majority. This picture shows the counting of the ballots. The big pile is naturally the "yes" votes.

OWIU Wins 2 Rounds In Firing of 300

THE CIO OIL Workers Intl. Union last week won two rounds in its battle with NLRB General Counsel Robert N. Denham to obtain the reinstatement of more than 300 men fired almost a year ago by the major oil companies in California.

The men were fired on the grounds that they had committed acts of violence during a strike. OWIU disputes this contention and declares that the men were discharged because they were active union members.

The union won the first round when a NLRB trial examiner ordered the reinstatement of 40 men fired by the Standard Oil Co. of California at its Richmond, Cal., plant. The company had fired 56 men.

The second round was in Washington, D. C., where Denham told OWIL General Counsel Lindsay P. Walden that he has ordered Regional NLRB Directors Reginald Brown, San Francisco, and Howard Le Baron, Los Angeles, to issue complaints of unfair labor practices against the companies involved in the firing of the additional 253 men.

THE ONE case against Standard was the only one of a half dozen that Denham did not stop by ordering the records transferred to his office.

Denham said that he was holding the other cases because "many of the questions involved" would be answered in the Standard case.

The union contends that this was a "phony" excuse since no questions of law were involved and that the dispute between it and Standard concerned only questions of facts, which could not set a pattern for the rest of the cases.

OWIU's executive council last August urged President Truman to fire Denham because it claimed that he was using dictatorial powers under the T-H Act to refuse hearings in the cases. The council wired Truman:

"We understand that the 'deal' to stop these hearings in the interest of these ruthless employes was consummated through Washington lobbyist Gerard Reilly and Denham's close friend and former associate, Charles M. Brooks (who is now labor counsel for the Texas Company, one of the companies involved)."

Reilly is a former NLRB member who helped frame the T-H Act.

Since then the union has been continuing its fight to have Denham fired, and to get action on the cases. The day before Denham told Walden that he had sent the five cases back to the NLRB regional directors, OWIL's executive council wired President Truman asking that immediate hearings be held on the cases.

OWIU HAS another quarrel with Denham which came to a climax after the intervention of President Truman was requested last August.

It concerns 800 employes whom Union Oil Co., Los Angeles, failed to rehire after the settlement of a strike last March.

More than a month ago NLRB Regional Director La Baron recommended issuance of a complaint against the firm, but Denham overruled him.

Following an informal hearing before Denham at which Walden and company representatives were present, Denham said that he would issue a decision "within a few days," according to the OWIU attorney. Walden said following the conclusion of the hearing:

"NLRB cases should be allowed to run their natural course in the regional offices because under the board rule the regional director is charged with the duty of issuing complaints rather than the general counsel. This delay works a great injustice on the union by requiring us to bring to Washington cases and evidence that should be handled by the local board officer."

The five cases of unfair labor practices which Denham said he had sent back to the regional offices are against the Texas Co., Los Angeles; Tide Water, near San Francisco; Shell Oil Co., Martinez and Long Beach; Shell Chemical Corp., Martinez, and Standard Oil Co. of California, El Segundo.

Steelworker Gets ECA Post

HARRY L. BROGLIA of Lorain, Ohio, a member of the CIO Steelworkers, has been appointed a special labor consultant to the ECA Mission in Italy by Economic Cooperation Administrator Paul G. Hoffman.

He will assist Thomas Lane, labor adviser to the Mission. The two American labor men will tour Italy to give what assistance they can to a new labor committee formed to unify the non-communist trade unions.

From 1943 to 1945 Broglia was president of the City Council and Vice-Mayor of Lorain. He joined the CIO Steelworkers in 1939 and still is an official of the union.

An active participant in civic affairs, Broglia has served in Lorain on boards of the CIO War Chest, the War Housing Committee, the American Red Cross, the Nursery School Board and others.

Transport Service Wins Reynolds Poll

The CIO Transport Service Employes was chosen collective bargaining agent for employes of the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. plant in Greensboro, N. C. in a NLRB election. The left-wing Food and Tobacco Workers, which formerly represented employes at the plant, received 28 votes.

NAM 'Pre-Tests' The News

The Natl. Association of Manufacturers has launched a new service designed to flood its propaganda into every worker's home.

It's called the "Service for Employee Publications," and it is being sent to the editors of corporation house-organs — a group of publications with circulation which the NAM estimates at over 40 million.

The "Service" is described by the NAM as a "pre-tested aid to editors." It was announced by J. W. Kinsman, duPont vice-president who heads the NAM's public relations advisory committee.

The NAM News quotes "rave" accounts of the new syndication service from many corporation officials who edit their firm's house organ publication for employes.

Final Vote Is Due On 75c Bill

THE 81ST CONGRESS may end its marathon first session by the end of this week.

Its record is neither as bright as optimists hoped for last January, nor as sorry as it appeared in early summer when Republicans were hoping for adjournment on a do-nothing basis.

Of primary interest to labor, in what may be the final week of the session, is final action on the important Wage-Hour law amendments.

Senate and House versions of the bill to lift minimum pay from 40c to 75c have been in a joint conference committee for some time. The House bill seriously weakens the present law's coverage and enforcement provisions; the Senate bill is considerably better.

Meetings of the committee were delayed for a time because of the death of the mother of Rep. Brehm (R.O.), but sessions are scheduled for Tuesday and Wednesday of this week. Final action on a single version of the bill is hoped for late this week.

THE HOUSE, having passed the social security bill, had little of importance left on its schedule.

The Senate faces a possibly bitter struggle on the displaced persons bill, long since passed by the House. An unusual motion to discharge the Senate Judiciary Committee from consideration of the bill comes up early this week. A close vote is expected, but the outcome is uncertain because of the absence of many Senators from the capital.

The bill would increase the number of war refugees permitted to enter the country, and would liberalize provisions in the present law which have been critcized as full of racial and religious bias. Sen. Pat McCarran (D. Nev.), committee chairman, has been critical of the bill and has extended hearings over many months.

Leading figures from both parties have supported the almost unprecedented move of discharging the committee from further consideration of the bill.

ONE SUBJECT that might have caused long debate—in view of the Senate's failure early this year to achieve real modernization of its rules—was the civil rights program. But Administration leaders and the White House agreed that these issues—polltax, anti-lynching and FEPC—would go over to the next session.

Gathering a bit of unaccustomed speed in view of the possible Oct. 15 adjournment, the Senate passed a bill of considerable importance to farmers—particularly those in more remote areas. It provides for loans by the Rural Electrification Administration to small phone companies for improvement of rural service.

At present REA loans are limited to farm electrical power cooperatives, but the Senate's action would make possible considerable improvement in outlying phone service—much of which is pretty bad. A similar bill has already been approved by the House.

The steel strike is on. The steel companies, fabulous in wealth and their record profits, decided to defy the report of the Fact-Finding Board and jeopardize the economy of the nation on the false premises of insisting that workers contribute to pensions, while the steel magnates themselves do not contribute and get exorbitant pensions.

We are confident that under the leadership of President Murray, his associates and staff, they will come through to victory. The strike is solid.

Pres. Walter P. Reuther reports that the Auto Workers have gained a pension plan with no employe contribution.

CIO Enjoys Hen, Goose

The CIO shot at a hen, killed a goose, and enjoyed both at the Hickory Fabric Co., Hickory, N. C.

In a report to George Baldanzi, Director of the CIO's Southern Organizing Campaign, North Carolina Director Bill Smith reported 150 Hickory employes struck when four plant organizing committeemen were discharged.

In a short time the four men were back, and the company signed a stipulation recognizing the CIO Textile Workers as sole collective bargaining agent in the plant as well.

Los Angeles Guild Supports CIO Policy

The Los Angeles Newspaper Guild (CIO), without a dissenting vote, approved four moves to back national CIO policy. The Guild voted to affiliate with the California-National CIO-PAC; to take no part in the coming convention of the CIO State Council, which has opposed CIO policy; to stop monthly donations to the State Council; to move to disaffiliate from the State Council.

Colo. CIO Delegates HelpPicket

DELEGATES to the Colorado CIO convention, after adjourning their two-day sessions at Pueblo, immediately joined CIO Steelworkers' picket line at the Colorado Fuel & Iron plant.

Approximately 125 delegates and visitors attended the convention, which gave hearty support to Natl. CIO policy and pledged itself to intensified PAC activity.

Among the guest speakers were State. Sen. Leroy Purdy; PAC West Coast Dir. George Roberts; Gov. Lee W. Knous, of Colorado; Michael Soldren, CIO Steelworkers sub district director; Lindsay Walden, CIO Oil Workers general counsel; and Luther Slinkard, Auto Workers sub regional director.

"It was a very constructive and harmonious convention," commented CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda.

Re-elected to their council posts were Pres. O. G. McTavish and Secy-Treas. Eugene Rosati.

Rival Unions Join Forces

IN AN UNPRECEDENTED move for the packinghouse industry, two rival CIO and AFL unions have agreed to act jointly in contract talks with the Big Four meat packers.

It was the first time the two unions — together representing 100,000 workers—have combined against the industry giants. The move is designed to prevent either union from concluding an agreement which could undercut the other's negotiations.

In a joint statement, CIO Packinghouse Workers Pres. Ralph Helstein and AFL Meat Cutters Pres. Earl Jimerson said the two unions had been in negotiations since July 7, but that there is no indication "that the companies are willing to work out fair and reasonable agreements."

The statement accused the Big Four of intent to destroy the unions and deliberate attempts to "promote industrial strife."

"We have compromised our original proposals to a point where a reasonable attitude by the packers would have meant a speedy settlement," he said.

"The refusal by the companies to negotiate agreements with the two unions can only be regarded as a deliberate attempt to promote industrial strife."

The union heads said they are calling a number of conferences of representatives from their locals to chart the future course of action.

CIO contracts with Armour, Swift and Cudahy have been extended indefinitely during the negotiations. At Wilson, however, there has been no contract since the company abrogated it in August 1948.

The union has filed unfair labor charges against Wilson, and is conducting a "Don't Buy Wilson Meat" campaign in an effort to make the company conclude an agreement.

House Votes To Increase Security Payments, Coverage

THE SOCIAL security system is headed for sweeping improvement early next year.

With the House on record by a 333-14 vote for big increases in social security benefits and coverage, the Senate is expected to give the subject quick attention during the second session of the 81st Congress, which convenes in January.

The House vote—following only two days of debate—was a victory for labor, old-age and citizens groups which have long been pressing for modernization of the whole social security setup.

In passing H.R. 6000, the House moved to wipe out the damage caused by the Gearhart bill, which the 80th Congress passed last year over Pres. Truman's veto, and to bring 11 million more persons under the system's coverage.

Benefits will go up, when Congress is through with HR 6000, not only for those who draw old-age benefits in the future but for those persons already in retirement. The increases will amount to an estimated 70% for those now drawing benefits, and about 80% for those who do so in the future.

MINIMUM POSSIBLE benefits would rise from $10 a month to $25, and the maximum payment available to a family would rise from $85 to $100 a month.

Two important changes were written into the bill that the House adopted. One permits a retired worker to earn up to $50 a month on the side without forfeiting their benefits. The other provides full benefits for persons totally and permanently disabled, regardless of their age.

THE HIGHER benefits will be financed by an increase in social security tax deductions, but under the present law these were scheduled to go up anyway.

Thus the rate will jump next Jan. 1 from 1% of the first $3000 of annual earnings to 1½% and to 2% on January 1, 1952.

If the House-passed bill is approved by the Senate, the 2% rate will come into effect a year earlier, at the beginning of 1951. Employers pay a similar amount for each employe into the social security kitty.

Under the proposed changes in the law, the tax will be collected on the first $3600 of each person's income, rather than the first $3000.

Of importance to millions of veterans is a provision in the House-approved bill which gives them a $160-a-month wage credit for the period they served in the armed forces. This will have the effect of speeding the time when these persons are eligible for benefits, and will increase the amount in their social security accounts.

House passage of the bill was hailed by Administration leaders, although in some respects the measure fell short of original requests for expansion and improvement. The President had asked for doubling of present benefits, and inclusion of both farmers and farm workers. Neither of these provisions was adopted by the House Ways and Means Committee.

That group heid extended hearings on the bill, and studied the measure in closed session for several months.

Only two Democrats and 12 Republicans opposed the bill on final passage, but just before the last vote the Republicans offered a "go-slow" substitute measure. This was defeated by 232-112, with the vote generally following strict party lines.

JUST BEFORE the vote, CIO Pres. Philip Murray sent letters to all members of the House in which he called for "overwhelming support of this bill."

Murray said the CIO would have preferred "a more liberal bill," such as the Administration called for originally, since such a measure would have made social security "almost universal" and "about doubled average benefits."

Murray accused Republican members of the House Ways and Means Committee, who introduced an alternate bill, with "partisan politics . . . jeopardizing action that is long overdue."

The CIO president predicted that passage of HR 6000 would "give much assurance and faith to millions of Americans."

Then, in reference to pension and welfare issues in the current steel strike, Murray added:

"The companies which have refused to meet our collective bargaining demands also have opposed improved legislation. We challenge them now to change their minds and give public support to the majority bill.

"But regardless of their action, the people of this nation know that adequate security is possible and essential, and they will establish it both through collective bargaining and legislation."

They Voted 'No'

Here are the 14 Congressmen who voted against improving the social security system by passage of HR 6000:

Republicans: Byrnes (Wis); Case (S. Dak.); Church (Ill.); Clevenger (O.); Crawford (Mich.); Eaton (N. J.); Gwinn (N. Y.); McMillen (Ill.); Mason (Ill.); Smith (Kans.); Taber (N. Y.).

Democrats: Davis (Ga.); Smith (Va.).

CHEERED BY 15,000 STEELWORKERS, CIO and Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray pledges Youngstown, Ohio, strikers that the walkout will continue until the industry comes across with non-contributory pensions and insurance. First in a series of personal reports to the Steelworkers, Murray's speech lambasted steel captains' "hypocrisy" in providing themselves with fat, non-contributory pensions, while denying them to workers and charging that they are "Socialistic." AFL's Bill Green and the Communists also got raked over coals. Both are sniping at union's fight for security. Meanwhile, a number of fabricating plants have signed up to avert fate of basic steel. (See Pages 2 and 3 for additional details.)

DUTY AND PLEASURE: Thanks to the generosity of a merchant, CIO Steelworkers picketing one of the gates of the Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corp., Gary, Ind., enjoyed the television broadcast of the World Series.

Murray On Tour, Pledges Strike Until Victory

TO THE enthusiastic cheers of 15,000 striking CIO Steelworkers, CIO and Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray last week pledged that "before long we will all be very happy.

"The strike will be over; the United Steelworkers of America will emerge the victor; the American people will be the beneficiaries. This is a struggle for everybody, a struggle for security against poverty, hardship and degradation."

The union head was addressing a mass meeting of strikers in Youngstown, Ohio, first in a series of scheduled grass roots reports to the union membership.

Two days later Murray addressed 25,000 at historic Homestead, Pa.

The strikers have reduced their demands to the "positive irreducible minimum," Murray said at Youngstown, and promised that the strike would continue until the steel companies agreed to non-contributory pensions and insurance.

Now in its third week, the walkout by 500,000 basic steel employes began Oct. 1 after three postponements by the union.

Union Officials Go Payless

"There is not a man in this organization who will receive a dime in salary until this strike is won," Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray said last week.

Neither Murray nor any other paid officers of the union are receiving salaries during the strike.

"Our enemies have been trying to paint us as grasping people who are in this union for what we can get out of it . . ." Murray said.

"As for me, I will work until I die for the people I love. And I will work in the spirit of complete self-sacrifice."

Among the throng listening to Murray were many aged steelworkers who wore tags bearing the slogan: "I Need a Pension."

What particularly angered the union head was what he termed the "hypocrisy" of the industry in publicly denouncing non-contributory pensions as "socialistic," while at the same time providing non-contributory pensions for executives.

Apparently, Murray said, the industry believed that socialism should begin at $50,000 a year pensions.

Murray let his vocabulary run freely as he described AFL Pres. William Green as "an old faddy-doodle who has never rendered a public service in his life;" U. S. Steel Financial Committee Chmn. Enders Voorhees as a "flatulent blatherskite" and a "sanctimonious hypocrite;" and the industry's leaders in general as "stupid recalcitrants" and "bloated magnates with their red faces."

The attack on Green was in response to Green's numerous slighting references to the steel fact-finding board recommendations and slurs on the steel union for agreeing to forego a wage increase.

When the CIO first launched its 1949 wage drive, Green sneered at the objective. He insisted this is no time for labor to be pressing for wage boosts.

NO NEGOTIATING talks have been held since the strike began. Anxious to start the ball rolling, U. S. Mediation & Conciliation Chief Cyrus Ching began his efforts to get the disputants together by talking informally with Bethlehem. Ching said U. S. Steel, Republic, Jones & Laughlin and Youngstown Sheet & Tube were next on his list. Afterwards, he will confer with the union.

Threat of an extension of the strike to steel fabricating plants, employing almost another 500,000, has so far brought about 12 companies in line with the union's demands for pensions and insurance.

Among the steel fabricators plants which have settled are American Can, Blaw-Knox, H. H. Robertson, Massey-Harris, Ingersoll-Rich Products, Adamson Tank, Heppenstall Co.; Pittsburgh Coal & Washer; Central Iron & Steel; Kaiser; Pfaudler Co., and Roebling.

Conference Unit Approves 75c Wage Measure

A compromise wage-hour bill providing a 75-cent minimum wage has been approved by the House-Senate conference committee.

Sen. Pepper (D, Fla.), one of the sponsors of the Senate bill, said the compromise measure would give between 1 and 1½ million persons wage increases totaling $3,000,000 a year.

The bill would be effective 90 days after passage. Coverage would be extended to employes of retail stores, small logging companies and small country newspapers.

The bill is an improvement over the House version in two respects. The House bill would exclude from coverage persons whose jobs are not "dispensable" to production. The language was changed in the compromise version to provide coverage for those "directly essential" to production.

Another improvement would empower the Wage-Hour Administrator to file suits in behalf of workers for back-pay claims.

FE-UE Merger Plan Reported As Leftists Urge "Unity"

THERE WERE two important developments in the pro and anti-Commie battle within the CIO last week as opposing groups tightened their battle lines in preparation for a head-on clash at the Oct. 31-Nov. 4 CIO convention.

They were:

1. A member of the Farm Equipment Workers Executive Board revealed the Board had voted in late September to merge FE with the Electrical Workers in defiance of a CIO directive.

2. Some 100 left-wingers, meeting in Cleveland, sent an appeal to CIO Pres. Philip Murray to maintain "unity" within the CIO and to restore "democracy and autonomy."

The FE-UE merger plan was revealed by Peter Aversa of Auburn, N. Y., president of FE District 6 and a member of the national FE Board.

AVERSA ANNOUNCED that officers and members of District have "completely rejected" the FE Board's merger decision.

Announcement of the merger plan brought from CIO Vice Pres. and Dir. of Organization Allan S. Haywood a sharp rebuke to both FE and UE.

He said the CIO would give "full support and sympathy" to officers and members of FE District 6 and added:

"If the UE Executive Board approves the FE merger plan it will be acting directly contrary to a CIO directive."

Aversa, after meeting at CIO headquarters with Haywood, issued the following statement:

"AT A MEETING in Chicago September 27-30, the Executive Board of the Farm Equipment and Metal Workers, CIO, of which I am a member, voted to arrange immediate affiliation of our union with the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers Union, an organization which has been in sharp conflict with national CIO policy.

"This action of the Board was taken without sanction of any sort from the membership of the FE. The action, further, was in complete defiance of the directive from the CIO Executive Board to merge the FE with the United Automobile Workers.

"This action of the FE-CIO Executive Board will meet sharp resistance, I am sure, from the great majority of members of my union who approve and support the policies of the CIO and wish to continue their affiliation within the ranks of unions supporting CIO policy.

"A meeting of officers, shop stewards and rank-and-file members of District 6 has instructed me to oppose this latest move of the FE Executive Board and to seek a continuance of our functioning under the jurisdiction of the National CIO.

"I am certain that members of other districts of the union will, as soon as they are advised of this action by the FE Executive Board, react similarly in opposition to merger with the UE."

Haywood declared:

"This attempt to affiliate FE with UE does not have the approval of the CIO. The National CIO looks with complete sympathy and understanding upon the efforts of the officers and members of District 6, FE-CIO, to resist and reject any move to bring their union into another union having no jurisdiction in this field.

"This action by the FE-CIO Executive Board completely confirms the estimate of the National CIO that the FE is lacking in sufficient strength to stand on its own as a national union. In the interest of the workers involved, the CIO Executive Board has directed the FE to affiliate with the United Automobile Workers. In seeking to dodge that directive, the leaders of the FE are attempting to bring their union into an organization that is not in the farm equipment field and cannot have an understanding of its basic problems.

"The CIO continues to believe that the farm equipment workers should be united within the ranks of a powerful union to which other farm equipment workers belong, and we offer our full support and sympathy to the members and officers of FE, District 6, in their efforts to subscribe to the CIO's policy and to stay within its ranks."

(The UE Executive Board at the last day of its recent convention held an unpublicized meeting at which it paved the way for a merger with FE and other unions. See story on page 8).

The "unity" appeal to Murray from the Cleveland meeting of left-wingers came only a short time after considerable newspaper speculation on the possibilities of the pro-Commies "taking a walk" on their own volition from CIO and establishing a third labor federation.

John Williamson, national labor secretary of the Communist Party, said in the Oct. 4 issue of the Daily Worker that the CP opposed the "taking a walk" idea.

"The splitting of CIO and resultant establishment of a so-called Third Trade Union Center would be injurious and would weaken the fighting power of all labor," Williamson said.

Secy.-Treas. Maurice Travis of the Mine-Mill union told the Cleveland meeting that his organization did not want to leave the CIO and that if expelled would try to reaffiliate.

Murray Calls Steel's Opposition to Non-Contributory Pensions 'Smoke Screen' To Impose Wage Cuts

The shallowness of the steel industry's position in refusing to grant non-contributory pensions and social insurance to its employes was exposed by CIO and Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray in an address over the American Broadcasting System network Oct. 12.

Portions of the spech follow:

HERE IS PART of the crowd of Steelworkers from mills of the Mahoning and Shenango Valleys who heard CIO and Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray at Youngstown, Ohio, where he delivered the first of a series of speeches on the steel strike. They stood for more than two hours in the center of the park as mercury soared to 85 degrees and the sun beat down on them. Many elderly steel workers wore tags saying, "I need a pension."

THE UNITED Steelworkers of America, which I am privileged to represent, has done everything within its power to avert this strike. The Union labored night and day since June 15—the opening date of our contracts—to conclude a fair settlement.

The steel industry, on the other hand, made no genuine effort to reach agreement with the union.

The industry, in the original collective bargaining conferences with the Union, said "No" to the union on wages; "No" to the union on decent social insurances; and "No" to the union on pensions. The industry never offered any real counter-proposals to the union.

Industry To Blame

The collective bargaining conference broke down because of this stubborn refusal on the part of the industry to bargain in good faith with the union. The President of the United States thereupon, in an effort to avert a nationwide steel strike, requested both the industry and the union to appear before a public board appointed by him to investigate the facts and make recommendations for a fair and equitable settlement of the dispute.

The union, conscious of its obligations to the national interest, promptly accepted this Presidential request. The industry initially said "No" to the President of the United States, just as it had previously said "No" to the union. Finally, the industry reluctantly accepted only after the President of the United States, in a wire to the industry, stated "Surely you are not afraid to have your side of this dispute examined in the public interest?"

The union was anxious to present the merits of its proposals for a wage increase, for decent social insurance, and for adequate pensions to the public. The union was not afraid to have its side of the dispute examined in the public interest. The industry, on the other hand, was desperately anxious to conceal the facts from impartial scrutiny. The 19 leading companies in the industry amassed profits in 1948 in excess of 600 million dollars after all taxes. Profits in 1949 continue at even a higher rate. These exhorbitant profits are the result of exploitation of the American people through too high prices and of employes in the industry through neglect of the industry's social responsibilities.

The industry was therefore afraid to have an impartial board inquire into its too high profits, its too high prices, and its backward working conditions. The union was not afraid.

The union's presentation to the Board was factual and well-documented. The union sought to throw light on the issues of the case. The industry's presentation on the other hand, was provocative and designed to intimidate the Board.

Notwithstanding these threats of the industry, the Board proceeded to hear all of the testimony offered by both sides to the dispute. After due deliberation the Board, on September 10, 1949 issued its report and recommendations.

In its report the Board recommended as a fair and equitable settlement of the issue in dispute that (1) the union withdraw its wage demand; (2) that a non-contributory social insurance plan costing 4c per hour per worker be established to be paid for by the industry; and (3) that a non-contributory pension plan costing 6c per hour per worker be established to be paid for by the industry.

The Board found "that the steel companies, under present conditions and under presently forseeable conditions appear able to afford this and still put into effect—price reductions."

The union was keenly disappointed with that part of the recommendations of the Board denying the union's just wage demands. Nevertheless, in the national interest and for the purpose of averting a steel strike, the union accepted the recommendations in their entirety as a fair and equitable settlement of the dispute. The steel industry, however, with a few notable exceptions, has refused to accept the recommendations of the Board and to conclude a fair and equitable settlement with the union.

Unwilling Industry

The industry is unwilling to establish the modest 4c per hour non-contributory social insurance plan recommended by the Board. The industry is unwilling to establish the modest 6c per hour non-contributory pension plan recommended by the Board. No amount of double-talk can conceal the fact that it is the industry's stubborn refusal to agree upon reasonable terms of settlement which has brought about this strike.

In its report, the Steel Industry Board, appointed by the President, said:

". . . the steel companies, have, with some exceptions, overlooked the fact that the machines and plant on which the industry has prospered, and on which it must depend in the future, are not all made of metal or brick and mortar. They are also made of flesh and blood. And the human machines, like the inanimate machines, have a definite rate of depreciation.

"Of all our natural and national resources, our human resources are the most precious and useful, and should be most carefully hoarded and protected.

"These human machines need the same kind of treatment for depreciation and disability that the other machines are getting. Earnings are being used for rebuilding, replacing, and for maintaining the efficiency of plant; a part of these earnings should be used to take care of wear and tear and maintenance of the human machines in the industry—the workers."

Executive Pensions

The union accepted this recommendation of the Board. The union believes, as stated by the Board, that the steel industry has been derelict in its social responsibilities to its workers. The union believes, as the Board has found, that part of the tremendous earnings of the industry should be used to take care of wear and tear and maintenance of the human machines in the industry—the workers.

The industry sanctimoniously asserts that its refusal to accept the fair and equitable non-contributory plans recommended by the Board is a matter of principle. I deny emphatically that there is any genuine principle involved in this stand of the industry. I label it the smoke screen it obviously is. The best evidence that no real principle is involved is the fact that most of the companies in the industry provide substantial pensions for their executives on a non-contributory basis.

Benjamin F. Fairless, President of U. S. Steel who is paid a salary of $207,900 a year, will receive a pension, upon retirement at age 65, of $50,000 annually paid for by the company. A. B. Homer, President of Bethlehem, will be 65 in 1961. At his 1948 compensation of $263,280 a year, Mr. Homer will receive a pension from Bethlehem Steel of $110,460 a year to which he contributes not one cent.

The President of Allegheny-Ludlum Steel Company, Hiland G. Batcheller, recently delivered a speech before the Connecticut Manufacturers Association at New Haven, Connecticut. In this speech Mr. Batcheller declared that non-contributory social insurance and pension plans for steelworkers are definitely socialistic.

Not Socialism

A study of the financial statements of Mr. Batcheller's company, Allegheny-Ludlum, reveals an interesting inconsistency. Mr. Batcheller, upon retirement at 65, will receive retirement compensation, as a so-called consultant, for ten years at $40,000 a year. If he should die before the ten years are up this annuity will then go to his beneficiaries.

Where does socialism start, Mr. Batcheller? According to you and other spokesmen for the industry, for you to receive a $40,000 annual pension paid for solely by your company is apparently a good thing. For one of your workers to receive a modest pension is what you choose to term a "loss of freedom." Certainly no American in his right senses will be taken in by such balderdash.

All of the arguments that the companies now make against non-contributory plans were made by the industry before the Steel Industry Board. The Board rejected these arguments for the following reasons, as stated in its report:

1) The substantial trend during recent years throughout American industry has been toward non-contributory form of social insurance and pensions;

2) Non-contributory plans cover all workers in a plant or industry instead of merely those workers who can afford to forego part of their take-home pay for the purchase of such benefits;

3) Non-contributory plans prevent wage cuts while contributory plans are wage cuts in disguise;

4) Non-contributory plans promote stability; and

5) Non-contributory plans permit the purchase of greater insurance and pension plans for a lesser sum of money.

These unanimous findings of this impartial Board appointed by the President have received widespread approval in the press and by the public. Again it is the industry alone that says "no."

It seems plain that under the guise of the contributory principle the industry is really seeking to impose a wage cut on its workers. Obviously if the workers in the industry are required to contribute toward pensions, their take-home pay will be reduced to the extent of these contributions.

This is necessarily so since at present and with virtually no exceptions there are no contributory pension plans now in effect in the industry. The United Steelworkers of America cannot and will not permit any wage cut whether disguised by the false principle of contributory pensions and insurance or otherwise.

I repeat what I said at the outset—the union has done everything within its power to avert this strike. At the request of the President of the United States it agreed to three extensions totalling 77 days. At the request of the President of the United States the union gave careful consideration to the report of the Steel Industry Board and accepted the Board's recommendations as a fair and equitable settlement of the dispute.

The recommendations of the Board have been approved by public opinion. The President of the United States, speaking for the American people, has acclaimed the Board's recommendations "as a statesmanlike formula for a fair and equitable settlement of the disputes in the steel industry." The union measured up to its responsibilities in accepting this formula. The present strike could have been averted if the industry had shown a similar regard for the national interest by likewise accepting.

An Old Story, But--

The nation's top steel executives remind us somewhat of the old reprobate who lived a life of sin six days a week and then preached a fine-sounding sermon at a village church on Sunday.

After sounding off in a hell-fire-and-brimestone manner he would conclude his sermon by declaring:

"Brothers and sisters, you should do as I say, not do as I do."

This old story came to mind after we'd read a Steelworkers Union report on the fat pensions the steel executives are slated to receive when they retire.

Let's start off with the case of Pres. A. B. Homer of Bethlehem Steel, who will reach the retirement age of 65 in 1961. His pension at that date—if based on his 1948 earnings—would be $110,460 annually.

Thirteen other Bethlehem officers are scheduled to receive pensions ranging from about $9000 to more than $76,000 a year.

And all of them will be paid under the non-contributary principle to which the steel industry—including Bethlehem—says it objects most violently.

The three top men at U. S. Steel—Irving S. Olds, Enders M. Voorhees and Ben Fairless—will be in no danger of landing in the poor-house when they retire.

At the age of 65 each of them will start receiving annual pensions of $50,000 paid for entirely by U. S. Steel. They also participate in an additional contributory plan, it's true, but we have a hunch they can afford it and that the first $50,000 should cover their needs.

We could go on for some length, listing five-figure annual pensions of the steel industry's top men—the men who say they are opposed in principle to the very kind of pensions which they, themselves, will receive.

Neither Free Nor Socialistic

A number of industry leaders who receive non-contributory pensions have attempted to brand as "socialistic" the non-contributory pension plan recommended by the President's fact-finders, and a number of newspapers have been saying the Steelworkers are striking for "free" pensions.

If the industry leaders are correct (which they aren't), then they are contending that a bit of socialism is OK for the bosses but not for the workers.

And while on this point we'd like to ask the steel makers how they figure non-contributory pensions would result in "loss of freedom" for the workers but not for themselves? (Or are they willing to "lose a little freedom" at $50,000 to $75,000 a year?)

The idea that the steel companies would pay the whole cost of the pension plan sought by the union is, of course, ridiculous. There isn't any such thing as a "free pension."

The cost of a non-contributory plan would be integrated into the labor cost structure and would have a direct bearing on the rates set in wage negotiations. The worker would know before long that he was paying his share of the benefits derived.

But in the meantime the workers would have established the principle that industry should shoulder a larger portion of the responsibility for the welfare of those it employs.

As we said earlier, the double-talk of the steel executives reminds us of the old reprobate who declared:

"You should do as I say, not do as I do."

Commies Trot Out 'Unity' Again

And--Unless Party Line Changes Again--That Will Be Convention Theme

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THE COMMIES may be slightly screwy all the time and stupid part of the time, but they're seldom dull.

They can launch a new campaign at the drop of a hammer and revive an old one at the flick of a sickle.

For example:

Early this year the lefties were venting their spleen on "Philip Murray & Co." They acted as if they thought their raving and ranting would drive the CIO leader right out of the union movement.

Then the emphasis shifted to "autonomy and democracy within the CIO."

And early this month the CP began singing that old "unity" song again.

RECENTLY a couple of reporters for the "capitalist press" wrote stories indicating that the Reds intended to take a walk out of CIO and try to set up a new trade union federation.

Regarding these stories, John Williamson, the CP's national labor secretary, said in the Oct. 4 issue of the Daily Worker:

"Today, while the interests of the American people demand peace, security and the extension of democracy, anything that weakens the trade unions and the workers as the backbone of the struggle against the monopolies and pro-fascist forces would be a crime.

"The splitting of the CIO and the resulting establishment of a so-called Third Trade Union Center would be injurious and would weaken the fighting power of all labor.

"We know the many differences we have with the majority of the trade union leaders on vital domestic and world policies. However, we declare that these differences must be fought out within the ranks of the labor movement and must not be allowed to divide the workers' ranks . . ."

THAT SOUNDS like the old "unity" plea the Commies used to use—and in a recent "open letter" to Murray, Williamson said:

"We stand today as uncompromisingly as always for the unity of the labor movement."

So—unless the party line changes—the Commies and fellow travelers will show up at the CIO convention two weeks from now with a "unity" campaign.

Unfortunately, their "unity" is as phony as their "democracy" and their "autonomy." And there's always a chance that the party will flip-flop suddenly from the position outlined by Williamson.

But, flip-flop or not, the kind of "unity" the lefties want would permit them to kick the CIO leadership in its teeth, thumb their collective noses at CIO policy and still remain inside the organization.

THE COMMIES are on their way out as a force in the American labor movement and nobody knows it better than they do.

They'll continue to wave their arms and make nasty noises but they'll soon be like old Don Quixote, the fellow who did battle with a windmill.

They're on their way out because they slavishly follow a line which the average American worker can no longer tolerate.

Sure, they'll still be around and they'll be bothersome and noisy, and the line will twist and turn.

They'll still find gullible trade unionists who will follow their leadership.

But they're headed for that unenviable category known as "only a major nuisance."

Kroll Calls Taft's Line "I'm For It, But—"

SEN. ROBERT A. TAFT'S "soft FEPC bill," introduced recently, was labeled as "just another example of the senator's 'I'm for it, but—' line of thinking."

That charge was made by PAC Dir. Jack Kroll.

Kroll labeled the Taft measure a "political gesture, designed to fool those most desperately in need of honest, strict and enforceable Fair Employment Practices Legislation."

Declaring that the measure was "in no real sense an FEPC bill," Kroll added, "it is a sham . . . typical of the senator's record in public office.

"Mr. Taft's arguments have been riddled and ridiculed countless times in the past. He has proposed the same meaningless measure that the minority groups in Ohio scornfully rejected during the recent session of the Ohio Legislature.

"A Fair Employment Practices Bill without enforceable powers is just a meaningless collection of words and phrases. It enunciates a pious wish, but the hard, cold fact is that this pious wish is not new. It is a doctrine that is implicit in our Constitution and embedded in the religious teachings of all faiths. But experience has shown pious wishes aren't enough.

"Publication again of such a doctrine will serve no useful purpose and Senator Taft knows this well. We need a strong, real enforceable bill, not an 'Emasculation Proclamation' as the spineless bill was well labeled when it was before the Ohio Legislature this year.

"Mr. Taft's sudden concern with the plight of minority groups, coming as it does so near election time, is suspect on the face of it.

"But when you couple this sudden concern with the sham and shameful form Mr. Taft has used in his bill, then you have another example of the senator's 'I'm for it but—' kind of thinking.

"Mr. Taft exhibited this same brand of thinking on the subject of public housing. When it seemed politically wise to be stamped as an advocate of public housing, Mr. Taft signed his name to a housing bill.

"But when his bluff was called, and the public housing bill came up in the 80th Congress, which he controlled, the senator voted against his own bill.

"The fact that today America has a public housing bill is certainly not to the senator's credit. The measure was achieved in spite of Mr. Taft.

"Mr. Taft, who exerts considerable political pressure on his party members when he wishes, used none of that pressure in the battle to prevent filibuster-death for civil rights legislation.

"To be sure the record shows that Mr. Taft voted to ban filibusters, but the fact is that he didn't vote until it was certain that the filibuster team had a safe margin."

"By gosh, you're right!"

He Finally Took The Advice Seriously

THEY SEEMED to many persons to have little in common, but they were good friends—the machinist and the reporter.

The thing which had drawn them together was their interest in trade unions, about which they knew very little when they first met.

Eventually the machinist became the president of a CIO Rubber Workers local and the reporter became president of a local of the Newspaper Guild.

When the going got tough, as it sometimes did, they presented a solid front to their opponents. But behind the scenes they got into frequent arguments.

The reporter said the machinist was too long-winded—and the machinist said the reporter wasn't close enough to the "real people of the union movement—the guys who get their hands dirty."

THE MACHINIST'S union ran into difficulties and its president came to the reporter with a lengthy statement he had prepared for the press.

The reporter took one quick glance at it and declared, "It's too damn long! You don't need that many words to tell about the creation and end of the world.

"Be brief. If you say what you mean in a few words there's a good chance that the newspapers will carry your entire statement. But if you gave 'em that thing they'd cut it all to pieces."

They argued for a long time — and, finally, the machinist cut the statement in half.

"Now you're getting the idea, but it's still too long," grumbled the reporter.

SEVERAL YEARS later the machinist became an organizer for the CIO and the reporter became a CIO publicity man.

The organizer occasionally sent the publicity man copies of leaflets he had prepared, asking for constructive criticism.

The publicity man usually replied with comments such as:

"You couldn't even get your mother, who loves you dearly, to read such long-winded leaflets."

"I'm sorry I can't comment intelligently on your last leaflet. My eyes gave completely out on me before I got half way through what you'd written."

"Leaflet looks like classified ad section."

"If you have enough energy left after preparing such a wordy leaflet you might try reading all the way through it. Bet you a buck you're worn out before you reach the end."

GRADUALLY, AS the months passed and sharp but friendly comments were exchanged, the organizer began preparing snappy leaflets.

"Now you're getting on the ball," the publicity man said in a note to his friend. "Just a bit more brevity and you'll really knock 'em dead."

Then the organizer was shifted to a plant at which both the CIO and AFL were seeking to represent employes.

The campaign was a heated one, and near the end of it the organizer sent his old friend a note and a little pamphlet he had prepared.

The pamphlet had 16 pages, each about two by three inches, and on the front was printed, "What the AFL Can Do For You."

The 15 other pages were completely blank!

"At last—BREVITY!" said the note.

VERY BAD 'I' SIGHT!

OWIU: 'Commies, Kindly Stay Out Of Our Way'

An article in the international Oil Worker, from which the excerpts below are reprinted, was accompanied by a statement by the editor on why the article was published.

"This paper has been attending to its own affairs—publicizing activities of the OWIU and subjects of interest to OWIU members, and not wasting much of its valuable space on such unfortunate screwballs as the Communists," the paper explained.

"The editor, supported by the International officers, had figured that there just wasn't a Communist problem in OWIU, that we had no Commies in our ranks, that OWIU members were pretty smart fellows who knew enough about the Commies without any sermons from the union paper."

Now, however, the OWIU paper has become sore at the Communists: "They have called the President of this union a lot of dirty names, in print. And our position is that when anybody unfairly slanders the president of this union, he is slandering the entire union—for the president is elected by the members in democratic fashion." With that much as background, the article speaks for itself.

"THIS STRANGE lot of creatures known as Communists go about the face of the earth saying. 'We love the laboring man, we love labor unions, long live labor unions.'

"Well, OWIU is a labor union. Even its worst enemies admit that OWIU battles day in and day out to secure a better way of life for the men and women employed in the oil industry.

"But for some reason, the Communists don't love OWIU. They hate this union. It isn't quite clear why this is so. OWIU has pretty generally ignored them, has just tried to walk on a different road.

"For several months, the Commies have been blasting away at OWIU in their publications. Last fall, a big two-page spread in the West Coast Commie paper thoroughly cursed OWIU, particularly Intl. Pres. O. A. Knight and Intl. Vice-Pres. A. R. Kinstley.

"Three months ago, the California Labor Herald, which is about as red as a baboon's rear, deliberately misquoted Knight on a speech he made in California.

"And now the official communist sheet, 'The Worker,' devotes a full-page article in its Southern Edition for Sept. 18, to a dirty-name attack on OWIU and Knight. The article is written by James J. Green, executive secretary for the Communist Party in Texas. The article was datelined 'Houston, Texas.'

"THIS ITEM in The Worker hits its peak of slander when it says that 'O. A. Knight can hardly be looking the boss square in the eye and kissing his backside at the same time.' What they're saying is that Knight spends his time apple polishing with oil industry bosses instead of fighting for the workers.

(Well, we could pause here to prove that OWIU nor any of its officers have kissed any bosses' backsides, but we don't think that necessary. Readers of this paper know that in the past nine years OWIU has quadrupled its membership, vastly improved working conditions, and raised the pay of oil workers more than any other union in any other industry in the nation. Isn't that good unionism?)

"Biggest specific lie told in the article in The Worker was this, and we quote it verbatim:

'. . . in the contract signed with Sinclair Oil, the union agreed to a 36-hour week in case layoffs came—at 36 hours' pay!'

"That just isn't so. OWIU did not agree to take a cut to 36 hours with a corresponding cut in pay. It very plainly agreed that in case of layoffs, we would negotiate for a new arrangement on hours and wages.

"A MAJOR portion of the article was devoted to the old lie that the Marshall Plan, supported by OWIU, is responsible for the flood of foreign oil imports that has caused some of our members to be laid off.

"The Commie articles charge that, in effect, OWIU is encouraging foreign oil production at lower wages than we have here, thus cutting our own throats.

"But the truth is that OWIU has on several occasions contributed to foreign oil unions, so that they could build up their wages to a level closer to ours. (How many thin dimes has the Communist Party ever contributed to the actual building of foreign oil unions, Mr. Green?)

"Enough of this. We just wanted to report that for some reason we don't fully understand, the Communists are attacking the leadership of OWIU.

"It appears that the Communists are NOT our friends.

"The OWIU therefore would appreciate it if the Communists would kindly stay out of our way so that we can go right along operating this progressive, democratic trade union."

U. S. Health Survey Finds Donora Deaths Largely Preventable

A YEAR AGO more than 20 persons died in one week in Donora, Pa., and nearly half the city's population was sick because of largely preventable industrial pollution of the air, 25 scientists who investigated Donora's "smog disaster" have concluded.

Their study, made for the Division of Industrial Hygiene of the Public Health Service, was undertaken at the request of the CIO Steelworkers and the city of Donora. Their preliminary report was released to the public at a press conference in the office of Oscar R. Ewing, Federal Security Administrator.

"This report reveals for the first time," Ewing said, "that in addition to 20 deaths, the illness of 5910 persons—43% of the population—was caused by the smog which hung over Donora and the nearby community of Webster for five days beginning Oct. 27, 1948.

"We can now say positively what couldn't be said before with scientific proof—that contamination of air in industrial areas can cause serious acute disabling diseases."

Ewing said that the Donora investigation was the first exhaustive and integrated study of municipal air pollution ever made, and added that the Industrial Hygiene Division had at least 15 requests to survey other cities. Several of the scientists who worked on the Donora survey were present at the conference.

However, Ewing admitted that the survey did not mean that Donora and similar communities would automatically be shielded from future pollution disasters. Under questioning by Frank Burke, director of safety and health for the Steelworkers, he pointed out that the Division of Industrial Hygiene had no power to enforce the recommendations made in the preliminary report.

Putting the recommendations into effect was up to the American Steel & Wire Co., a U. S. Steel subsidiary owning most of the plants around Donora, the city of Donora, the Pennsylvania legislature or United Steelworkers themselves.

Burke announced that the Steelworkers, armed with the report, planned to go to American Steel & Wire and demand action. He also said that he believed the Donora city council would pass an ordnance putting the recommendations into effect. At one point the American Steel & Wire Co. shrugged off the entire disaster as an "act of God."

The engineering recommendations in the survey included nine specific instances in which American Steel & Wire could reduce the amount of poisonous or irritating matter now escaping into the air over Donora.

A 10th engineering recommendation was that a system of local weather forecasting should be established so that extreme smog conditions could be foreseen in time to allow Donora's citizens to take precautions.

One thing that makes Donora especially subject to pollution is the fact that it is located in what was described as a bowl. Under certain weather conditions, a mass of air is trapped in the bowl for days at a time while more and more matter pours into it from the factory chimneys, rendering the local atmosphere completely poisonous. This is what happened last year, the scientists found.

Another factor was housing, the survey showed. Persons in homes of inferior construction were more seriously affected by the smog than were residents of homes of good construction.

Seeks Assembly Post

Gayle L. Collins of Los Angeles, a CIO Auto Workers regional staff representative, is running for the California state assembly. His campaign manager is Harold Camp of the AFL Boilermakers.

Big Man, What Now?

Campaign Is Under Way To Repeal Walsh-Healey Act

THE WALSH - HEALEY Act, which sets employment standards on government contracts, has been on the statute books 13 years.

It authorizes the Secretary of Labor to fix the lowest rate to be paid on government contracts, bars the use of convict labor, sets up minimum standards to prevent exploitation of children and establishes health and safety regulations.

The Chamber of Commerce has seen fit to quarrel with the law and has sparked a drive by a reactionary coalition in Congress to repeal the Act, according to four CIO leaders, Presidents Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers, Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers, Jacob Potofsky of the Clothing Workers and William E. Thornton of the Shoe Workers.

One phase of the attack—in which the Chamber has been joined by Natl. Association of Manufacturers—is to postpone hearings aimed at revising outmoded standards.

In a letter to Congress, the four CIO leaders assert:

"The circulars and letters that are being used in this drive against the Walsh-Healey Act do not even attempt to argue against the purposes of this law. Instead of saying flatly and frankly that they are opposed to any effective wage and hour regulation, those putting out this material confine themselves to the customary "smear" tactics.

"They appear to be imposing on many businessmen who, instead of finding out for themselves what is in the Walsh-Healey Act and how it works, are writing letters to their Congressmen and to Goverment agencies repeating the generalized smears they have been told.

Filibuster Holds Up DP Bill

WITH SENATORS champing at the bit to get home, Sen. Harry P. Cain (R., Wash.), last week launched a filibuster in a desperate effort to kill off a bill to eliminate anti-semitic and anti-Catholic features of the Displaced Persons law.

The talkathon technique is not new to Cain, who used the same device last year to smother the public housing bill.

Democratic Majority Leader Scott W. Lucas (D., Ill.)—as the CIO News went to press—was still optimistic the bill could be passed.

Already approved by the House, the proposal would increase the number of DPs to be admitted to this country from 205,000 in two years to 339,000 in three. It would also eliminate features of the present Republican law which Pres. Truman and others term anti-semitic and anti-Catholic.

Circulation Of DW Skids

MEMBERSHIP in the American Communist party is really on the decline if the circulation figures of the Daily Worker, the party organ published at New York City, are any indication.

From the circulation statement the Worker (along with other papers) is compelled by law to issue, it was learned that the circulation is only 23,400 copies, with all seven editions counted in, which is way under what it used to be.

Actually the present figure is 4400 above what the press run was at the end of last year as the result of two party drives urging members to subscribe for friends and to order bundles for free distribution. But the permanency of these promotion results is questioned.

CIO Gets 42,655 Votes; AFL 13,885 In August NLRB Polls

CIO UNIONS ran up an impressive margin of more than three to one over the AFL in NLRB collective bargaining elections in August, the Board announced last week.

A total of 42,655 votes were cast for the CIO, while 13,885 ballots went to the AFL, 4194 to unaffiliated unions, and 18,431 to "no union." Thus the CIO total was greater than the combination of AFL, unaffiliated and "no union" votes. In two-union elections where CIO opposed AFL unions, the CIO's total exceeded the AFL's by more than 1000 votes. In three-way elections involving CIO, AFL and unaffiliated unions, the CIO total was 1160 to 863 for the AFL and 933 for the unaffiliated groups.

The CIO made this impressive showing despite the fact that AFL won 137 elections and the CIO 78. Unaffiliated unions won 54 polls and results in 11 elections were indeterminate.

The NLRB also disclosed that since Aug. 22, 1947, when the Taft-Hartley Act became effective, a total of 164,804 national and local union officers have filed non-Communist affidavits. These officers hold positions in 214 national and 17,944 local unions.

However, as of Oct. 1, the NLRB found that only 193 national unions and 9993 local unions were in full compliance with the requirements for filing the affidavits and annual financial reports.

A LONG-STANDING dispute between the CIO Woodworkers and the CIO Longshoremen resulted in a finding by an NLRB trial examiner last week that Harry Bridges' union and four of its agents had violated the Taft-Hartley law by "engaging in a jurisdictional dispute after the Board had determined that the union was not entitled to the work in dispute."

The trial examiner found that the union and the four agents had violated the ban on jurisdictional disputes by attempting to compel the Juneau Spruce Corp., of Juneau, Alaska, to replace members of the Woodworkers' union with longshoremen in the loading of company barges hauling lumber south from Alaska.

Previously the five-man NLRB itself had ruled that the Longshoremen's Union "is not and has not been lawfully entitled to force or require the Juneau Spruce Corp. to assign its longshore work to members of that labor organization" rather than to the IWA.

Unless contested before the NLRB within 20 days, the Trial Examiner's recommendations take effect as a Board order enforceable in the U. S. Appeals Court by contempt proceedings eventually, if necessary.

IN ANOTHER West Coast decision, an NLRB trial examiner found that five AFL groups had violated the Taft-Hartley secondary boycott ban by forcing a tavern operator to rip out fixtures that had been manufactured and installed by CIO members.

Cited for the violations were the Spokane, Wash., Building & Construction Trades Council, the Spokane Central Labor Council, and locals of the Painters, Carpenters, and Sheet Metal Workers Union.

Specifically, the AFL groups were charged with violating the secondary boycott prohibition by circulation of "unfair" and "We Don't Patronize" lists containing the name of the fixture manufacturing company, and also inducing six AFL building trades unions to stop work on the tavern.

THE ATTEMPT of the Prudential Life Insurance Co. to have the CIO Office and Professional Workers disqualified as bargaining agent for its insurance salesmen in the New York City area and New Jersey was rejected by the NLRB.

The company contended that although UOPWA had technically complied with the requirement of the T-H act that union officers sign non-communist affidavits, the real leaders of the union had not signed affidavits.

The board found that the affidavit compliance "is an administrative matter to be determined by the board, is not subject to attack by parties to the proceeding."

Bosses Shun NLRB, Denham Complains

NLRB "Czar" Robert Denham—who boasted to a Congressional committee that he registered Democratic and voted Republican—has been slapped down at least twice by the five-man NLRB Board which has felt that the General Counsel has been reaching out for too much power.

In a speech before the Society for Advancement of Management, in San Francisco, Denham had a new complaint. In the past he has wailed that many unions refused to do business with his office. Before the Management group he announced that "another problem that we have been experiencing has been the fact that employers and employer-organizations have apparently been reluctant to use the services of the Board . . ."

CIO And AFL Campaign For O'Dwyer, Lehman

By GLORIA CAPLAN

WHILE JOHN Foster Dulles, Republican candidate for senator, was campaigning in up-state New York and while Newbold Morris and Rep. Vito Marcantonio, Republican-Liberal-Fusion candidate and American Labor Party candidates for Mayor, were making promises to New York City audiences, something new was taking place in New York labor politicking.

For the first time in New York City history, the CIO and AFL united behind municipal and senatorial candidates, including William O'Dwyer for re-election as mayor and ex-Gov. Herbert Lehman for senator.

And all through registration week last week sound trucks, sponsored by the joint labor committee, covered the metropolis day and night, urging people to register — and (incidentally) to vote for the labor-endorsed Democrats.

Beginning up at the northernmost end of the Bronx, ten trucks, equipped with CIO and AFL speakers and a supply of spirit-rousing records, worked night and day until by the end of the week the whole city had been covered.

Meanwhile, radio listeners got wind of the joint labor campaign via spot announcements urging people to register, regardless of their political persuasions.

THE LABOR committee — more formally called The Joint AFL-CIO Committee for the Re-Election of O'Dwyer - Joseph - Impelliteri—was first launched several months ago as part of a "draft O'Dwyer" movement. At that time the mayor was rejecting all bids to run for re-election.

With O'Dwyer's acceptance of the Democratic nomination, the committee remained intact, broadened its activity, and last week proved its worth as registration figures hit record highs. As the CIO News went to press, the number of registrants was far outdistancing the figure for the last city election in 1945. Particularly large increases in registration were reported in heavily New Deal districts in Brooklyn and the Bronx.

Much of the joint Labor Committee's sound truck campaign was pitched on O'Dwyer's record in office. In addition, few speakers failed to take an angry sideswipe at Dulles for allegedly insinuating to upstate New York audiences that New York City voters are predominantly communistic.

Other remarks of his were interpreted as appeals to religious or class prejudice. One CIO sound truck speaker, for instance, noted bitterly that in his upstate talks Dulles had made such remarks as: "If you would see the kind of people voting for my opponent, Herbert H. Lehman . . ."

IN URGING people to register, then vote for O'Dwyer, many of the sound truck speakers stressed O'Dwyer's long-term battle with the landlords in an effort to keep rents in the city down.

Voters were reminded that O'Dwyer's administration had put through a city ordinance strengthening rent and eviction controls. "Before the ink was dry on that bill," one speaker said, "the landlords had gone into the courts to get an injunction against enforcing that law." (The case is still pending.)

"If you want to uphold Bill O'Dwyer's signature on that rent bill," the speaker continued, "let Bill know it by casting a ballot for him."

As the CIO and AFL—except for the AFL Garment Workers—campaigned for O'Dwyer, the mayor's two opponents were each making bids for the labor vote.

Morris—defeated for the job by O'Dwyer in 1945—was devoting most of his speaking time to efforts to connect O'Dwyer with the city's racketeers. Interspersed among such charges were promises that "we will begin digging the Second Ave. subway as soon as I have been sworn in as Mayor."

Marcantonio concerned himself mostly with nickels—the one-time nickel subway ride and the nickel telephone call.

In a radio speech Marcantonio complained that the newspapers had rung down a "curtain of silence" on his protests against the New York Telephone Co. in an effort to keep the public from knowing he was opposed to the company's petition for raising the coin box rate.

Part and parcel of this conspiracy, he hinted, was O'Dwyer. "You (referring to O'Dwyer) are Wall Street's boy and they are Wall Street's agents," he charged. "The agents are doing a good job for Wall St. They are protecting you, their white-haired boy."

Thus O'Dwyer was called a Wall St. boy while AFL and CIO members campaigned vigorously for his re-election.

There was no immediate reply from O'Dwyer to the two-pronged attack. His campaign was not scheduled to begin until this week.

In upstate New York — with Utica, Syracuse and Buffalo as the main concentration points — the CIO conducted a registration drive using every technique recommended by the PAC "know-how" literature.

Block workers, radio spot announcements, a 15-minute, professionally-produced radio show, complete card files and rallies all exhorted people in a non-partisan way to get out and register.

In Utica, the campaign even found its way into the schools. There the CIO Council obtained permission from the school board to distribute cards to the 15,000 school children. Headed "Take Home to Momma," the cards urged parents to register.

SOUNDING OFF: New Yorkers in all five boroughs of the city stood on street corners and leaned out of windows last week to hear labor representatives, perched atop sound trucks like, the one above, urge them to register. Morris Iushewitz, N.Y.C. CIO Council executive secretary; Dominick F. Paduano, AFL campaign director, and Jim Dugan, AFL Municipal Employes, (l. to r. above) participated in the joint AFL-CIO registration campaign which reached hundreds of thousands of citizens.

Committee For 'No. 1 Liberals'

Purpose of the young United CIO-AFL Labor Committee in New York was described this way by Michael Quill and Martin Lacey, heads of the New York City CIO and AFL:

"We set up a joint committee of AFL and CIO to draft New York City's No. 1 liberal, Mayor William O'Dwyer, to run for re-election. We established one committee to campaign actively for his re-election and of New York State's No. 1 liberal, Robert H. Lehman, to the Senate.

"We took these measures because we believe that it is vitally important for the people of New York City, New York State and the entire country that we retain leaders like O'Dwyer and Lehman who have always fought and will continue to fight for progress and liberal government."

Big Pain Causes Mike To OK Health System

SWEDEN'S national health system is O.K., and nobody can tell him it's not, says Mike Harris, CIO'er who now heads the ECA Mission in that country.

He unintentionally gave it a severe test a few weeks ago and it came through with a whiz that was startling.

Harris woke up at 2 in the morning at his present home in Stockholm, with a big pain in his middle—the kind that makes you want to yell bloody murder. A call to the State switchboard got an English speaking doctor on the phone.

In 15 minutes the doc was at the house, diagnosed the ailment as appendicitis, and in five minutes had an ambulance at the door. Harris, former Steelworkers district director in Philadelphia, says he was whisked to the Karolinska hospital, where he found a doctor and nurse awaiting his arrival.

After an examination that verified the first doctor's diagnosis, Harris was taken to a private room for a few minutes, then to the operating room, and almost before he knew it, he was minus an appendix.

By the afternoon of the next day, the docs had him up on his feet—for a few minutes. The next day he was up for half an hour, still longer on the third and fourth deys, and on the fifth day he was discharged.

Telling about his experience in letters to friends in this country, Harris says:

"I didn't know the surgeon who did the operation until several days after the operation. I found out later that he was one of the top-ranking surgeons in Sweden. I am certain, too, that the service which I got was not in any way different from the service which anyone and everyone obtains.

"The people in the hospital didn't know of my position until a couple of days after the operation, so that the excellent service which I got was not anything unusual. I am mentioning all this because so many of our people at home believe that a public health system results in inferior medical care."

Imagine, Harris adds, "a Swede in the United States, speaking no English, trying to get a doctor under similar circumstances at 2 in the morning."

N. Y. City Board Denies Rent Rise

By a vote of 13 to 3, the New York City Rent Advisory Board turned down a request for a general 15% rent boost in this area. The request was submitted by the Federal Landlords Committee, whose chairman expressed "shock and surprise" when told of the decision.

Mrs. FDR, Other Ask Truman Steel Talk

A group of 34 prominent Americans, including Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt and five members of the Senate Labor Committee, are urging the steel industry to cease its stubborn opposition to paying for pensions for its 500,000 striking workers.

Otherwise, said the group, whose statement was made public through Americans for Democratic Action, the steel companies "must be charged with the economic consequences of their decision. They must accept the responsibility of pushing the country toward a depression."

They called on President Truman "to speak to the American people in support of the fact-finding board's findings and in explanation of the seriousness of the company's refusal to accede to them."

The union, they pointed out, has already conceded a great deal in agreeing to the fact-finders' report, since its recommendations would rule out all wage increases for 1949. Signers, besides Mrs. Roosevelt, included a dozen members of the House of Representatives and Senators Hubert Humphrey (D, Minn.), Wayne Morse (R, Ore.), Claude Papper (D, Fla.), Elbert Thomas (D, Utah), and James Murray (D, Mont.).

UE Board Secretly OK'd Merger Tactics

AN UNPUBLICIZED resolution passed by the General Executive Board of the CIO Electrical Workers on the last day of their convention in Cleveland secretly opened the door for mergers with such unions as the Farm Equipment Workers and the absorption of left-wing local unions.

The UE Board, which presently contains no right-wingers, met quietly after the convention was prematurely concluded on Friday, Sept. 23. The resolution established a committee of the national officers plus two other board members "with authority to explore and approve on behalf of the Board the affiliation with the UE of any local unions or groups that may voluntarily choose to become a part of the UE."

The extent to which this resolution was kept secret was indicated by the fact that it was withheld from the daily press and the UE News, which devoted almost its entire Oct. 3 issue to the convention, refrained from mentioning the GEB action.

UE right-wing leaders immediately denounced the resolution. William Snoots of Dayton, Ohio, secretary of the right-wing conference, declared that the resolution was "an obvious proposal to raid other unions, to encourage secession from other internationals, and to invite oher unions to surrender their charters and be absorbed by UE."

SNOOTS asserted: "This comes with particular irony from UE's Communist-controlled leadership which has repeatedly in recent months, and in convention, charged the national CIO with encouraging raiding and secession. This action by the GEB, which laid the groundwork for the merger negotiations with FE just four days later, is proof of growing Communist desperation.

"If UE secedes from CIO or is forced out at the CIO convention its left-wing leadership knows that it will be able to take with it only a small minority of the membership. The hundreds of thousands of UE members who are determined to remain in CIO are flatly opposed to converting UE into a catch-all organization for political splinter groups and Communist-dominated labor factions."

Meanwhile UE District 7, comprising Ohio and Kentucky, handed the UE's national leadership its first major setback since the convention.

A meeting of the District Council elected a complete slate of right-wing officers headed by Snoots as president and Wesley Steinhilber, of Dayton, as secretary-treasurer. The meeting was held after the District's left-wing leadership illegally ordered it postponed with the excuse that the trials of three suspended right wing leaders should be held first, Snoots said.

Claiming that such postponement was clearly unconstitutional, 60 delegates representing 80% of the district membership and 348 of the District's 496 votes met on the previously scheduled date in Columbus, Ohio.

The meeting also lifted the suspensions of the three right-wing leaders, all of whom are presidents of UE locals in Ohio. Finally, the meeting overwhelmingly rejected six resolutions passed at the UE convention several of which criticized national CIO policies and officers.

The left-wing leadership then announced it would hold its convention on October 30. Snoots, who is also president of the Montgomery County CIO Council, said that the duly elected officers may attend this "convention" and serve notice that the Oct. 30 meeting lacks authority or constitutional standing.

Demo Victory In Minn. Seen

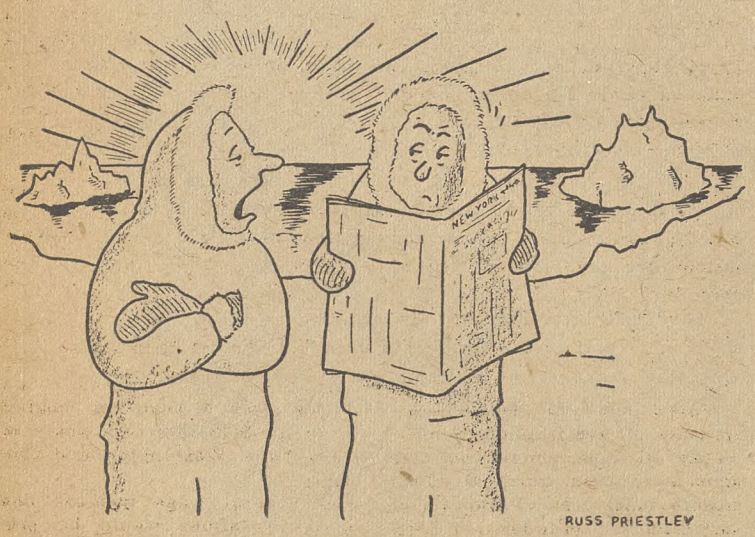
A DEMOCRATIC-Farmer-Labor victory in Minnesota next year was predicted by Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D., Minn.) in an address to a Democratic-Farmer-Labor conference at Alexandria, Minn.

Although only 300 were expected, almost 600 attended.

Among the speakers were Brendan Sexton, Detroit, CIO Auto Workers; Russell Berg, Minneapolis AFL leader; Adolph Karlsson, St. Paul, representing the Railroad Brotherhoods; Ralph Wright, assistant U. S. Secretary of Labor.

Humphrey declared that Minnesota has turned its back on its traditional Republicanism and is now in the Democratic column.

He said the Truman administration's policies have turned a threatened business recession into a period of expanding business. He predicted the 1950 basic issues will be a permanent, long-range agricultural policy; repeal of the Taft-Hartley act and enactment of a "fairer, more constructive national labor policy," and civil rights.



"Big shortage, eh—what's coal?"

"Don't you realize it's unpatriotic to ask for a raise? You wanna deprive your government of some of my income tax?"

Charges Filed On TWU Local

PRES. MICHAEL Quill has struck out again at the diminishing left-wing element in the CIO Transport Workers Union.

He filed charges against four officers and 10 of the 11 members of the Executive Board of Pan American Local 504 at Jackson Heights, N. Y. Then a five-man committee seized the property and records of the local, which it will administer at least until a hearing is held Oct. 18.

The committee reported the local was "in the red" for $1.31 as of Oct. 10 although it had about $1400 in the bank a short time earlier.

Quill charged the officers and board members with "conspiring to bring about the destruction of Local 504 and the destruction of the international union."

He also accused them of conspiring with persons "whose loyalty is to an organization or group antagonistic to the interests of the membership of our union and of our American democracy."

Officers against whom the charges were filed are Pres. Thomas Murray, Vice Pres. Robert Bacelli, Record. Secy. Nick Avellino and Financial Secy. Jeremiah Mele.

TWU officers say they're part of a group which attempted some time ago to take Local 504 out of TWU and affiliate it with the Machinists' union.

After charges were filed, TWU formation of Federated Airline Workers of America, unaffiliated reported, the group announced as a rival union of TWU.

Action taken by Quill against the 1,000-member local was similar to that taken in July against Pan-American Local 500 at Miami, Fla., when TWU Vice Pres. William Grogan was named the local's administrator pending an Executive Board hearing which resulted in explusion of four left-wing leaders and the clearing of four others against whom charges had been made.

316,305 Jobless In N. Y. City

New York City's relief rolls increased in August for the ninth straight month. reported Welfare Commissioner Raymond M. Hilliard. The figure was 316,305, a rise of 55,299 since last November. The August cost was $12,-882,716. The figures do not include workers whose unemployment benefits have been exhausted and who are still unemployed.

Wherry Stymies LPA Press Gallery Use

LABOR PRESS Association's fight for membership in the Congressional press galleries was seriously jeopardized last week, as it approached final victory, when Sen. Kenneth Wherry (R, Neb.) blocked action in the Senate Rules Committee at the request of a small group of press gallery members.

Wherry's action came as a complete surprise to members of the Standing Committee of Correspondents, which governs the press galleries and which had recommended a new rule under which LPA would gain membership in the galleries. Wherry's move was particularly serious because it blocked action at the last scheduled meeting of the Rules Committee this session

LPA immediately appealed to Chairman Carl Hayden (D, Ariz.) to call another meeting of the committee before adjournment to prevent a "gross injustice." It pointed out to Hayden that if the press gallery minority could overrule the recommendations of the Standing Committee, then any action of the elected governing body of the gallery could be vetoed by a single member of the gallery with a friend on the Rules Committee.

The Standing Committee also indicated it would fight for another meeting of the committee and friends of labor throughout Washington and the country were rallying to the fight. Members of the Committee to whom they are particularly directing their appeals were: Democratic Senators Carl Hayden (Ariz.), Theodore F. Green (R. I.), Francis J. Myers (Pa.), John C. Stennis (Miss.), Guy M. Gillette (Iowa), Garrett Withers (Ky.), and Republicans Kenneth S. Wherry (Nebr.), Wm. F. Knowland (Calif.), Henry Cabot Lodge Jr. (Mass.), Wm. E. Jenner (Ind.), Irving M. Ives (N. Y.), Robt. C. Hendrickson (N. J.), and Andrew Schoeppel (Kan.).

WHEN THE Rules Committee met last Wednesday it had been expected to approve the new rule routinely. There had been no notice of opposition to the rule since it was modified by the Standing Committee to meet objections from within the gallery. But Wherry, to everyone's surprise, asked for delay, saying he understood there was opposition. The Committee agreed to authorize Hayden to approve the new rule providing Wherry's friends were satisfied.

Members of the Standing Committee immediately met with the dissident group which Wherry had been representing, but found they could get nowhere. The minority group, chiefly southern members of the gallery, seemed determined to block the Standing Committee and openly boasted it could beat the Standing Committee in a showdown.

Chairman William S. White, of the Standing Committee, served notice he did not intend to back down. He prepared to rally the committee and its friends for a fight in the Rules Committee. To White and the LPA, the maneuver of the Southerners looked like a filibuster, similar to those conducted by southern members of the Senate against civil rights legislation.

LPA, in a letter to Hayden said: "We applied for membership in the galleries last spring. The committee finally recommended a new rule because it felt it would be unjust to keep us out under the old rule . . . We feel in view of what has happened it would be a gross injustice to us if Congress should adjourn without acting on that rule, just because of the objections of a small minority of the membership of the press gallery who represent no one but themselves and have not even seen the evidence we presented justifying our application for membership."

In a telegram sent to members of the Rules Committee, Editor Allan L. Swim of the CIO News said, "It is extremely unfair that the Association, which represents strong anti-Communist viewpoint and services some 200 labor newspapers, should be denied use of the gallery and that its competitor, Federated Press (which serves the Communist Daily Worker and a number of labor papers), should have access to the gallery."

Southwestern Bell Pays Record Dividend

Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. is asking a second round rate increase from its Missouri customers of $5,000,000 a year. The same firm has paid to its parent company, American Telephone & Telegraph, the highest dividend of all Bell operating units in the last 11 years.

The figures were brought out at the current hearing before the Missouri Public Service Commission on the company's application for higher rates.

'UAW and Walter Reuther':

A Flesh and Blood Story of the CIO Auto Union

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

LIFE WOULD be intolerable for the workers in Detroit's giant auto plants if some catastrophe should suddenly wipe out the United Auto Workers, write Irving Howe and B. J. Widick in their penetrating new book, "The UAW and Walter Reuther."

"It alone brought a sense of human warmth into an area dominated by robots, pistons and dollars," the writers maintain, and it is from this viewpoint that they tell the story of the UAW—its history, problems and future.

Walter Reuther

Widick, a member of UAW Local 7 and chief steward at a Chrysler plant who has a long record of union activity, and Howe, a professional political and literary writer, made a good writing team.

The book has the feel of the labor movement in it, is full of information that only an insider would have, and is so interestingly written that it will hold the attention not only of trade unionists but also of anyone concerned with today's vital movements.

As a setting for this study of the UAW, Part I deals with life in the factory city of Detroit. Unions do not exist in a vacuum, as might be thought from some books written about them. They cannot really be understood if examined merely as separate and detached organisms.

The tensions and problems that have given the UAW such a stormy history in its 15 years of existence are the tensions and problems of Detroit, for the auto factory is the center of the city's life.

More than 300,000 of Detroit's residents are of foreign birth. Nearly half a million are Southerners who came north to find jobs, bringing their racial prejudices with them.

Many of the city's 286,000 Negroes live in dreadful slums, the heart of which is the section ironically called "Paradise Valley." From 1940 to 1942 alone, some 40,000 colored workers poured into Detroit.

In the terrible race riot of June 1943, 34 persons were killed, 23 of them Negroes, and 800 were injured, 500 of them Negroes.

THESE ARE some of the facts given in the book which help explain why the UAW emphasizes so strongly its program of anti-racial discrimination, and why racial groups and antagonisms play such an important role not only in the life of the city, "but also in the life of its most important institution—the UAW," write the authors.

"When slates for local leadership are made up, it is often necessary to think in terms of the Polish or Italian, or Southern vote. Of course, for long periods of time, Detroit seems—and is—quite peaceful; otherwise life would be completely intolerable. But the deep antagonisms simmer and are available in all crises."

Another main source of the unrest that underlies life in Detroit, is the desire strongly prevalent among auto workers to get out of the shop—to escape the assembly lines.

"It's driving me nuts," is a common saying among them. (Henry Ford is quoted as once calling the assembly line a "boon" for workers who have "no brains.")

Skill and pride of work have no place on the assembly lines, where the bulk of the workers do their jobs and where most of them are fated to spend the rest of their working lives, say Widick and Howe.

"How terrible life in such a city could be if the rhythms of the factory, the barren dehumanized process of production were to determine its total quality! How fascinating it is, on the other hand, to see the potential for good living which the city's immense productivity implies, and to see the dim but present potential for good living which the union's cooperative procedures suggest!"

B. J. Widick

So far, the UAW has been the "only significant force modulating the industrial quality of Detroit life," Widick and Howe assert. "Only the UAW has tried to grapple with the social problems outlined here. By the very nature of its existence and purpose, it has been unable to avoid them. For it faced the choice of either coming to grips with these problems or allowing them to tear it to pieces.

"When one measures the results of 15 years of its work, one is astonished to see what a revolution has taken place in the lives and minds of the auto workers."

In Part II, the book gives the story of the growth of the UAW from the stormy sitdown strikes of 1937 to the present, taking up such highlights as the rise and fall of the union's early president-Homer Martin—the conquest of Ford, the war period, and the bitter struggle to free the union from Communist influence.

This section concludes with an unusual and interesting portrait study of Walter Reuther quite uninhibited by any "official" point of view.

The writers trace the main influence in the UAW president's life and try to find how they molded his mind and character, coming up with the conclusion that in action he is disturbed by a "tension generated by a clash between the demands of power and the demands of vision.

"He remains thereby an unfinished personality and retains the possibility of dramatically drawing on the large potential of his talent."

Comparing Reuther with such famous labor leaders of the past as Eugene Debs and his "profound compassion" and with Bill Haywood and his "robust vitality," the authors question if there is not something "undeveloped and contrived in Reuther's personality."

There has always been, they add, "a fatal split in American character between the 'idealist' and the 'realist' which only a few Americans have ever succeeded in transcending; and Walter Reuther, still tied by a lax string of recollection to Debs after having abandoned most of his ideas, is but the latest in the long line of public leaders to be trapped in that opposition of character types.

"Yet in fairness, it must be remembered that Debs and Haywood lived in an era in which it was far easier, perhaps far more 'natural' to dedicate oneself to an idealistic objective than it has been in the past decade."

THE AUTHORS suggest that Reuther's unique importance "stems from the fact that in his career, as in few others, it is possible to find so many representative strands of recent American experience.

"Here is our new version of the labor leader—a product of the depression and New Deal eras; a man of unusually broad social interests and intellectual capacities; a former socialist trying to blend recollection of traditional radicalism with a power-conscious appreciation of business engineering techniques; and a bright young man of the 1930's who, rather than capping the usual socialist flirtation with the usual New Deal job, chose to work his way up in the CIO."

Irving Howe

A number of vital questions of general interest to all unions are discussed in Part III which is devoted to problems the UAW faces.

The most extensive treatment is given to the problem of discrimination and the hurdles that lie on the "road to equality." The writers emphasize the importance of meeting this head on, by educating the rank and file to an understanding of how the evil of racial prejudice weakens the union and interferes with its effectiveness.

"In no other field has the UAW made such an admirable contribution to bettering the life of American workers," the authors claim, "in no other field does so much yet remain to be done."

The danger of bureaucracy developing as the union matures; how and why leaders may become bureaucratic; the interaction of the forces of democracy and bureaucracy; the different schools of thought in the UAW on the question of political action are among the provocative subjects in the final section of the book.

The UAW and Walter Reuther, by Irving Howe and B. J. Widick; Random House, New York, price $3.

Chicago Typos Offer Aid

AN OFFER OF AID to the CIO Steelworkers and other CIO unions has come from the Chicago Typographical Union, AFL, which recently victoriously ended a 663-day strike against the Chicago daily newspapers with the signing of contracts.

In a letter to CIO Pres. Philip Murray, Pres. Joseph J. Pilch of the Chicago union wrote in part:

"The effective publicity given us by national, state and local CIO newspapers; the uniformly courteous reception given our strikers on speaking engagements before CIO bodies; the straightforward statements issued in aid of our cause by the CIO national Executive Board and by its president; the tremendous activity by CIO people in reducing the circulation of the newspapers whose plants we were picketing—these were helpful services indeed . . .

"For your fine help, and all the help of the CIO, we say a hearty 'Thank you!' It is our sincere hope that the CIO's unions will be equally successful in their current struggles with the feudal-minded owners of steel and other industries. We hope to be of service to you and will welcome the opportunity."

Golden Tells Story Of Labor's Rule In The Success Of Marshall Plan

NOT MANY people realize it, but something very new in international relations is being quietly developed under the ECA program. It concerns recognition of the importance of labor's "fraternal kinship" in making the Marshall Plan a success in the participating European countries.

Clinton S. Golden tells the story in an article on "Labor in the ECA" appearing in the Autumn issue of the Virginia Quarterly. Golden, one of ECA's two top labor advisers, is a former vice-president of the CIO Steelworkers.

At least 50 prominent labor people are holding influential ECA positions in Europe today, two of whom are heads of missions in Sweden and Norway with the rank of minister. (Michael Harris, former CIO steel union district director, is mission chief in Sweden.)

Golden says that labor's participation in the program both in the U. S. and abroad "has given the best possible refutation to Communist charges that the Marshall Plan is Wall Street in disguise, or American imperialism on the march."

EXPERIENCE HAS clearly shown, Golden states, that to be effective, labor must participate not only in the top policy-making ranks, but also at key spots in the actual day-to-day administration of the program.

"Unless there are labor representatives involved in the flow of program development and operations, any top policy-making labor representative will be operating, so to speak, in mid-air," Golden said. "He will not have the necessary information on which he is required to act, nor will he have the instrument through which labor policies can be carried out effectively.

"It is for this reason that labor advisers have been appointed to ten of the country missions operating in the participating European countries. These missions provide the closest contact with the operating program. The labor advisers are responsible for maintaining a close relationship with cooperating non-Communist European trade unions and their leaders.

"They advise the Mission Chiefs on policy questions that have an impact upon labor in their country. Through them information is channeled to European labor. They keep the Paris and Washington headquarters as well as their own missions informed on the attitude and recommendations of labor in their respective countries concerning the European Recovery Program.

"Labor organizations in the participating countries have an estimated 29 million members. They represent a large segment of the people. They have their own influential political parties, and in some countries there are Labor Governments, while in others Labor and Social Democratic parties participate in coalition governments.

"In view of the efforts of the Communists to gain control of labor organizations, it is important for the success of the Marshall Plan that those that are still free from Communist domination be enabled to participate in the administration of the program in each country."

THE ECA Labor Advisers early took the position that labor should be called on to do more than merely give material help to Europe, Golden explains.

"The advisers viewed the problem as a psychological one," he says. They saw that people fatigued by war, hungry and desolate, could not make rational decisions, and they felt that along with measures to promote recovery should go certain therapeutic remedies. These were described under the phrase 'fraternal kinship.'

"Labor felt that conventional methods of carrying on international relations should be supplemented, that American labor leaders must meet European labor leaders face-to-face in their respective countries."

Guild Voting On AP Pact

FIFTEEN hundred Newspaper Guildsmen employed by the Associated Press throughout the nation are voting on a contract proposal giving them wage increases and other benefits estimated at $190,000 annually.

This is the first time that negotiations have been conducted for the AP employes on a nationwide basis. AP did not take to the idea graciously, preferring the old city-by-city negotiations.

AP employes last June in a NLRB election designated the Guild as its collective bargaining agent by a vote of 1166 to 212. During the course of the negotiations AP made one offer carrying increases estimated at $80,000.

Guildmen in a referendum rejected the offer. Then AP simply refused to bargain, daring the Guild to bring NLRB charges. When the Guild accepted the challenge, AP resumed negotiations.

The current proposals would establish top minima in five city classifications ranging from $87.50 after 4 years in smaller cities to $110 after six years in New York, Washington and Chicago.

A general wage increase and better vacations would be provided.

CIO TO Supreme Court:

Freedom Threatened By T-H Affidavits

THE CIO'S opposition to the provision of the T-H Law requiring union officers to sign non-Communist affidavits was laid before the Supreme Court last week.

The appeal to the high court was made in cases involving two CIO unions—the United Steelworkers of America and the American Communications Association. The Steelworkers appealed from a Federal Circuit Court decision upholding a labor board ruling that non-Communist oaths must be filed before the board's order to the Inland Steel Co. to bargain on pensions can go into effect.

The ACA's case concerns an election among employes of Press Wireless, Inc., in which the ACA was ruled off the ballot because its officers had failed to sign the required affidavits.

Thomas E. Harris, assistant counsel for the CIO and the Steelworkers, told the six justices present at the hearing that Congress had invaded the realm of political freedom and freedom of the speech guaranteed by the 1st Amendment to the Constitution in writing this requirement into the T-H Law.

IT WOULD BE justified only if a "clear and present danger" to the national security was involved Harris said. He denied that Communist activities constituted such a danger. Only if it could be proved that political strikes had caused industrial chaos, would such a provision be justified, Harris told the justices.

"Where there is an invasion of a right protected by the 1st Amendment, the burden of proof rests on the government," Harris said.

He maintained that Solicitor General Philip B. Perlman, who set forth the Government's position in support of the affidavits, had failed to prove that Communists were a national danger.

Harris explained to the Court that in July 1949, the steel union's executive board had directed Pres. Philip Murray and other national officers to sign the non-communist affidavits. They did so, stating at the time their opposition to the law, and their belief that the requirement was unconstitutional.

Officers of the locals directly involved in the case under appeal, however, have not complied. The law requires both groups to sign before the services of the NLRB can be obtained.

The Steelworkers counsel said that Murray's position and the official CIO policy of opposition to Communism were well known. The constitution of the USA-CIO bars Communists from holding office, and other steps to restrain them have been taken by the Steelworkers and other CIO groups.

The union does not disagree with the denunciation of the Communists expressed in the Government's case, but is strongly opposed to violation of fundamental civil liberties in the fight against them, Harris said.

ON THIS point, the union's brief submitted to the Court, states:

"Any system of free government must recognize the right of people to determine for themselves what they believe in—and to act on their beliefs. If political freedom is to be preserved in this country, these rights must be zealously safeguarded.

"Fear of a foreign police state must not be the excuse for degenerating into one here. It is not enough to hate Communism, as did the Congressmen who enacted Section 9-H. We must love democracy as well, understanding that its essence is the right of people freely to choose among competing political and economic beliefs.

"The question before the Court is the constitutionality of a statute which is designed to force unions to remove officers who do not foreswear certain proscribed political and economic beliefs, and which subjects unions to various onerous penalties unless they do remove such officers. Such a statute, we submit, infringes the most fundamental civil rights of unions, union membership and union officers . . ."

VICTOR RABINOWITZ, ACA counsel presented similar arguments to the Supreme Court in behalf of his clients earlier in the week. He said the non-Communist affidavit provision of the T-H law had deprived the ACA "of its right to represent the employes and its right to strike to secure recognition," and would ultimately lead to the destruction of the union if continued.

In reply to a question from one of the Justices, Rabinowitz said that the ACA officers who had refused to sign the affidavits for a long time, finally signed them a short time ago, "sacrificing their constitutional right to save the union."

Both the Government and the two unions involved concluded presentation of their arguments last week. It's now up to the Supreme Court to decide whether union officers will have to continue to sign non-Communist affidavits, or whether the requirement will be cut out of the Taft-Hartley law.

Sen. Miller, Idaho Fatally Stricken

Sen. Bert H. Miller (D., Idaho), a supporter of the Administration, died suddenly of a heart attack at Washington, D. C. The former member of the Idaho Supreme Court defeated Sen. Henry C. Dworshak, Republican, last November. Gov. C. A. Robins of Idaho is expected to appoint a Republican to succeed Miller.

Ad Answering A&P Refused

A Texas soap maker, E. O. Gillam, ran into rigid censorship when he sought to buy advertising space in Fort Worth's daily newspapers for the purpose of answering A&P's full-page ad blasts at anti-trust suits.

Amon Carter's morning and evening Star-Telegram and the Scripps-Howard evening Press rejected the Gillam ads, according to Texas CIO officials.

Gillam, an outspoken foe of monopoly, had to turn to radio and the Labor News for his ad outlets.

The soap manufacturer, a CIO-endorsed candidate for Congress in the 1948 primary election, charged in his ad that the welfare of independent businessmen, labor and American housewives demanded a united stand behind the Justice Dept. in its suit against the A&P.

Local Quits FTA, Joins Brewery Union

The CIO Food & Tobacco Workers local at the big Quaker Oats cereal plant at Akron, Ohio, repudiated, FTA's national red-tinged leadership and voted in an NLRB election to affiliate with the CIO Brewery Workers. The vote was 655 to 90.

The local was recently chartered by the brewery union after its members voted to get out of FTA. They complained that former FTA Pres. Donald Henderson used their dues money to go to Paris and make speeches claiming that American workmen would never fight Russia.

Henderson later resigned as president so the union could file non-Communist affidavits. He retained leadership, however, by creating a new position, National Administration Director, to which he was appointed.

CCL Permanently Suspends Mine-Mill

By JACK WILLIAMS

THE MINE, Mill and Smelter Workers Union has been permanently suspended by the Canadian Congress of Labor, central labor body in Canada for CIO unions. By a sweeping majority the 9th annual convention of the Congress at Ottawa upheld an Executive Council recommendation which amounted to expulsion.

The left-wing minority at the convention made an unsuccessful effort to disrupt the convention in a demonstration of their refusal to accept the majority decision.

The suspension of Mine-Mill earlier this year followed refusal of that union to accept an Executive Council decision that organization of Northern Ontario gold miners should be handled under direct CCL charter until jurisdiction is finally decided.

In that area Mine-Mill originally had 11 contracts covering some 7,000 miners. All these contracts were lost and Mine-Mill's membership was at the disappearing point.

The Steelworkers showed an interest in organization but withdrew its own efforts and gave full support to the CCL following the Executive Council decision.

Despite the most vicious attacks by Mine-Mill the CCL has since won certification in eight mines through labor department votes which gave the CCL a 10-1 majority. Negotiations are now underway in these mines and applications for certification is pending in the others. The convention pledged support to the miners in their negotiations with only left-wing delegates oposing the resolution.

Prior to the expulsion vote the left-wing groups had been allowed two speakers to one for the CCL local. Ivan Vachon, former president of the Mine-Mill local at Timmins, Ont., and now a member of the CCL local, spoke for that group and told how Mine-Mill had sent in Communist party supporters in a move which played directly into the hands of management and blocked efforts at sound organization.

"Thank God we have men in the CCL who saw their duty and performed it. I thank you from the bottom of my heart for coming in and organizing us," he said. Pres. A. R. Mosher was re-elected for his 10th term with 503 votes to the 147 polled by Robert Haddow, Fur Workers. Back into office with Mosher went a solid anti-Communist slate including Secy.-Treas. Pat Conroy and Vice-Presidents Alex McAuslane, Oil Workers, Sol Spivak, Clothing Workers and C. H. Miller, Steelworkers.

Members elected to the executive committee were: J. E. McGuire, Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Employes; Sam Baron, Textile; Fred Dowling, Packinghouse; Joe MacKenzie, Rubber; W. Robitaille, Brotherhood of Municipal Employes; George Burt, Auto; Silby Barrett, Mine Workers; Harry Chappell, Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Employes and Donald MacDonald, CCL.

J. Alesia HeadsPAC In Illinois

ILLINOIS CIO Council Pres. Joseph Germano has announced the appointment by the council's executive board of John Alesia as director of the Illinois CIO-PAC. The vacancy has been open since the appointment of Frank Annunzio last January to Director of Labor for Illinois.

"John Alesia is the natural replacement for Annunzio," Germano said, "because he was assigned directly to Annunzio during the 1948 election campaign and covered the state with him."

During the 1948 campaign Annunzio and Alesia made frequent trips to every region of the state where CIO has membership to mobilize the vote. They built up effective Political Action Committees throughout the state and led the Illinois CIO-PAC to the decisive victory of 1948.

Alesia has been a representative of National CIO under the direction of CIO Regional Director Michael Mann. He was formerly employed at the Chicago Screw Co. and was a leader of UAW-CIO Local 59.

Following the 1948 elections, Alesia assisted Illinois CIO Secy.-Treas. Maurice F. McElligott as a legislative representative in Springfield.

Fact-Finding Board Named in Bell Strike

FOR THE FIRST time since the New York State labor law has been on the books, State Industrial Commissioner Edward Corsi has appointed a fact-finding board to look into a strike.

This move in the strike of CIO Auto Workers at Bell Aircraft Corp. in Buffalo followed an attack on Bell by the Buffalo Common Council. The strike, the Commissioner said, "vitally affects the public interest in the Buffalo area."

The strike has been on since June 13. Bell has been accused by the union of sending armed scabs in groups to attack the picket line, working in collusion with the Niagara County sheriff to arrest union leaders, and presenting the sheriff with a helicopter from which he dropped tear gas and smoke bombs on union members and their wives.

Several days before Corsi acted, the Buffalo Council passed a resolution condemning Bell for its methods and declaring that a solution of the dispute "has been blocked by the management rather than labor."

Members of the fact-finding board are: Dr. Edmund E, Day, chancellor of Cornell University; Paul Shipman Andrews, dean of Syracuse University; Samuel P. Capen, chancellor of the University of Buffalo; Charles Garside, New York attorney; and Mrs. Elinor Herrick, personnel director of the New York Herald Tribune.

Union officials said they are prepared to appear before the board at any time.

1st N. Y. State FEPC Hearing Postponed

Edward W. Edwards, chairman of the New York State Commission Against Discrimination, has announced that the first public hearing before the Commission, originally scheduled for Oct. 4, has been postponed to Oct. 31. Attorneys for the respondent, George H. Flinn Corp., requested postponement to Nov. 14. The three commissioners who will hear the case decided on the Oct. 31 date.

Complainant in the case is Walter Tannis of Brooklyn, who alleges he was discharged as a cement finisher by the George H. Flinn Corp. because of his opposition to discriminatory employment practices of the firm.

Steel Pickets Using Boats

Cabin cruisers and speedboats, including one owned by Mayor M. Warren Duncan of River Rouge, Mich., took to patrolling the Detroit River, to see that 1800 office workers of the strikebound Great Lakes Steel Corp. did not enter the plant or bring in supplies to those in the plant.

At East Chicago, Ind., Rudy Sweron heard strikebreakers might be moved to the Inland Steel Co. plant via the company's wharf, so he began patrolling the canal and lake adjoining the plant, in his outboard motor boat.

Georgia Will Have PAC Aide

PLANS TO put a full-time PAC representative to work in Georgia appear about to be realized, following the tenth annual convention of the State Industrial Union Council at Atlanta.

The body voted almost as a unit to name such a representative to work toward an eventual cleaning-out of anti-union representatives to both the state legislature and Congress.

No candidate has yet been named for the post.

The council voted heavily in favor of the full-time PAC representative but a resolution to increase per capita taxes as an additional source of income failed despite a strong recommendation by G. R. Hathaway, Georgia PAC chairman. (Hathaway, Packinghouse Workers regional director, devotes only part of his time to PAC work.)

DEFEAT OF James C. Davis, Congressman from the 5th Georgia District, which includes Atlanta, will be the main objective of the CIO in Georgia.

Hathaway blistered Davis in a scathing attack, and indicated that CIO and AFL may join forces to oppose this "viciously anti-labor representative."

The convention heard one of the finest batteries of National CIO speakers in its history. They included CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey; Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization; John Brophy, CIO Councils' Director, and Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers.

Rieve charged today that a "conspiracy of southern employers" to prevent union organization, and to destroy it when it arises, is the greatest threat to the development of the South.

Rieve called upon newly appointed sub-committees of the Senate and House labor committees to start their probe in southern states. The Committees were named to investigate impediments to peaceful collective bargaining.

Rieve cited examples of cases his union would offer in evidence. He assailed the Bibb Manufacturing Co., Macon, Ga.; Avondale Mills, an Alabama textile chain; and the American Thread Co., particularly its Tallapoosa, Ga. mill, for preventing union organization by violence, intimidation, and other methods.

He attacked what he described as the inconsistency of the Georgia Supreme Court in handling the appeals of strikers convicted of violating in junctions limiting strike activity.

Charles H. Gillman was elected to his tenth term as council chairman. Lloyd Gossett was re-elected vice president, and other vice presidents chosen were Gladys Dollar, R. E. Starnes, Hugh Gammon and Oliver Nickula.

Funds For Phones

The Senate has voted $25,250,000 to help farmers get better telephone service, and $25,000,000 for repairs on the Government's mothball fleet of merchant ships. Both sums are part of a supplemental appropriation bill which now goes back to the House for approval.

Justice Department Says Complaints Prompted Trust Probe of AMA

By DONALD WOODS

THE JUSTICE Dept. has disclosed that it is investigating charge of monopoly practices by "the American medical associations" and should the charges prove well grounded will prosecute.

This statement came in reply to charges issued by the AMA in Chicago that the Justice Dept.'s anti-trust division was terrorizing doctors with "police state" methods in the Administration's campaign for enactment of national health insurance.

(The AMA made this charge in the face of the fact that David Brown recently resigned as $15,000 editorial director of its campaign against health insurance because he had investigated the AMA's contention that it was being terrorized and found it false.)

(The AMA statement was issued by its board of trustees through Dr. George F. Lull, AMA general manager, apparently to try to make its charge of terrorization stick in the face of Brown's attack.)

THE AMA statement called upon all other groups attacked under the anti-trust laws to join with AMA in opposing "politically-motivated attacks" by the anti-trust division. In effect, this was a call to battle by monopolists against the government. The records of the anti-trust division show that almost all of its cases are won in the courts.

In its statement, the AMA said the anti-trust division had "attacked" 16 state and county medical societies within the past 30 days and that the board of trustees room in Chicago was broken into early last February in a search for information.

(The implication was that the Justice Department had done this breaking in. It was over this charge that Brown resigned.)

"We are convinced," the AMA said, "that these are not bona fide anti-trust investigations and that the American people will not tolerate police state methods in this country."

OBSERVERS WONDERED how the AMA could be so sure these were not bona fide charges. The AMA itself already has been convicted once for anti-trust law violation. The Committee for the Nation's Health has published a report showing that in 22 states the medical societies have been fighting consumer-operated medical programs.

The Justice Dept. statement indicated it was these tactics that it was investigating. It said it had "received numerous complaints from doctors and the general public charging the American Medical Association and certain other medical associations with conspiring to restrain and monopolize the prepaid medical care field by preventing the operation of medical care plans not conducted under their sponsorship and operated in competition with plans controlled by them."

"Should the investigation disclose that the complaints are well founded," the department added, and a violation of law exists, "further action by the Dept. of Justice to eliminate such violations would seem to be indicated."

"We shoulda known better than to hire non-union labor!"

Two CIO Members To Go To Harvard

Two CIO members are among the 16 unionists who will study at Harvard this year as Labor Fellows under the university's trade union fellowship plan. They are Sam Mascarachia, Indianapolis, Ind., Steelworkers, and Harry B. Morrison, Morristown, N. J., Rubber Workers.

The 13-week program will include courses in labor law, collective bargaining, accounting and human relations. Formal courses will be supplemented by frequent seminars and dinners at which the union students will exchange information and views with spokesmen for labor, management and government.

The program, financed jointly by Harvard and the unions, began in 1942 under the auspices of the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration, the Littauer School of Public Administration and Harvard's Dept. of Economics.

16 Get Hillman Scholarships

Sixteen Roosevelt College students with outstanding academic records have been awarded Sidney Hillman Scholarships for the 1949 fall term, according to Edward J. Sparling, president of Roosevelt College, Chicago, Ill.

The new recipients will bring to 24 the number of students receiving full scholarships from the Roosevelt College Hillman Scholarship Fund. Eight students who received the original Hillman scholarships last spring have been awarded continuing grants for the fall semester.

New Labor Law Sought In Vermont

JOHN C. LAWSON at the closing session of the Vermont CIO Council convention at Barre responded to numerous appeals and reversed a previous announced decision to retire as council president.

Lawson, who is also secretary-treasurer of the CIO Stone and Allied Products Workers, was re-elected unanimously.

In accepting the nomination for president, Lawson asked for political unity among all CIO officials in endorsing candidates for state and local offices.

The two-day session also saw the official opening of the drive to bring Vermont telephone employes into the Communications Workers.

Besides endorsing the CWA drive the delegates backed state legislation to permit workers not coming under the NLRB to elect their bargaining agents and get official recognition.

The convention endorsed a strong national health program, federal aid to education, full civil rights, child labor legislation, regional development and a Vermont Power Authority.

The convention, in a strongly worded resolution, dedicated its entire membership to the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

The delegates commended the leadership of Philip Murray and censured the action of those "little men whose curious behavior indicates that they are more concerned in following a strange ideological road than building a strong labor movement."

Speakers included Anthony Smith, assistant CIO Councils director; Walter Petry, CWA representative, and Peter Flyn, CWA organizer for Vermont-New Hampshire, and Henry Murray of PAC.

Elected to the Executive Board were: 1st Vice Pres., Frank Dumas; Clerks, Ruth Daigneault, Amagalmated; A. E. Tardiff, Steel; H. MacMillan, Stone; Francis Maloney, Electrical Workers; Henry Hicks, UE; Theodore Flack, Textile; Conrad Delorme and Jerome Racine, both Textile; James F. Christie, Stone; Burt Fleming, UE; John J. Walsh, Rubber; Albert Prairie, Auto; Georgette Lavallee and Elzor Hunt, Amalgamated.

Daniel Dyshlevich, UE, was re-elected secretary-treasurer and James F. Christie was elected delegate to represent the Council at the coming CIO convention in Cleveland.

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

CIO Reg. Dir. Edwald Sandner reports the following union shop elections held in the following plants under contract with United Bakery, Confectionery, Culinary, and Food Service Employes Union, Local 262, affiliated with RWDSU-CIO: Charms Candy Co., Bloomfield, N. J., 528 in favor of union shop; 18 against. Mrs. Mac's Baking Co., Newark, N. J., 34 in favor of union shop; none against. California Packing Co., Swedesboro, N. J. (Del Monte), 374 "yes" in favor of Union Shop; 71 against. Anthony Auriema, President, and George Braveman, General Organizer, were in charge of these elections.

CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda reports that in a union shop Election held at the Gates Rubber Co., Denver, Colo., Local 154, CIO Rubber Workers were victorious. The workers voted 1,670 for Union Shop; 61 voted against.

George Baldanzi, National Director of the CIO's Organizing Committee reports a great victory for the CIO Textile Workers. The workers of the Celriver plant of the Celanese Corporation of America, Rock Hill, S. C., have chosen TWUA as their collective bargaining agency.

This is one of the greatest textile mill victories, and one of the first in South Carolina. This was a run-off election, the AFL being eliminated in the first election in which some 1200 workers participated. The election was under the direction of Brother Baldanzi, who was ably assisted by Franz Daniel, CIO Director of South Carolina, and Charles Auslander and the staff of the CIO's Organizing Committee. The Celriver election brings a total of three Celanese Corp. plants unders TWUA banners.

The steel strike continues. The workers are solid in support of their officers and the strike, despite the luxurious propoganda indulged in by the gigantic steel corporations. The steelworker is entitled to and should receive every consideration and support.

The strike at the Bell Aircraft Plant in Buffalo, N. Y., continues. The company is using every means possible to resist the just demands of the UAW-CIO workers, including the law which is using every means possible to break down the morale of the strikers. These strikers are entitled to our full support.

The forces of big business and the electric and gas trusts are opposed to the reappointment of Leland Olds to the Federal Power Commission. This opposition stems solely from the desire of the monopolies to protect and extend their own selfish interests at the expense of the people. The CIO is in full support of Mr. Olds' reappointment.

Newspaper reports indicate that the AFL has decided to work alone on political action. Sounds like King Knute trying to stop the tided. Thousand of workers from the CIO and the AFL will be working together in the coming elections in spite of declarations to the contrary. We of the CIO are glad the AFL has started to get into political action which they denounced for great many years. It is a step forward anyway.

As Important As A Badge

They really mean it in Kentucky when they talk about unions engaging in political action.

The official convention call to the 1949 Kentucky State CIO convention, held in Louisville Oct. 15-16, contains this novel items:

"Your attention is called to the following resolution which was passed unanimously at the 1948 Kentucky convention:

"'That no delegate to any state CIO council convention be seated before he or she has presented to the credentials committee credentials proving their being registered to vote.'"

Olds Defeated For FPC; Utilities Lobby Victorious

THE UTILITIES lobbies have scored a victory over the American people through the Senate rejection, by a vote of 53 to 15, of the reappointment of Leland Olds as Federal Power Commissioner.

It was also defeat for President Truman, who used the pressure of the Democratic Party to get support for Olds, and for the CIO.

The fight was forced to the Senate floor after the Commerce Committee turned down Olds by a vote of 10 to 2.

Opponents of Olds—many of them representatives or spokesmen for utility interests—spilled thousands of words directed at Olds at the committee hearings. The burden of their argument against him was based on some stories he wrote for the Federated Press a quarter of a century ago.

An effort was made to show that he was a Communist. The argument ran that the Daily Worker was a Federated Press subscriber. Labor observers pointed out that if such standards were used all reporters for a wire service used by the Daily Worker could be called Communists.

This argument was answered by Sen. Murray (D., Mont.) on the Senate floor when he declared "that what Olds wrote about his ideas of the state of the nation in the 1920's is as of little concern to the Senators of 1949 as are the ill-fated prophecies of Andrew Mellon and of President Hoover in those same years.

"The Senate will recall the prophecies of the 1920's, so soon to be discredited by events, that we had arrived at a condition of permanent prosperity and that poverty had been abolished forever from the U. S.

"Mr. Olds has not repudiated what he wrote a quarter of a century ago, insofar as its purpose was at that time to inform and shock the American workers into an awareness of what was happening to them and to the country; he has stated that his ideas have developed and have undergone change.

"The immediate issue that will be before us in the Olds confirmation is the price of natural gas.

"The oil and the gas companies seek by the removal of Leland Olds to prevent the Federal regulation of their sales of gas to interestate pipe lines. The evidence proves beyond the shadow of a doubt that this is the purpose of the oil and gas companies and that this is the reason for the objections that have been raised to Mr. Olds' confirmation.

"The stakes in this case are of staggering proportions. Ten billion dollars is a conservative estimate of what the oil and gas companies hope to extract from the public when they get Olds out of the way."

The Montanan explained that oil companies now get about 4½c per thousand cubic feet when the natural gas is sold to the pipe lines.

Known natural gas reserves are 174 trillion cubic feet; multiplied by 5c a thousand cubic feet, this amount of the gas would bring $8½ billion, and by 10c per thousand cubic feet $17 billion, Sen. Murray said.

"Therefore, when I place a figure of only $10 billion on the question which is shortly to come before the Senate I am not assuming that the price of gas will rise to the limit of what the traffic will bear," Sen. Murray added.

Source of the opposition to Olds was summed up by Murray when he declared:

"All the witnesses who testified against Leland Olds were associated with the oil and gas industry, with colleges in oil producing states, or with public office in oil-producing states."

In his efforts to have Olds confirmed for a third term, Truman appealed directly to Congress and to the people through statements to the press. He told a press conference that opposition to Olds came from "powerful corporations."

But President Truman did not stop there. Through the Democratic National Committee and its chairman, William Boyle Jr., he sought to have leaders of the state party organizations let their senators know that the people wanted the confirmation of Olds.

CIO Pres. Murray wrote all Senators:

"The vote of the Senate on Leland Olds will determine whether oil will again stain the public record."

Those who spoke in behalf of Olds during the final debate included Sens. Humphrey (D., Minn.), Douglas (D., Ill.), and Aiken (R., Vt.).

'And Don't Pull A Hickenlooper, See!'

Sen. Aiken Scores Fulton Lewis' Role

During the closing debate on the confirmation of Leland Olds for Federal Power Commissioner, Sen. Aiken (R., Vt.) said:

"I have about 30 to 40 letters and telegrams from people who express opposition to Mr. Olds—practically all of them stirred up by the radio talk of Mr. Fulton Lewis Jr., the other night.

"I have a list of those. I find that most of these same ones also opposed the TVA steam plant . . . Federal aid to education . . . the so-called tax exemption for farm cooperatives . . . Mr. Lilienthal's nomination (for chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission) . . . and the nomination of Mr. John Carson (for the Federal Trade Commission."

Amalgamated Will Launch Union Label Campaign

"THE DIFFERENCE is in your pocket," the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers union will declare in a full-page ad in Life Magazine on Oct. 31, launching its half-million dollar advertising campaign. The ad will continue:

"The Amalgamated Label shows that your suit is manufactured to specific standards of quality in every price range by secure, skilled union workers, assuring efficient, economical, stable production that adds up to the best values for you."

The campaign has a two-fold purpose—to stimulate the buying of union-made clothing and to bring pressure against a half-dozen big non-union firms.

In addition to the ads in national magazines, daily and labor newspapers, the campaign will include radio spots on national networks, transit advertising, posters and pamphlets.

In order to take the Amalgamated Label message throughout the land, ACW is setting up local committees.

The union's theme in the advertising was expressed by ACW Pres. Jacob Potofsky, who said:

"The average American can get a better buy in any price range by getting union-label clothing."

Vol. XII WASHINGTON, D. C., OCTOBER 24, 1949 82 No. 42

VICTORY for the CIO Steelworkers union in its strike for non-contributory pensions and insurance was predicted at Bethlehem, Pa., by CIO and Steelwokers President Philip Murray. Murray (center with hand on chest) is shown surrounded by a group of strikers who met him when he arrived in Bethlehem for a rally. Latest group of Steelworkers to go on strike are employes of nine plants of Aluminum Co. of America. (For additional details on the steel situation, See Page 3.)

Labor Victory In New Minimum Wage Law

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THE FEDERAL minimum wage will jump from 40 cents to 75 cents an hour next January—a clear-cut victory in labor's long battle to improve living standards of the country's most exploited workers.

CIO immediately hailed the 35c increase in the legal minimum—a raise that will affect at least a million workers.

Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, head of the CIO Minimum Wage Committee, said the new minimum "places a floor under wages which will make an effective contribution toward decent living standards for all Americans.

"The 75c amendment will go a long way toward eliminating cut-throat competition at the expense of labor. It will mean a substantial increase in buying power for millions of Americans, especially in the South, which will benefit all segments of our economy—farmers and merchants included."

HOW MUCH THE increase in wages will be, and how many people will be directly affected, is still in the "estimate" stage.

But William R. McComb, federal Wage-Hour Administrator—who hailed the new law as "a marked step forward"—predicted that wage boosts would go to approximately 1,500,000 of the 22,600,000 workers now receiving minimum wage protection.

McComb figured that the new 75c minimum will provide pay boosts for the people in the under-75c category averaging "from five to 15 cents an hour."

Sen. Claude Pepper (D., Fla.), a leading sponsor of the bill, predicted that its benefits will mean an additional $300 million a year being received by lower-wage-bracket workers.

Rep. John Lesinski (D., Mich.), head of the House Labor Committee, predicted that the total wage increases arising directly and indirectly from the bill will amount to a billion dollars a year.

The bill finally enacted by the 81st Congress now goes to President Truman for signature, and it will go into effect in 90 days—about the end of January.

WHILE IT drastically improves the minimum rate, the bill will also remove some 200,000 workers from Wage-Hour Law coverage, and some new language in it may call for court interpretations in the next few years.

In his statement, in behalf of the CIO, Potofsky pledged vigorous action "to press for increased coverage so that many Americans, not now included, may receive the benefits of the 75c minimum.

"The CIO Minimum Wage Committee," he added, "strenuously opposed the reductions in coverage which were included in the original House bill, and is glad to note that the final bill represents substantial improvement over that bill. The Committee recognizes the need, however, to do concentrated work in the future on extending coverage.

"The child labor, home-work and enforcement provisions included in the new law constitute a distinct step forward as compared with the 1938 law. The effect of certain changes in the overtime provisions, particularly with reference to workers on a weekly wage basis, will, however, need to be watched with care."

The bill, passed in final form just a day before Congress adjourned, was a compromise between a House bill that weakened enforcement and threatened to exempt up to a million workers from the law, and a much better Senate bill.

Legislative experts felt that the compromise leaned heavily toward the Senate version of the bill.

REP. LESINSKI, in presenting the compromise to the House, noted four major improvements over the current law, in addition to the increased minimum:

1. No employer will be able to employe "any oppressive child labor in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce."
2. The new bill "brings within the coverage of the minimum wage provisions employes of carriers by air," and employes engaged in the fish-canning industry.
3. It permits the Wage-Hour Administrator to issue orders regulating or prohibiting industrial homework if necessary to bar evasion of the minimum wage rates of the act.
4. It permits the Wage-Hour Administrator to bring suits, in behalf of individual workers, for back pay where the employer has violated the law.

Some groups of workers who have been protected by the wage-hour law in the past will no longer get that protection in the future, under the terms of the new bill.

In this group are telephone operators working switchboards with less than 750 connections; employes of logging firms employing less than 12 workers; employes of taxicab companies; employes of commercial laundries, which serve linen supply houses, hotels, etc.; and certain groups of workers in retail and service establishments.

It is estimated that about 200,000, or perhaps more, workers are thus cut out of the benefits of the law.

THE CONFERENCE committee of the Senate and House also played around with words in connection with determination of what types of workers in the production process would be covered.

The 1938 law provided that workers "necessary" to production would be protected by the wage-hour law. In later years, the courts interpreted this broadly.

The House Dixiecrat-Republican coalition, in an effort to cut down this number, changed "necessary" to "indispensable." Then GOP Rep. McConnell (R., Pa.) explained to the House:

"The conferees felt that the word 'indispensable' was too rigid, and so we substituted the words 'directly essential,' meaning that it was our intention that those in the direct flow of production in interstate commerce should be covered, and not side occupations that were not directly essential in producing goods."

It can be expected that employers will seek to broaden out all these exemptions, and that labor and the Administration will seek further changes in the law to increase its coverage.

NEVERTHELESS, as the CIO pointed out, "the new minimum brings the earning power of Americans in the most competitive industries more realistically within range of the present cost of living.

"It will create additional employment and will undoubtedly operate to improve all sub-standard wage levels, including those in non-covered employment as well as those in industries directly affected by the law.

"With the 75-cent minimum as a floor under the lowest wage industries, organized workers can build more security through their union strength.

"The CIO Minimum Wage Committee takes particular pride in the passage of the 75c minimum wage. The six million members of the CIO were mobilized behind the amendment and supported the federal administration's effort to make the amendment a reality.

"Special praise must be extended to Pres. Truman, Sec. of Labor Tobin and the gallant men and women in both the Senate and House who fought, with unremitting effort, to obtain passage of the measure."

Stalling In Michigan Election Probe Charged

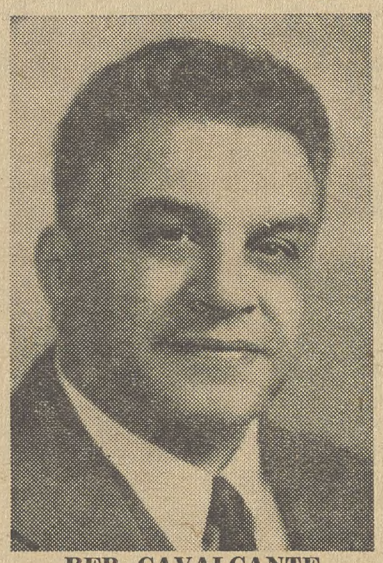
EXCESSIVE delay in conducting a probe of the election of Rep. Blackney (R. Mich.) was charged by Rep. Cavalcante (D. Pa.), in the House on the day before recess last week.

The election was contested by Blackney's opponent at the polls, George D. Stephens, Democrat, who ran with the support of the CIO.

Cavalcante is a member of the House subcommittee on elections which, he said, did not consider the case until Oct. 14 and then decided to hear oral argument next January.

Cavalcante said in a statement printed in the Congressional Record that documents in the case were in the hands of the clerk of the House last May 24 but that the clerk did not give them to Speaker Rayburn (D. Tex.) until Sept. 22.

Cavalcante—who represents the bituminous coal region of Faeyett and Somerset Counties—said that



REP. CAVALCANTE

Albert C. Hull, Flint city clerk, failed to obey a subpoena—issued by a U. S. district court—to produce ballot boxes at a deposition hearing.

Cavalcante said that the city clerk cited as justification for his failure to produce the ballot boxes a letter from Rep. Harrison (D. Va.), chairman of the House subcommittee on elections.

Cavalcante quoted the letter as saying:

"The subcommittee on elections has ruled that a recount of the ballots at this time is premature and irrelevant. There is no process under federal law whereby a notary public can be directed to take possession of ballots in an election contest."

Cavalante said that this letter constituted a flagrant violation of two U. S. Codes and that there was no doubt the legality of an examination of the ballots by the notary public, who was an officer of the House.

ASKED BY reporters to explain the delay in the election probe, Cavalcante said:

"I have reason to believe that there is opposition to Contestant Stephens because of his liberal opinions and especially because he was given such open support by the Congress of Industrial Organizations. On, the other hand, the Record shows that Blackney has voted consistently with the conservative side of the House and especially with the faction made up of Southern reactionary Democrats and Northern Republicans."

The Genesee County Board of Canvassers found, according to Cavalcante that in four Flint precinicts Blackney's plurality was reduced from 1217 to 784.

"If it is reasonable to assume that similiar errors exist in the remaining precincts of the city, is it not equally reasonable for the contestant (Stephens) to assume there was an error in judgment in counting the ballots of the remaining districts?" Cavalcante asked.

Other alleged irregularities brought out by Cavalcante were contained in the following testimony which was related by the board of canvassers clerk at the deposition hearing:

Bessie Jane Gretzinger, a paid worker, testified that in precinct 13 the checkers fell asleep and "weren't marking" the vote when the caller was reading the ballots.

Mrs. Mary Pohly, a paid city worker, testified that in precinct 68 a checker did not tally the vote while he was dozing.

Mrs. Pohly also testified that when the tally sheets failed to correspond tallies were arbitrariy taken from one candidate and given to the other.

Prior to the action in Federal court, there had been litigation in the Ohio courts over the election as a result of which the ballot boxes had been opened in the four precincts.

Cavalcante was former Democratic leader of the Pennsylvania senate.

Textile Leader Wins Libel Case

A trial unique in Canadian records was ended with the award of $3000 from one labor leader to another on a charge of libel.

E. B. Jolliffe, Toronto counsel for Sam Baron, Canadian Director of the CIO Textile Workers, announced that Val Bjarnason, one of the top officials of the rival and Communist-dominated AFL Textile Workers, had abandoned his appeal on a judgement rendered last May in favor of Baron.

At the time, Bjarnason was hailed before a Toronto Assize Court accused of slander and libel.

Abandonment of the appeal means that Bjarnason will have to pay cost of appeal as well as original cost of trial.

Baron said that in accordance with his announcement following the verdict of the jury last May, he will contribute the award after costs to public charity.

Baron, an outspoken anti-Communist, commented "The outcome of the libel and slander suit is a major blow to the Communist movement which uses slander as a primary weapon to eliminate all labor leaders who will not bow to the party line. The result of the case should strengthen the democratic forces in the Canadian Congress of Labor and the Trade and Labor Congress."

Steel Industry Still Holding Out Against Strikers

THE BIG GUNS of the steel industry were still adamant last week as Federal Conciliator Cyrus Ching worked for peace.

More than 500,000 CIO Steelworkers were on the bricks in their strike for a non-contributory pension and welfare plan. Several more small firms signed up on the terms recommended by the President's fact-finders, but U. S. Steel and its satellites held out. A total of 16,000 Aluminum Workers are also out.

Industry itself was given a slap by one of its top publicists, J. Handley Wright, director of industrial and public relations for Monsanto Chemical Co., and board chairman of the Public Relations Society of America.

Wright, addressing the Advertising Women of New York, sharply criticized U. S. Steel. The firm's ad, "A Steel Strike Is Not Justified," was beautifull typographically, he said, but developed a theme of how "unreasonable" the union was. "Nowhere," Wright said, "was the public interest even mentioned, much less explained."

Wright went on: "When management attacks an established union it only helps to strengthen the union because it increases its determination and antagonism.

"A bitter truth, and seemingly the most difficult for any management to swallow, is this: In any dispute between management and employes, public sympathy, generally speaking, starts out on the side of the employe."

IN CONGRESS, Rep. Christopher C. McGrath (D., N. Y.), sprang to the defense of the Steelworkers. Said he:

"In the discussion of the current steel strike there has been much misunderstanding. When one knows the facts, the conclusion is inevitable that the workers in the steel industry were within their rights in declaring the strike.

"The record indicates that since June 15 the union has been endeavoring to adjust this matter. The steel workers demanded a wage increase. They also asked for a noncontributory social insurance plan costing 4 cents per hour and a noncontributory pension plan costing 6 cents per hour.

IRONIC: This is no idle gesture by Inland Steel, Chicago. This sign was set up before the start of the steelworkers' strike, which has shut down the plant completely. Union pickets have forced maintenance men to stay inside the plant.

"The Steel Industry Board, appointed by the President, held long and extensive hearings. The Board explored the questions and reached the conclusion that the steel workers could not receive a wage increase but they did provide that the 4 cents per hour and the 6 cents per hour on a noncontributory plan be established as requested by the steel workers.

"That should have ended the matter. The case at that point should have been marked closed. The union accepted the rejection of its wage increase but the steel companies, while willing to accept that part of the decision, rejected the part unfavorable to them.

Obsolescence of machinery has through the years prompted the intelligent businessman to lay aside out of profits a certain percentage of his net gains for the replacement of that machinery. That was good business; it was sound business and it still is today.

"But on through the years, no such consideration has been given to the human being who possesses a body and soul. Great care and solicitude has been shown by the industrial giants for their lifeless and soulless machines. Is not the dignity of man of more consequence to our Nation than the replacement of the parts of a machine?

"The 4 cents per hour as granted by the Steel Industry Board will be set aside to give to the worker social insurance so that when his body becomes broken or injured or its efficiency impaired he would not be placed upon the industrial scrap heap.

"The 6 cents per hour will be set aside so that when the human being no longer is able to keep up with the fast pace of the younger people in the industry, he would receive only the same consideration as was given to the mechanical man, namely, a pension.

"This is sound economics. It is good morals. It is the true American concept that a human being, the handiwork of God, is of more value than any man-made machine. It is good economics because it relieves society or the family of the worker of the duty of supporting him.

"It is justice because the worker who has created the profits for the corporation shares when he is no longer able to aid that corporation. It is good Americanism because it fills the heart and mind of everyone in industry with the thought that here in this land of opportunity we do not grind down our workingmen or make slaves of them, taking all they have to give and giving nothing in return, but here in America we say we recognize in you, the working men and women of America, that you are human beings with the dignity of your person and we relieve you of the worries and fears that come from insecurity.

"The steel companies have failed in this controversy. It is hoped that the high-paid executives who have all the protection which the worker now asks for will realize and realize quickly their duty to the Steelworkers."

Contributory Plan Signed By ILWU

The International Longshoremen's Union and the employers' Pacific Maritime Association reached agreement on a jointly-financed social insurance and welfare program to cover 12,000 West Coast longshoremen.

The longshore program—which will include life insurance, hospitalization, surgical benefits, and disability benefits for time lost due to injuries or illness—will be on a contributory basis.

Forty-five per cent of the cost of the program will be met by a 1% deduction from longshoremen's wages, according to a joint ILWU-PMA announcement, while the employers will contribute 3 cents per man hour to meet 55% of the cost.

Rubber Refuses

The executive board of CIO Rubber Workers has refused to approve an agreement recently reached by B. F. Goodrich Co., Akron, Ohio, and seven local unions representing 17,000 Goodrich workers. The refusal was because the pension plan is contributory.

"We'll Stay Out Until Murray Gets What He Asked For"

By MARY HEATON VORSE

A KNOT OF men, colored and white, stood outside the local Steelworkers' office in Braddock, Pa., the smoke-blackened town which gave birth to Carnegie Steel.

The Negro population brought in as strike-breakers in the 1919 strike has remained to see its sons become respected union members. An old gypsy woman whose gay clothes brightened the dull street, was chatting with some men. John Chorey, staff representative of the Local, was waiting for me.

"It's a pity you weren't here Saturday when we had a hundred kids on the picket line," he said. "You ought to have seen them, some as small as 3-4 years, up to 14. They were around headquarters all day."

A man busily painting more signs for Murray's big meeting. "Show her some of the signs," said Joe Parlak, president of the Braddock local. Chorey hauled some down. One read: "FAIR TO FAIRLESS, BUT UNFAIR TO US." There was a home-made sign which said, "MY DAD IS ON STRIKE, LET'S GET IT OVER WITH."

"We were to have had television but they didn't come. Anyway, we had moving pictures," said Chorey. I remembered the strike of 1919 when the State Constabulary in Braddock rode down the school children. They broke up a funeral. They searched houses without warrants and slapped women in the face. Sitting in the apartment with the wife of the County Detective, I saw the Constabulary, "the Cossacks" on their beautiful horses, ride people back into their houses when they came out to stare.

IN 1936 THE union couldn't hire a hall for a meeting. Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor, had to speak from the steps of the Post Office. Mrs. Gifford Pinchot, the wife of Governor Pinchot, was refused permission to speak in these steel towns. She spoke without permission.

We went down and took a look at the soup kitchen. "Pretty good," said the head of Operation Eats, "when you think we began from scratch just a few days ago."

Everyone in the kitchen agreed that "Our men will stay out till Phil Murray gets what he's asked for."

"We're getting full cooperation, especially from the GI's; they are great Union men, the GI's," said Chorey, as we went the rounds of the picket lines. We made the tour of the great Edgar Thomson Works, passed the skull cracker and the new strip mill. At each mill gate sat a group of from six to 20 men.

Some of the men were playing cards, most of them were a little bored, for there is no tension to keep them on their toes—not yet. At each gate or near the gate was a company guard, hardly to be distinguished from the pickets in their shirt sleeves in the hot weather.

"They are not allowed to speak to us or even hand a man a glass of water. Sure, they're union men. Most everyone is who works in Edgar Thomson, we're organized over 90%," said Chorey.

THE ENORMOUS old mills towered over us without a plume of smoke anywhere. At the end of North Braddock, a beautiful span of bridge united two abrupt hills on whose sides clung small workers' houses. We paused at a mill gate where there were six pickets.

"This is where we let in the doctor, nurses, fire department and ambulance. No, I don't allow no maintenance crew, not until we get things ironed out. For the 16 open hearth furnaces, they had three workers each when they're working, now they want eight. In the 1946 strike, we had 48 maintenance men, now they are asking for close to 250.

"Here's where the management padlocked the shelter, where the workers could wait when it rains. We had to build us a new one. The first nights of the strike, it was cold, and the police brought us some wood to build fires to warm us by. The Burgess and Chief of Police are with us 100%. Eight out of the 12 Councilmen in North Braddock are Union members."

To anyone who remembers the steel strike of 1919, the organizing drive of 1936, when every official supported the mill owners, Chorey's talk is like a fairy tale.

Then he added, "I says to Management we'll talk about a maintenance crew when you get them deep freezes out of there, full of ham and chicken and distribute them to Institutions. Sure they began to put in deep freezes like they were preparing for a siege right in the beginning of negotiations."

After all, US Steel hadn't changed.

The Writer

The accompanying story was written for Labor Press Association and the CIO News by Mary Heaton Vorse, well known labor writer who reported the Lawrence textile strike, the grim steel strike in 1919 and the campaign of the Steelworkers Organizing Committee which resulted in formation of the CIO Steelworkers union.

She has written three books on American labor, including "Strike," which was translated into eight languages. She also is the author of numerous magazine and newspaper articles on labor.

Double-Dealing Commies On Their Way Out!

Average American Unionist Fed Up With Tripe Peddled By Party-Liners

By ALLAN L. SWIM

OVER A PERIOD of months the CIO News staff has devoted considerable time and space to a campaign against the Communists.

As was expected, the Commies struck back. Through the Daily Worker, resolutions, labor papers which adhere to the lefty line and in personal letters they heaped considerable abuse on me and the assistant editors.

While in Europe early this year I was lambasted by the Commie press all the way from Italy to Holland.

In several sections of this country the party-liners conducted concerted drives to keep the CIO News out of the hands of CIO members.

My staff and I have been accused of lying, cheating, faking, selling out the workers, race baiting, playing ball with the monopolists and with deliberately attempting to destroy the labor movement.

THESE THINGS are cited here merely because they are part of a big campaign to free the CIO of Communist influence and because they illustrate the tactics which the Reds employ.

I became familiar with these tactics back in the early days of the Newspaper Guild, when I served as a member of a group which heaved the Commies out of my own union.

I came into close contact with similar tactics over a period of months while investigating and writing stories about hatemongers such as Gerald L. K. Smith, the head of the Ku Klux Klan, Fight for Free Enterprise, Christian American, Inc., and the American Free White Gentile Army.

Such tactics were used to heap almost unbelievable slander and abuse on Philip Murray and other right-wing leaders of the CIO.

And the same tactics were employed in the rape of Czechoslovakia, the subjugation of Poland and the attempted grab for control of Italy.

THERE WAS A time when many Americans believed that Communism offered a remedy for some of the abuses practiced in the name of captalism.

Commies were often regarded as idealists, as reformers, as men and women who sought a better way of life for the downtrodden.

This illusion—and it was a grand illusion—was shattered by the behavior of the Commies at home and abroad.

The bloody purges in Russia, the despicable activities of the secret police, the phony trials of political opponents of those in power, the grab for control of Eastern Europe, the blockade of Berlin and the political strikes in Italy and France revealed the Stalinists practiced a brand of totalitarianism not unlike that of Hitler.

And the Commies and fellow travelers in the U. S., although pretending to fight for democracy, sanctioned every move the Reds made abroad.

THE CIO BECAME a member of the World Federation of Trade Unions because it believed there was a need for a worldwide labor organization in which men of all political beliefs could tackle the common problems of all workers.

The Commies sabotaged this effort and attempted to make the WFTU into a worldwide propaganda organization for the sole benefit of the Communist Party.

After making many attempts to convert WFTU into the type of organization which it was originally intended to be, the CIO withdrew in disgust.

This widened the already wide split in the CIO because a number of union misleaders had greater loyalty to the Red-dominated WFTU than to the CIO itself.

And the lefties, as usual, attempted to blame the CIO right-wing for "splitting the world labor movement."

THE CIO NEWS in recent months has printed in detail the charges made by the Commies against the CIO leadership.

It has carried stories about the fake "autonomy and democracy within the CIO" campaign of the party-liners.

It has told about the Communist practice of anti-semitism in Europe and lefty double-dealing at home.

It revealed the inhumane treatment accorded those unlucky enough to land in the Russian "work camps."

All of this was done in an attempt to place before the CIO membership a rounded picture of the men and forces who have been attempting to convert American trade unions into Communist organizations.

It was done in preparation for the left-wing battle that will be fought next week at the CIO convention in Cleveland.

IT HAS BEEN stated in this column several times that the Communists were on their way out as a force in the American labor movements.

That statement is reiterated now.

It is reiterated because there is much evidence to show that the average unionist believes in democracy and is completely fed up with the double-crossing, cheating, lying, totalitarian tripe peddled by the Commies.

When unionists feel that way things begin to happen!

And if they don't happen thick and fast at the forthcoming CIO convention I'll eat the front page of the Daily Worker—without any Russian dressing on it!

Wonderful -- and Then

Apparently it makes a whale of a difference who says "No."

That statement is based on a curious and rather disgusting series of events involving a large section of the nation's daily press.

We'll try to relate those events in their proper order:

There was strong feeling around the country's news and editorial rooms that the President's steel fact-finding board was going to let the industry have it with both barrels.

The board flatly turned down the union's wage demands but strongly recommended non-contributory pensions and insurance.

Within the next few days a major portion of the press hailed the recommendations and heaped editorial praise on the board.

The union reluctantly dropped its wage requests—and the editorial writers said that was fine.

Then the steel industry said "No" to the board's recommendations.

The editorial comment which followed immediately was conspicuous by its absence. Obviously the editorial writers had been "double crossed" by the industry.

Then, finally, the Steelworkers went on strike in an effort to obtain exactly what the board had recommended.

Frankly, it was a bad spot on which the editorial writers for many papers found themselves. But they soon began crawling off—in reverse.

Last week a large number of them were blasting away at Philip Murray and the union for fighting for what the papers had originally said was good and just.

We doff our hats to those papers which didn't flip-flop.

New Rule Expected To End Curb On LPA

A NEW RULE governing admission to the Congressional press galleries which is expected to clear the way for Labor Press Association and Voice of America reporters was approved by the Senate Rules Committee last week.

Final approval, after long delays and bitter conflict within the press gallery, came after the Standing Committee of Correspondents had adopted a couple of amendments to the rule to appease objectors within the press gallery.

William S. White of the New York Times resigned as chairman of the correspondents' committee as a result of the adoption of the amendments, which he felt was a surrender by his committee to procedure which gave a small minority in the gallery a veto over the rule approved by the elected standing committee representing the whole press gallery.

Labor Press Association immediately resubmitted applications for membership under the new rule. The applications have to be posted for 10 days, under the new rules, before they can be approved.

WHITE HAD fought hard for LPA's right to join the galleries, and had carried the ball for the liberal and up-to-date rule blocked in the Rules Committee two weeks ago by Sen. Kenneth Wherry (R, Neb.) on the request of three disgruntled members of the gallery minority.

The changes approved by the committee would require that in the future any changes must be petitioned by 100 members of the press gallery, and also provide for annual elections of the Standing Committee, with two elected one year and three the next—making it a continuing body like the Senate.

White's resignation was not caused by the nature of these amendments but by the committee's failure to back him up in the dispute before the Rules Committee. His resignation drew wide expressions of regret from other members of the Committee, from members of the press gallery, and from Senators.

In a letter to Chairman Hayden last week asking for a hearing, White had said he wanted to permit the Press Gallery dissidents to present their protests. He named as the dissidents: B. N. Timmons, long time Washington correspondent and a friend of former Vice President John N. Garner; Lacey Reynolds, an employe of Timmons, and "Billy" Sisson, of Memphis.

Smog In Donora

The U. S. Public Health Dept. says a new smog situation has arisen in Donora, Pa., where a score of persons died from smog exposure last year.

However, there is expected to be no danger to Donora's industrial workers this time. Only industry in the town is steel and the steel plants are shut down because of the Steelworkers' strike.

He Said They Did Not Have To Listen

THIS IS A story about some garment workers who figured that freedom of speech for the boss entitled them to freedom not to listen.

They acted accordingly — with the following results:

The "big" anti-union speech of the boss fell flat on its face.

A total of 168 ballots cast in a representation election were challenged.

The NLRB ruled there was no justification for the challenges.

The union was declared winner of the election and—later—it signed a contract with the firm which fought its organizing efforts.

ALL OF THE ACTION took place the past summer at Englewood, Tenn., where the CIO was attempting to establish an Amalgamated Clothing Workers union at Englewood Garment Co.

A pre-election meeting was attended by about 200 of the 250 workers eligible to vote. At this session union representatives told workers they probably would receive a last-minute appeal from the boss for them to vote against the union.

Somebody suggested that they demonstrate to management before the election that they really wanted a union—and also suggested the type of demonstration that should be staged.

The group voted in favor of the idea.

AT 10:20 THE NEXT morning the boss shut down all the machinery in the plant and announced that he was going to make a speech.

He said he understood there were some workers who didn't want to listen to what he had to say.

If such were true, he added, those who didn't want to stay were free to go. He said they should "clock out" at the door as they left.

At this point there was a movement toward the exits—and all but 29 workers left the plant!

THE NLRB election began at 11 a.m. and company observers challenged the votes of all workers who had "clocked out" at the invitation of the boss.

The boss contended that they had gone out on strike or had voluntarily quit. He argued that they were no longer employes of the company and, consequently, were ineligible to vote.

NLRB ruled a short time later that the "freedom not to listen" demonstration did not disqualify the votes of those who "clocked out."

When the ballots were counted the union had a substantial majority and was designated as the bargaining agency for the workers.

THE CIO representative who relates this story said the demonstration was staged "because we thought it was time to challenge this thing called 'free speech from employers' under the Taft-Act.

"There was no question about whether we would win the election and we knew the Clothing Workers would eventually be certified as the bargaining agent.

"The demonstration came off better than anybody expected.

"But let me tell you that 168 challenged ballots in an election of that size is one helluva pile of challenged ballots!" A. L. S.

IRRITATING ITCH!

St. Louis Post-Dispatch:

'Weight of the Case Is Against the Steel Companies'

The stand of the steel companies was strongly condemned in this St. Louis Post-Dispatch editorial, which said in part:

Last week was the second week of the steel shutdown. Jobless pay claims increased by 63,000. This unemployment was known to be of the "secondary" variety, caused in plants which lacked steel and coal for operation.

Director Goodwin of the Bureau of Employment Security reported the national total of jobless pay claims to be 309,000, a figure representing increases in applications in every state except Maine. Nineteen states said the steel strike was a cause of the increase.

The weight of the case, as it stands now, is against the steel companies. The President's fact-finding board recommended against a fourth-round wage increase and the unions accepted that recommendation. In fact, the union yielded on one point after another, as the fact-finders recommended. The one issue that remains is who is to pay for pensions—are they to be contributed to by the employes or are they to be non-contributory?

THE OPPOSITION of the companies to non-contributory pensions is embarrased by the fact that many of the executives who oppose such pensions for union members are themselves beneficiaries of pension plans to which they do not contribute.

A further embarrassment to the steel companies is the fact that an increasing number of people regard the depreciation of workers as a responsibility of industry no less than the depreciation of machines. Industrial production wears out men just as it wears out machinery. This point was well made in a letter to the Post-Dispatch by former Gov. Henry S. Caulfield.

Expressing wonder that Benjamin Fairless of U. S. Steel should resist so firmly the idea of non-contributory pensions, Mr. Caulfield quoted the Steel Industry Board's statement:

"Social insurance and pensions should be considered a part of normal business costs to take care of temporary and permanent depreciation in the human 'machine' in much the same way as provision is made for depreciation and insurance of plant and machine. This obligation should be among the first charges on revenues."

With this the former Missouri Governor concluded that the stand of the steel companies, "which presently threatens the nation's prosperity, is contrary to reason and against the trend of the times."

If Mr. Fairless and his fellow executives in the steel industry have a strong case for their stand, they have failed to make it before the public. In the end, steel pensions will be paid for by the users of steel, just as steel wages and salaries are now paid. Pensions, therefore, should be established on the basis which will provide the most for the money.

FROM THIS POINT of view, is not the contributory pension the more expensive of the two alternatives? Under it, would not the employes have to pay federal income taxes—and probably state taxes, too—on that part of their earnings which they contributed to the pension fund? On the other hand, would not this tax be ligitimately avoided if the company directly contributed the full amount to the pension fund?

There are many intricacies and complications in the setting up of an actuarily sound pension plan. It does seem, however, that these are fair questions to ask with the steel shutdown in its third week. The industry ought to answer them.

East Gary Paper Sees Steel In Dog House

The stand of steel companies against non-contributory pensions has drawn criticism from business men, according to Edward R. Brennan of the East Gary (Ind.) Herald, who recently editorialized as follows:

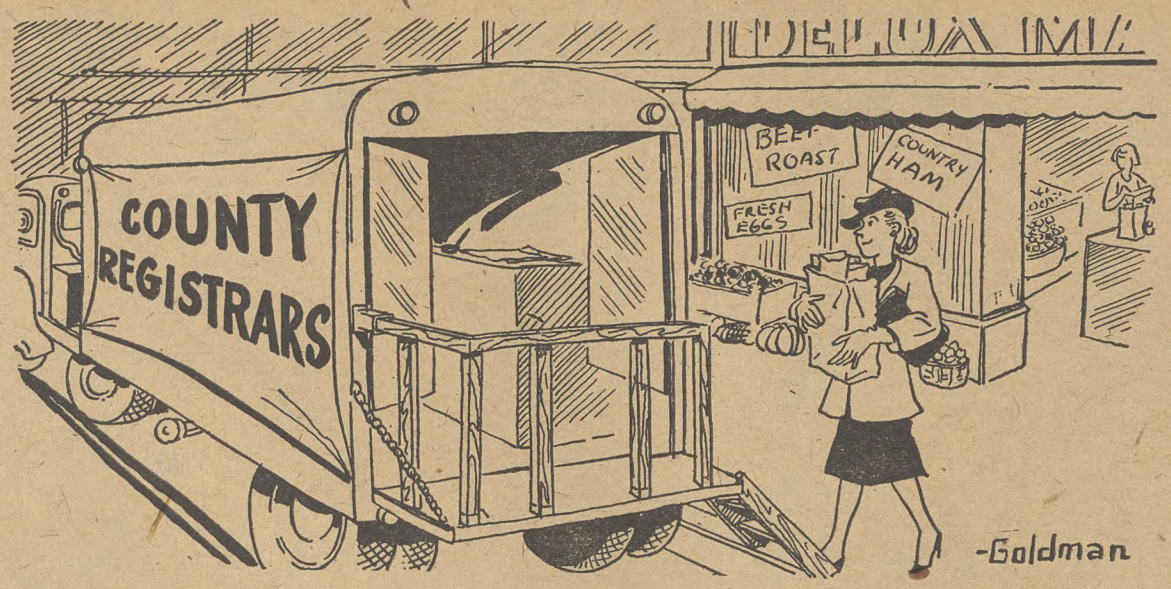
"The position taken by the steel companies in regard to the payment of pensions to their employes has probably done more to lower public esteem for the industry than anything that has happened since the Republic Steel massacre of strikers when the CIO was starting to organize the industry.

"Already, widespread condemnation of the steel companies' stand is being heard on all sides—not only from laboring men but from business men as well.

"Status of the union in the mills here has improved markedly. Many workers, formerly not much interested in the union and definitely cold toward the idea of a strike, are embittered by the company stand and are now willing to 'go to bat' on the issue."

In St. Louis County

Mobile Registrars Expected To Boost List



THE CITY of St. Louis, Mo., is one of two cities in the 48 states (the other is Baltimore, Md.), which are not parts of any counties.

But, to the north, west and east of St. Louis city is St. Louis County, one of the key political divisions in the state of Missouri. It is also the home of Sen. Forrest C. Donnell (R.), arch-conservative who is up for re-election next fall in President Truman's home state.

In 1944, it was the vote of St. Louis County that elected Donnell over Ray McKittrick for the senatorship. Donnell carried St. Louis County by 19,000 votes, the whole state by only 1900.

Last fall, Ray Karst, Democrat, carried St. Louis County for one of the very few victories his party has ever scored there. He took the county by 66,626 to 64,218. The rest of his 12th congressional district is in the city. There he ran ahead of Rep. Walter Ploeser (R.), a five termer, 65,000 to 42,000, for a grand total of 131,825 to 106,848.

Karst is not to be confused with Del Garst, CIO regional director; with Mayor Joseph Darst of St. Louis City, or with Rep. Frank Karsten (D., Mo.), also of the city.

ST. LOUIS COUNTY is run by a body known as the County Court, which, despite its name, is not a court. Its authority is somewhat equivalent to that of county commissioners in other states.

The County Court's authority is so great that if a new town or city is formed in the county, the "court" names its officials until the next election.

Last year, after Forrest E. Smith (D.), was elected governor along with Truman's sensational sweep of Missouri, the new governor's duties included appointment of county boards of election commissioners (two Democrats, two Republicans.)

New chairman of St. Louis County commissioners is John R. Mooney, whose sister, Mrs. Fanny Sellins, was slain in 1919 by the Pennsylvania Coal and Iron police at Breckenridge, Pa., in their warfare against unions in the mills and mines. Her name is revered wherever miners gather.

Mooney, a practicing attorney, found that far too many people are not registered to vote in the county. An obsolete system used previously by the commissioners had people registering in cubbyholes.

When the closing hour for registration came, those not inside the cubbyhole just wouldn't register. Also, the old system was costly and the inexperience of the temporary clerks disenfranchised many persons who had actually registered but who were put on the wrong lists.

So Mooney hit upon a new system. Mobile registrars sit in key locations throughout the county. Mooney hopes to lift the county's present 150,000 to 200,000 registration above the 300,000 mark.

A TRUCK has been loaned to the commissioners at no expense. Regular employes, who are not so busy at this season, do the registering.

The locations include such colorful names as Ferguson Loop, Edmondson and Natural Bridge, Black Jack, Lix and Stanza, Florissant and Highway 66 (about which a popular song was written a few years ago), Creve Coeur Lake, Gravois and Rock Hill, Bayless and Lemay Ferry, Hoffmeister and Military, Couch and Big Bend, Manchester and Des Peres, Dorsett and Fee Fee.

Missouri has permanent registration. Once you get on the books, you stay until you die or move or fail to vote at least once every four years.

Mooney points out that the county's 73 villages and towns are controlled by the GOP. Also the county's 93 school district. He feels that a big registration will make the various elective offices more representative.

In 1944, when Donnell was winning the state by carrying the county's 93 school districts. He county, Ploeser—who is every bit as reactionary as Donnell—took the county by 13,000 votes.

His 1944 opponent, who has the fascinating name of Phelim O'Toole, carried the city portion of the district by nearly 5000 votes, which obviously wasn't enough. So, Karst's 1948 victory showed what a job can be done in the 12th Congressional District if everybody pitches in.

DEL GARST, who is mid-western PAC director in addition to regional CIO director, is highly laudatory of Mooney's plan.

Garst's PAC territory includes Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma.

Garst feels that Mooney has hit on an idea which will bring the registration system close to the people. He points out that Mooney has selected registration places for the mobile unit which are where people congregate most.

Another CIO leader, Oscar A. Ehrhardt, secretary of the St. Louis Industrial Union Council (in a venture in politics last spring, he was elected to the city school board, receiving the highest vote) says this:

"It is important to point out that regardless of where a person lives in St. Louis County, he may register at any of the listed locations. It need not be in his particular township."

IN A LETTER to local unions and other CIO sources, Ehrhardt wrote: "I urge you to place these leaflets (stating places of registration) on your bulletin board. This should be permissable under most contracts because of its non-controversial nature.

"Registration is the duty of good citizenship, and I am sure this point can be clarified with the employer."

Newspapers throughout the county and also in the city are carrying many stories in an attempt to promote registration.

While all this was going on, The Missouri Farmer, organ of the Missouri Farmers' Association, Inc., carried this editorial, which speaks for itself:

"READERS of the Missouri Farmer will recall that Rural Electrification Administration Cooperatives in the mid-West, along with the Missouri Farmers' Association, asked that $9,000,000 be appropriated for the Southwestern Power Administration, the money to be used by SPA to build transmission lines to various REA cooperatives and municipalities in Missouri and the mid-West.

"SPA, it will be remembered, is the agency established by Uncle Sam to market the power produced by dams built by the Corps of Army Engineers.

"The appropriation bill passed the House. But, when it came before the Senate Appropriations Committee, that committee apparently yielded to the wishes of the powerful utility lobby and drastically cut the funds proposed for SPA.

"The friends of REA in the Senate restored the funds on the Senate floor.

"You will be interested to know that Pres. Heinkel of MFA wired Missouri's Sens. James B. Kem and Donnell: 'You can perform a great service for Missouri agriculture if you will help out on the Senate floor.'

"But they didn't help. Both Kem and Donnell voted against us. Thus, the funds were restored by the Senate over the opposition of Missouri's two senators."

Kem, like Donnell, is a Republican.

Plot To Lead Locals Out Of Gas, Coke Reported Smashed

A PLOT to take District 9, of the CIO Gas, Coke and Chemical Workers out of the union and out of CIO has been smashed, union officers report. The District covers the South.

Under suspension and about to be tried for treason to the union are Vice Pres. C. W. Dannenberg and District Dir. Harry L. Zebal. Local after local voted to stay with the Gas, Coke Union. A few, which took action to leave the union, called meetings and asked the international officers to explain the situation to them. Six locals voted to reverse their stand came back into the union.

Two locals which refused to join the revolt were the atomic energy workers of Local 288, Oak Ridge, and Local 407, Mascot, Tenn.

Union Pres. Martin Wagner, Vice Pres. Joseph Joy and Secy.-Treas. Cecil Martin made personal visits to a number of Southern locals and explained the situation. The entire staff of CIO in the South was made available by CIO Vice Pres. and Dir. of Organization Allan S. Haywood and Southern Dir. George Baldanzi.

"There is not a single elected officer, with the exception of Danenburg and Zebal, who is not standing loyally with his union and with CIO," Wagner said.

"These two and these two alone, have chosen to betray their oath of office and their obligation to the union members to lead a foolish and hopeless movement.

"Any workers who chose to follow them would be left helpless against the attack of employers and without access to the fraternal support of a national union.

"All companies in District 9 with which UGC&CWA has contracts have been notified that the international will defend the contracts in the interests of the rank and file members. Arrangements are being completed to give full assistance and service to all locals in the district."

WAGNER answered charges by Danenburg and Zebal in this manner:

1. They accused Wagner of plotting to merge Gas, Coke with the CIO Oil Workers.

Answer: A. R. Kinstley, OWIU vice president, promptly wired Wagner: "This is to advise you that on more than one occasion Danenburg did discuss with me his plan for amalgamation of your union and OWIU."

2. That the Gas, Coke international is forcing an increase in per capita upon locals.

Answer: The international board, with Danenburg in attendance, voted unanimously to appeal to locals to increase voluntarily per capita payments in order to meet increased operating costs, provide expanded services and improve organization work.

3. That the Southern District has been exploited and mismanaged by the international.

Answer: Danenburg and Zebal were in complete charge of servicing the Southern District with entire responsibility for providing full service, Danenburg recently released two men assigned to Oak Ridge because he said he did not need them.

4. Wagner was accused of plotting to split the South into three parts.

Answer, only the convention could do that.

A Regional Director's Life Is Varied But Tough

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

THERE ARE 41 of them scattered throughout the country. And they have duties enough for 10 times that number.

The 41 are CIO regional and sub-regional directors (36 of the former). They are CIO's link with local unions, with persons needing and desiring organization, with the community as a whole.

Theirs is the duty of preaching, talking, practicing and selling CIO in every nook and cranny of the land.

Regional directors form about a fourth of the 130 persons on the staff of CIO Vice President and Organization Dir. Allan S. Haywood. Others are Haywood's assistants, field representatives, organizers and office force.

This writer recently was in St. Louis. I spent quite a bit of time in the regional office there. So, it seems like a good idea to do a piece on a typical regional director in a typical regional office.

PARLEY: Del Garst, CIO Regional Director in St. Louis (behind desk) confers with Philip Weightman (right) and Phyllis Brown of his staff on the day's work.

ST. LOUIS is fairly close to the geographical center of America. It has a rather varied CIO membership. It has had a long and good labor history.

It would be impossible to do a story on all of the regional directors and their staffs and what they have accomplished—which is plenty. So, with no slight intended for anyone else, let's take a look at Delmond Garst.

Del Garst is regional director for Western Missouri and Southern Illinois (his region includes both the state capitals—Jefferson City, Mo., and Springfield, Ill.).

In addition, he is Middle West director for the CIO Political Action Committee, covering Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma and Missouri.

And, he represents the Woodworkers in his area.

BIGGEST UNIONS in the area are the Auto Workers, the Steelworkers, the Electrical Workers (with the accompanying left-wing headache), Amalgamated Clothing, Textile, Brewery, Shoe, Gas-Coke, Newspaper Guild and, of course, the Communications Workers. Garst was extremely active in the drive which brought CWA into CIO.

Del Garst, like all the other regional directors, came up through his own union. He's a native of Kentucky. A member of Local 25, UAW, St. Louis, he served the UAW for six years as a board member. In 1942, he was named CIO regional director for St. Louis. In August of that year, he was called to Washington for a two-week mission—and didn't get back to St. Louis permanently until nearly five years later.

In the interim, he served CIO in various capacities during the war. His main work was on the War Labor Board. He signed the order which led to the famous forced removal by the Army of Sewell Avery from his Montgomery, Ward offices.

(This writer first met Garst during those days, when I was handling a WLB case for the Newspaper Guild. He had an amazing knowledge of the newspaper industry and its unions.)

That's the background of Del Garst. It could just as well have been almost any of the other regional directors.

NOW, JUST what does a regional director do?

Of course, there's close work with the locals and internationals in his area. Whenever Garst wants to make a policy decision, he confers with representatives of the unions. Philip Weightman, former vice president of the Packinghouse Workers, has been assigned to Garst by CIO and PAC, and attends in conferences with the various affiliates.

Garst says he gets full cooperation from the two state IUC's and the several city IUC's in his area.

Here's a typical schedule in the life of this typical regional director:

- A visit to the Unemployment Compensation office to make arrangements for quicker aid for CIO members.
- Conferences with Treasury drive officials. (CIO members are among the biggest investors in this drive).
- A meeting of Community Chest leaders.
- A conference with the CIO Community Services Committee.
- A safety campaign conference.
- Visits to city officials to discuss municipal policies.
- A meeting with state officials.
- Negotiations for the amalgamated local industrial union, No. 1643, at St. Charles, Mo. (The St. Charles Banner-News is the only newspaper in America published by an all-CIO staff, mechanically, business office and editorial).
- Negotiations for the Woodworkers. (One local is 220 miles from St. Louis).
- Negotiations for other unions when he is requested to enter the picture—which is often.
- Lots of organizational work, which has prospered under heavy handicaps in these Taft-Hartley days.
- Dictation and other office work with his secretary, Phyllis Brown. (Her father, James, a former miner from Revloc, Pa.—near Johnstown—is on the staff of the Steelworkers).
- Conferences with A. F. Kojetinsky, Steelworkers' District 34 Director, who has offices in the same suite, 313-14, Paul Brown Building.
- Speeches to college classes.
- Speeches to Kiwanis and other clubs.
- Speeches to church groups.
- Attendance at civic and union banquets.
- Participation in CIO and civic forums.
- Participation in such activities as the regional CIO summer school, held last summer at Camp Monticelli, 20 miles from the city.
- Doing everything possible to have unions in his area carry out the adopted policies of National CIO. As an aid in this, he holds meetings twice a month with the various representatives and functionaries of the unions.
- Constant PAC work.

Missouri last year had just about the best PAC record of any state in the country.

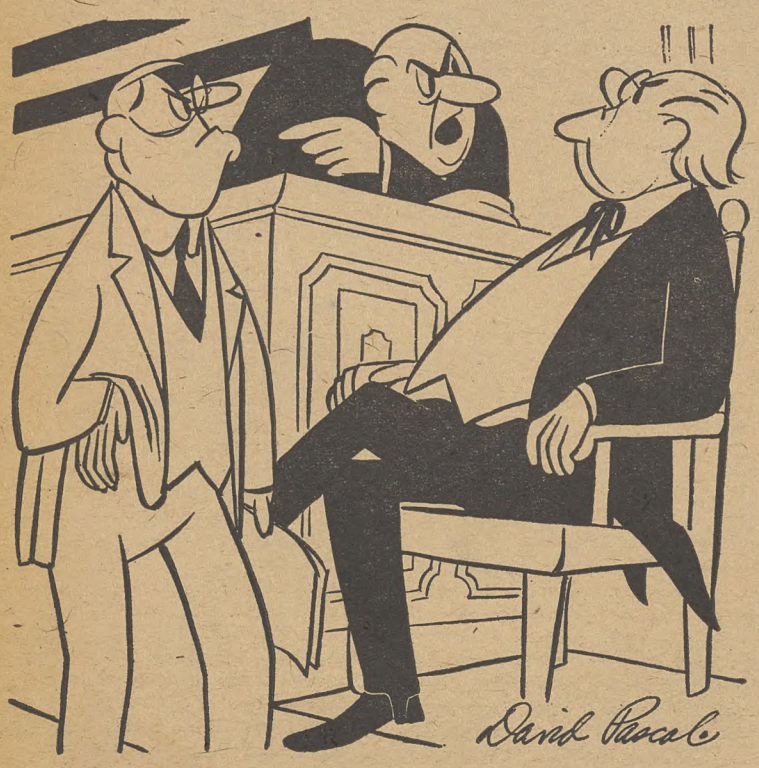
In Garst's big PAC district, the PAC-indorsed ticket of Truman and Barkley carried Ohio, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Oklahoma and Missouri. In all of the states, the liberal vote was vastly increased.

- A lot of trips to council meetings in East St. Louis, Granite City—both in Illinois—St. Louis and Hannibal, Mo.
- Dozens of phone calls on a wide range of subjects.
- An occasional trip to Washington, or some other city, for conferences with CIO Pres. Philip Murray, Haywood, CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, PAC Chairman Jack Kroll and others.
- Lobbying in Springfield and Jefferson City for liberal measures.

All of which doesn't give Del Garst much time for his wife and son, the latter a student at the University of Missouri.

* * *

That's the story of Del Garst, typical CIO regional director in a typical CIO region.



"We are not concerned at the moment, Senator, with foreign aid, farm parity prices, or state control of utilities. Just answer counsel's question 'yes' or 'no.'"

Slick Management Magazine Says Take A Tip From CIO

MAYBE YOU never thought of it this way—but your worries can be a big headache for the boss. They're likely to hit him where it hurts—in the pocketbook.

The current issue (October 15) of Modern Industry, slick management magazine, tells why in an article on "Worry: Parasite on Plant Productivity."

Workers worried by personal problems — unpaid bills, sickness at home, other family troubles—are "an expensive luxury" for a company, it says. Worry can rob "management of productivity and efficiency" by picking "the pocket, mind and health of individual workers."

The article advises management to sponsor good counseling service as a means of reducing labor turnover and increasing production.

Unions are aware of the need to relieve workers of personal worries, hints the article, and mentions the counseling activities of the National CIO Community Services Committee carried on in some 58 industrial communities, including Buffalo, Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit, Wilkes-Barre, Kansas City and San Francisco.

CSC Director Leo Perlis is quoted as saying that the union counselor "often learns of a community's shortcomings and limitations, not only in health and welfare services, but in financing, budgeting, planning, administration and politics.

"It is reasonable to expect then, that the union counselor will soon take his place in the forefront of grass-roots political organization for the single purpose of building an economically just and politically free society for all."

"Farsighted management," adds the article, "will also realize that taking on the weight of workers' personal problems has more than the immediate advantage of increased productivity, morale and economy."

On the whole it's a very interesting article on a subject few bosses think much about — unhappy workers gut profits. A striking photograph of a worried worker has a caption underneath that may catch management's attention if the furrows in the man's forehead don't. It reads: "Management's hope for teamwork to beat rivals can be dashed by harassed workers like this man."

The article doesn't say that higher wages, substantial pensions, health and welfare plans set up by collective bargaining would do a lot to solve a big part of the worries which harass workers—and hinder efficiency.

'I Believe You Are Seriously Misled By AMA'

By NATHAN ROBERTSON

THE AMERICAN Medical Association has recently been catching much of the criticisms it has long deserved for the kind of propaganda campaign it is conducting against the national health insurance plan.

But it has not yet caught the criticisms it should from within its own ranks. The doctors have not learned how badly the AMA is misrepresenting and misleading them. They are being taken for a ride.

As evidence I want to cite my own personal physician — one of the finest men who ever practiced medicine. I have been in his care for almost 20 years and have long regarded him as the ideal physician—the kind the books are written about. But recently I got a letter from him, and on the back of the envelope was one of the AMA's stickers, saying:

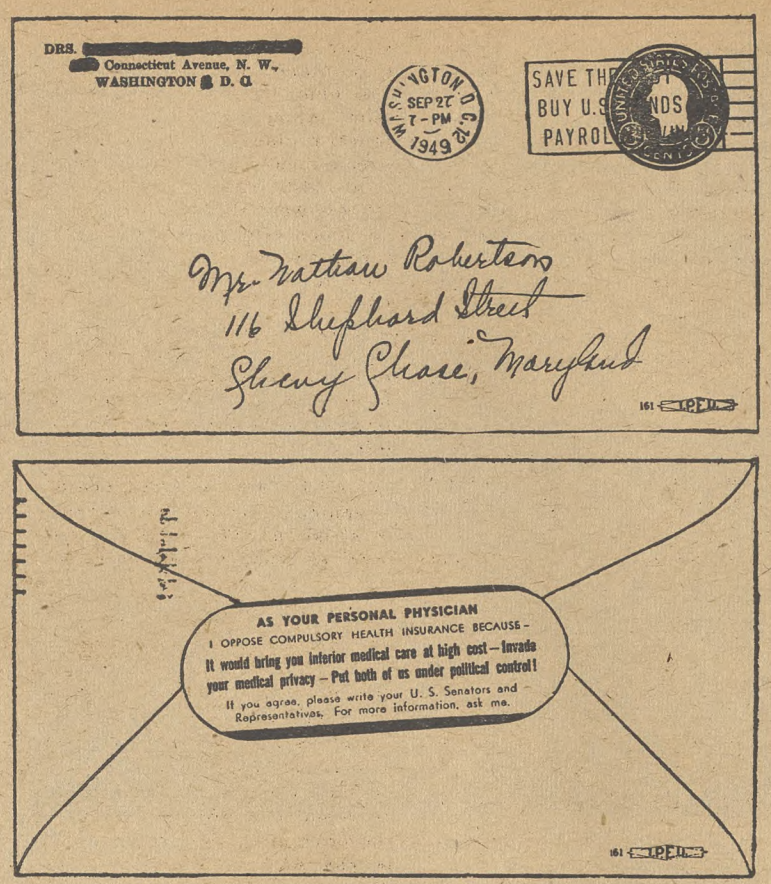
"As Your Personal Physician

"I oppose compulsory health insurance because—

"It would bring you inferior medical care at high cost—

"Invade your medical privacy—Put both of us under political control.

"If you agree, please write your U. S. Senators and Representatives. For more information, ask me.'



MILLIONS OF stickers of that kind are probably going out from doctors' offices to their patients, spreading propaganda which is at best highly questionable, at worst absolutely false. In an effort to do my part to stop it, I am writing my doctor the following letter:

"Dear Dr. ————:

"I was shocked to receive a letter from you with a sticker attached charging that compulsory health insurance would bring me inferior medical care at high cost, would invade my medical privacy, and would put both of us under political control.

"As I am sure you know, Dr. ————, I have a very high regard for you. Otherwise I would not write this letter. I am writing because I believe you have been seriously misled about this legislation which the American Medical Association is fighting so strenuously and so unprofessionally.

"YOUR STICKER shocked me, first, because I do not expect you in your role of my personal physician to attempt to propagandize me on political issues, even one so close to your heart as this one. It shocked me also, because it was so patently false in what it said about health insurance that I am sure it was prepared by the American Medical Association and not you.

"You have a right to think what you will about health insurance as a physician. I have an equal right to my own views as a patient. It happens that I have spent a good many months working for this program.

"I have studied it and feel that I am in at least as good a position to judge its effect as you, busy as you are with caring for your patients and keeping up with the swift advances of medical science.

"Let me take up your three statements about the program one at a time. First, you say it would bring me inferior medical care at high cost. Why should it? I would expect to continue coming to your office, as I do now, for the kind of medical care you felt I needed.

"Why should it become inferior because your bill was paid by the insurance fund instead of coming out of my pocket directly? I know you too well to accept your statement that the kind of medical care you dispense would be affected by where your money came from.

"AS TO THE cost, do you mean to suggest you would charge the insurance fund any more than you do me? I'm sure you don't really mean that. But if you do, you won't get away with it, because the fees will be fixed in advance by local committees composed of both doctors and patients. They probably will be somewhat lower than present fees on the assumption that you will do more business and thus not need to charge each patient so much.

"Next you say the program would invade my medical privacy. Why should it? You would either get a regular annual fee for handling me, in which case you would not need to report anything to the insurance fund; or you would be paid for each visit, in which case you would merely report that I came for an office visit, or you called on me at my home.

"That's all you would have to report unless there were operations or something more complicated. As a matter of fact, your private hospitals today keep more detailed medical case histories on each patient than anything you would have to submit to the insurance fund in order to get your payment. So how would my medical privacy be invaded?

"THIRD, YOU contend that health insurance would put both of us under political control. On that point I think I am better able to judge, as a political writer and student of politics, than you are. I feel sure you are wrong. There is nothing in the bill which even suggests it.

"Our relationship would be exactly the same as it is today, except for the method of payment. Why should there be any political control? Who would exercise the control? The whole program would be run by local committees and all medical questions would be handled entirely by doctors. The bill assures that. I'm afraid you've been taken in by the AMA propaganda, without studying the bill.

"Please believe me when I say this letter is written with the best of good will. I don't know anyone I respect more than you. But I believe you have been taken in by years of one-sided propaganda on an issue of great national importance. I wish, instead of sending around such misleading propaganda, you and the AMA would get busy figuring out a constructive answer to the problem of distributing medical care. Surely you are aware of the need for a better answer than anything the AMA has yet proposed.

Sincerely,
and with best regards,
Nathan Roberston."

Senate Shelves DP Measure Despite Widespread Support

THE SENATE VOTED to recommit the House-approved Celler bill on displaced persons, which was approved by 150 national organizations ranging from liberal to conservative.

The bill would have increased from 205,000 in two years to 339,000 in three the number of European refugees eligible to come to the U. S., extended the present DP act to June 30, 1951, eliminated restrictions based on point of origin or work pursued.

The measure also would have advanced from Dec. 22, 1945, to Jan. 1, 1948, the "cut-off date" for those who have entered Allied occupation zones in Europe.

The Administration fought hard for the passage of the bill, which was bottled for months in the Judiciary Committee headed by Sen. McCarran (D., Nev.) Pres. Truman declared that the measure would eliminate the anti-Semitic and anti-Catholic features of the present act.

When it reached the floor, Sen. Cain (R., Wash.) launched a filibuster, which was continued by Sen. Langer (R., N. D.)

The Democratic leadership on Saturday night, Oct. 15, sought a vote on bill in the hope of breaking the filibuster, which had been in progress since the preceding Thursday. When the vote was taken only 66 members were present and if the vote had been put off, attendance would have fallen even more.

The recommittal motion was offered by Sens. Cain and Eastland (D., Miss.).

DEMOCRATIC LEADER Lucas (Ill.), in a final bid to kill the motion, recalled how a minority on the Judiciary Committee to which it was recommitted with instructions to report back a bill on the subject by next Jan. 25—had fought reporting out the measure.

Lucas charged that Republican Leader Wherry (Neb.) had been "trying to get the bill recommitted ever since it came on the floor."

Sen. Dworshak (R., Ida.), appointed to take the seat of the late Sen. Miller, Democrat and Administration supporter, voted for recommital.

In Geneva U. S. officials with the International Refugee Organization said that the shelving of the bill virtually guarantees that Congress will be asked next year for an additional $25 million for refugee care and resettlement.

The priority classifications of the present act are difficult to administer, and if the bill had been passed administrative work could have been pushed ahead fast enough to clear up the remaining resettlement problem by mid-1950, supporters said.

A NEW YORK Times editorial headed "A Moral Duty Missed" declared "the decisive factor in the situation is that, while the United States has already accepted approximately 104,000 refugees, it excludes most of those fleeing from the Communists, for whose expansion we cannot wholly disclaim responsibility, and that even in respect to the wartime refugees the United States has thus far accepted far fewer than its proportional share as compared with some other countries, notably Great Britain.

"That is scarcely in line with either our moral duty or our tradition as the classic land of political asylum. It must be expected that Congress will find the courage and the energy to pass the bill as soon as it reassembles in January."

That hope also was expresed by Earl G. Harrison, chairman of the Citizens' Committee on Displaced Persons.

Harrison, former dean of the Univ. of Pennsylvania Law School and former Commissioner General of Naturalization, said that the shelved measure was supported by "approximately 150 national organizations including the CIO, AFL, U. S. Chamber of Commerce and three major religious groups."

"There is no further need for 'study' of the problem, as leaders of both the Democratic and Republican parties declared on the floor of the Senate during the recent debate while they pleaded with their collegues to act now. The DPs have been studied for four long years. Now action and resettlement possibilities are needed rather than further postponement or evasiveness."

Public Housing Authority OK's 13,700 More Units

APPLICATIONS for 13,700 dwelling units have been approved by the Public Housing Administration since Sept. 27 for participation in the low-rent housing program authorized by the Housing Act passed this session.

Many more thousands had already been approved by the PHA earlier in the year; 810,000 units can be built in the next six years under provisions of the act. They are reserved for families with incomes so low that they can't afford to buy or rent privately built homes.

The communities that came into the program during the past two weeks were:

Ecorse, Mich.; Lincoln, Neb.; River Rouge and Hamtramck, Mich.; McAllen, Mercedes, Fort Worth, and McKinney, Texas; Union City, N. J.; Chattanooga, Tenn.; Barstow, Chino, Colton, Needles, Merced, Redlands and San Bernardino, Calif.; New Britain, Conn.; Annapolis, Md.

Mayaguez, Puerto Rico; Cambridge, Mass.; McComb City, Miss.; Kinston, N. C.; Gainesville, Selma, Rome and Augusta, Ga.; Danville, Ill.; Muncie, Ind.; Saginaw, Mich.; Bristol, Va.; Tuckahoe, N. Y.; Harrisburg, Farrell, Pottstown, Ambridge, Aliquippa, and Beaver Falls, Pa.

Springfield, Ill.; Waltham, and Lawrence, Mass.; Duluth, Minn.; Burlington, N. J.; Orange, N. J.; Urbana, Ill.; Daytona Beach, Fla.; Pontiac, Mich.

Klein Blasts Dulles Stand

U. S. Rep. Arthur G. Klein (D., N. Y.) has entered the New York Senatorial campaign with release of a blast at Sen. John Foster Dulles (R.)

Klein's statement:

"I have read with shocked amazement the news reports of the Columbus Day speech at Buffalo by the Dewey candidate for the U. S. Senate, Dulles, in which he falsely accused the Democratic national administration of 'imprisoning' certain Hungarian refugees and then claimed a credit, not rightfully his, for their release.

"I am shocked that Dulles should attempt to make political capital out of the human agony of refugees from the Nazi and Communist blight.

"I am shocked that he should claim political credit for the kind of simple humanitarian act which every decent Congressman performs day after day without fanfare.

"But, if the desperate plight of the victims of oppression is to be made a political football, I am doubly shocked that he should take credit for an act of mercy performed by the Democratic Attorney General, former Sen. J. Howard McGrath."

Bell Strike Ends, But Fight In Court Continues

By CLAYTON W. FOUNTAIN

BELL AIRCRAFT workers started back to their jobs at Buffalo, N. Y., last Wednesday under a settlement ending their 18½ week strike, but the corporation stepped up its prosecution of strike leaders in the Niagara County courts.

Less than two hours after the first 200 members of UAW-CIO Local 501 returned to work for the first time since June 13, 23 strike leaders went on trial for contempt of court in Niagara Falls before N. Y. Supreme Court Justice Munson.

The strike settlement, which provides for submitting all issues in dispute to final and binding arbitration by a five-member fact-finding board, was reached Sunday night, Oct. 16. It was negotiated by members of the board in alternate meetings with Bell Aircraft officials and UAW-CIO Local 501 strike leaders. Ratification of the terms of the settlement was voted by the strikers two nights later.

"The terms of the agreement were a solid defeat for the corporation, which had previously resisted all attempts to arbitrate the dispute and had demanded total destruction of the union as the price of peace," union leaders said.

UNDER THE settlement all workers returned except 22 whose "employability" was challenged by the company on the grounds that they were "subversives" or had incited and participated in strike violence. The "employability" of these 22 leaders will be the first issue arbitrated by the fact-finding board. After that the board will act upon all the economic and other issues on which the corporation had refused to move in negotiations, including a pension plan.

The old contract, which expired on June 12, was re-instated, with a slight modification of the union shop clause until the board makes its final recommendations for a new contract. Seniority was suspended for one week, to expedite resumption of operations, after which it went back into effect.

The end of the long, bitter strike was brought about by one of the strongest demonstrations of militancy ever put on by a CIO union of 1700 members. Despite injunctions, mass arrests, police brutality, tear gas and a stream-lined back-to-work movement—1400 of the original 1700 strikers were sticking firmly with the union after nine tense weeks during which the corporation tried to get them back into the plant.

When its back-to-work movement failed, the company tried hiring strike-breakers — but that move was snubbed out by the fact-finding board when it went into action.

IN ADDITION to two separate contempt actions, more than 50 strike leaders are due to be tried on charges of conspiracy, rioting and second and third degree assault. It appears that the corporation is determined to continue its punitive action in the courts.

Thus the union faces three big jobs: first, maintaining and rebuilding the union in the plant; second, presenting the facts to the fact-finding board; third, defending the strike leaders in the courts.

The fact-finding board, appointed under the direction of Governor Dewey, includes Dr. E. E. Day, chancellor of Cornell; Chancellor Samuel Capen of Buffalo University; Elinore M. Herrick, New York Herald Tribune personnel director; Col. Charles Garside, New York attorney; and Paul Shipman Andrews, dean of Syracuse University Law School.

Open Books, Firm Told

A NLRB trial examiner recommended that a company be ordered to open its books to union inspection.

If the recommendation is approved by the five-man board itself, it may set a precedent of great importance to labor relations, said Paul Styles, NLRB regional director. He recalled that Pres. Walter Reuther, CIO Auto Workers, at Atlanta, raised the issue while bargaining with General Motors in 1946.

The recommendation was in a case arising from a wage dispute between the AFL Leather Workers and the Southern Saddlery Co. of Chattanooga, Tenn. The company during a year of bargaining contended that it could not pay the increase demanded, but refused to produce any evidence of its inability to pay.

Prof. Says Strikes Apt To Be Exaggerated

Because strikes are dramatic eevnts, their importance is apt to be exaggerated, Prof. N. Arnold Tolles of Cornell Univ. said last week.

Speaking at the opening session of a lecture-discussion series sponsored by the extension division of the New York State School of Industrial and Labor Relations at Cornell, Dr. Tolles said:

"Strikes themselves rarely cause a loss of production of as much as a week a year. Of course the indirect losses are much greater than the losses at the plants that are struck. On the other hand, much of the production that seems to be lost may be made up through greater activity before and after the strike."

Strike Wins Paid Birthday Holidays

Employes of Galat Packing Co., Akron, Ohio, will be off on their birthdays, with pay, under a new contract signed by Local 372, CIO Packinghouse Workers.

Easter Monday is added to the list of holidays, making a total of eight paid holidays a year. The contract was signed at the end of 37-day strike.

Other terms: 10-cent a week increase for work clothes; continuation of 36-hour week. Wages were left open, pending settlements with the larger packing companies.

Patman Says A&P 'Court' Fines Thieves

THE GIANT A&P grocery chain has set up a "court" through which it levies fines against customers accused of stealing, according to a statement placed in the Congressional Record by Rep. Wright Patman (D., Tex.).

"I am opposed to theft in any form," Patman said. "At the same time, if a kleptomaniac is on the loose in any town, justice is not served by a chain store manager levying a fine against him instead of using the courts—local and state—which are set up for that purpose.

"It is rather ironical that the A&P levies a fine and collects the penalty of $10 or $15 for every $1 the person is accused of stealing when at the end of the year that particular store has sold more merchandise than was billed to it; in other words there was an inventory gain instead of an inventory loss."

PATMAN said it would be "natural" for the store to collect from a person who had stolen a loaf of bread the actual price of the loaf "or to turn the customer over to the authorities for the proper punitive action."

But, he added, "A&P has a system all its own. It assesses and receives arbitrary sums of money to reimburse A&P not only for the price of the loaf of bread but to pay A&P for other merchandise which A&P assumes the customer has stolen on other occasions.

"The record in the criminal case again A&P in which A&P was found guilty shows, for example, in one case where an average of 70 cents of merchandise per person had been stolen from a particular store. A&P collected anywhere from $1 to $20 per person to cover the cost of the 70 cents worth of merchandise which the person had stolen."

Locals Leaving FE

Nine of the ten locals of District 6, CIO Farm Equipment Workers have voted to withdraw from FE and seek affiliation with other CIO unions, according to Pres. Peter Aversa of District 6. The nine locals two weeks ago voted against merging with the left-wing Electrical Workers-CIO.

FEPC First In January?

Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D., Minn.) urged in a Senate speech that FEPC be the first bill taken up at the second session of the 81st Congress, and that the fight for it be pushed "until the last filibusterer is exhausted and until a final, democratic vote has been taken."

He pledged the support "of all those who agree that we must act now to redeem ourselves in the eyes of our own people and the rest of the world." He termed the failure of Congress to pass civil rights legislation "our most monumental failure."

Chicago Chest Unit Names Townsend

Willard Townsend, president of the United Transport Service Employes-CIO, has been named a member of the budget committee of the Chicago Community Chest.

Townsend was the American member of the World Delegation to Study Labor Conditions in Japan and Korea. For the ILO and the State Department he did similar jobs in Cuba and Mexico. He is a member of the national committee of ADA and a vice chairman of the National Urban League.

Once There Were 11, Now There Are None

The Communists held 11 seats in Parliament — before Norway's elections. They lost 10. Then there was a recount, and it was found that 51 ballots counted for the Communists were Labor party votes. So, the sole remaining Communist, Party Chairman Emil Loevlien, is now also out.

Ben Nathanson, CIO Newspaper Guild representative, announces that in a union shop election held at the Huntington Park Signal, Huntington Park, Calif., out of a total of 22 employes eligible to vote, 20 cast ballots in favor of the Union Shop. This involved editorial, business and advertising offices.

Pres. Thomas E. Andert of the United Optical and Instrument Workers, reports the following elections: Hilberth Optical Co., Washington, D. C., 4 to 1 in favor of UOIWA; New York Jewelry Co., Washington, D. C., 2 to 1 in favor of UOIWA; Armstrong Daily Sports, Boston, Mass., 18 to 0 in favor of UOIWA. In an NLRB election held at the David White Optical Co., Milwaukee, Wis., the workers voted 106 to 93 in favor of UOIWA. Rep. Don Drobic was in charge of the campaign.

CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda reports that clerical workers of the Texas Co., Casper, Wyo., cast 13 ballots for Local 230 of the Oil Workers and 8 against; 21 were eligible. Production and maintenance employes of the Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., Casper, Wyo., gave 62 votes to Local 230. There were 141 eligible, 111 votes were cast, 44 voted no union. Dir. B. J. Rickey of the Oil Workers deserves a great deal of credit for these victories.

CIO Reg. Dir. Tim Flynn reports that Local 1304, CIO Steelworkers, won an NLRB election at the S. T. Johnson Oil Burner Co., Oakland, Cal. With all eligible workers voting, Local 1304 won 36 to 20. Business Agent William Van Curen was in charge of the campaign.

The writer addressed the Georgia Industrial Union Council convention, the largest and best ever held by the council. The telephone workers were well represented. CWA Pres. Joseph Beirne spoke to the delegates. CIO State Dir. Charles Gillman was unanimously elected. He is well thought of.

The writer also addressed a meeting of telephone workers in Indianapolis, Ind., who are proud of their affiliation with the CIO. From Indianapolis, I journeyed to Louisville to attend the Kentucky IUC convention. I was a guest of the IUC banquet, and on the following day in an address to the delegates I pointed out the CIO's problems and objectives. Under the leadership of Brother Whitehouse, the Kentucky Council has made great strides. The convention voiced full support of the CIO, its policies, and to President Murray, and condemned all those who by cowardly, vicious attacks are trying to discredit the CIO.

The UAW-CIO has agreed to a settlement of Bell Aircraft strike. This has been one of the most bitterly contested strikes in many years, and continued for 19 weeks. The company and Buffalo County authorities used every means at their command to break morale of strikers, who stood solid. Congratulations to Jack Livingston, his associates, and the members for the gallant fight made against terrific odds.

$25,000 For Sixteen

An estimated $25,000 in back pay is to be paid 16 former employes of the Cathey Lumber Co., Montgomery, Ala., as a result of the order made by the NLRB in a case bought by the CIO Woodworkers. The case resulted from a strike that began at the company's mill in October, 1946.

The ruling applies to all union members whose rights might have been interferred with and not just to the three named in the union's original charge. Robert Denham, NLRB general counsel, had argued that any ruling should apply only to the three.

In addition to the back pay, the company was ordered to pay reimbursement for losses suffered because of discharge, to rehire the men and to "cease and desist" from refusing to bargain with the union and from discouraging membership in the Union.

One of the former employes, Fred Smith, died several months after the strike and the Board ordered that his heirs be paid the difference between his actual earnings during the period and the amount he would normally have earned.

Union Counseling Pays Off In Chicago

Acme Steel at Chicago shuts down for two weeks a year, and the employes, members of the CIO Steelworkers, get a two-week paid vacation — if they have qualified by length of service. Newer employes are just laid off.

On their return to work, the newer employes thought they might be entitled to unemployment pay for those two weeks. The company had done nothing about it, so the Local's counselors went to work. They found out that claims could be filed, and those laid-off workers will soon get their benefits.

Place In CIO Urged For Anti-CP Locals

THE INDIANA CIO Council convention has called on the Natl. CIO Executive Board to set up an organization providing a haven for local unions which rebel against Communist domination by their international unions.

The resolution, which was passed unanimously, said that an organization should be created for those locals and members who may be expelled from their unions because of their loyalty to CIO and its policies. The convention was at Fort Wayne.

Other resolutions called for increased political action, an adequate federal retirement system and repeal of wartime excise taxes. A 12-point program recommended by the council's executive board was adopted. The program includes:

Support of the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation at the Riley Hospital at Indianapolis, establishment of a NLRB office in Indianapolis; support of the Governor's safety Commission.

Enactment of legislation to provide a staff of at least 1000 field examiners for the State Labor Commission; support of the Indiana United Labor League; a reduction in labor-sponsored bills before the state legislature to five or six; institution of a public works program in Indiana, and full support of the Natl. CIO legislative program.

Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers told the convention that the steel strike was planned by Wall Street bankers and was forced on the union. McDonald called the contributory health and pension plans on which the steel companies are insisting disguised wage cuts.

Reg. Dir. Frank Bender, Baltimore, Md., spoke in place of CIO Vice Pres. and Director of Organization Allan S. Haywood.

Rep. Madden (D.) flayed the steel companies for their insistence on contributory plans and commended the council and Indiana PAC for "an outstanding job" in the 1948 campaign.

Rep. Walsh (D.) hailed the passage by the House of a revised Social Security bill as "a step forward, although not a step far enough forward."

Other speakers included Indiana Secy. of State Fleming (who is a CIO member) and Lt. Gov. Watkins.

Ralph Meyers of the Utility Workers was elected to the council's executive board to fill a vacancy.

Indianapolis was chosen as the 1950 convention site after the council's anti-discrimination committee reported that it had been assured by the city authorities that there would be no discrimination against CIO members.

Discrimination against Negro delegates to a meeting of the CIO Clothing Workers at Indianapolis some time ago led to continuance of the parley at a union hall.

More PACtion Ala. Slogan, Officers Are Elected

"ONLY IF WE increase our own political activity can we hope to get from our legislative bodies, state and national, the measures that will benefit not just a privileged few but the people as a whole."

With these words, 274 delegates from local unions throughout the state placed the 1949 conference of the Alabama CIO Political Action Committee squarely behind the CIO's PAC program.

The delegates adopted a resolution calling on all locals to strengthen their PAC organizations by:

Full support for the PAC dollar drive for 1949 and 1950; all-out registration and voting efforts; active committees in each local.

W. J. Shewmake, Birmingham, staff representative of the Steelworkers, was elected president to succeed Sam Honey, Huntsville, staff representative of the Textile Workers, who did not seek re-election.

J. M. Van Houten, Montgomery, Communications Workers, was elected first vice president. Joe P. Bell, Birmingham, Steelworkers, was elected second vice president.

Eugene M. Wells, Birmingham, secretary-treasurer of the Alabama CIO Council, was re-named secretary-treasurer of the State CIO-PAC. The annual conference was held at Birmingham.

Red Workers Will Work Free For Joe

Joseph Stalin will get an airplane as a present from the Prague aircraft workers on his 70th birthday Dec. 21.

The employes of the Aero factory here will work Sunday, Nov. 6, not only at no overtime pay, but at no pay at all, to finance the gift.

Guild Eyes Canadian Windfall Wistfully

The Canadian newsprint industry will get a windfall of $42 million annually because of the devaluation of Canadian currency, according to The Guild Reporter, publication of the CIO Newspaper Guild.

It is explained that newsprint supply contracts stipulate payment in U. S. dollars, each of which is now worth $1.10 in Canadian dollars. U. S. publishers now pay a base price of $100 per ton for newsprint, which means that for each ton sold in this country Canadian mills will be receiving $110 in Canadian dollars.

U. S. publishers are importing newsprint in excess of 4,200,000 tons annually. The arithmetic of it is that the gross increase in annual receipts for the Canadian newsprint industry will be $42 million or more a year.

The Reporter speculates—wistfully, it is supposed—that if the entire $42 million were rebated in the form of price cuts, it would be sufficient to raise the pay of every newspaper worker in the U. S. and Canada by about 5%.

Standin' In Need Of Prayer

Readers of the Wage Earner are urged to set aside Oct. 31 as "Pray for Westbrook Pegler Day." In a page 1 story, captioned "Not Hated," and carrying a picture of Pegler, the Wage Earner says it views Pegler "not as an enemy to be hated, but as a fellow man in need of prayer."

The story asks all readers to "observe this date thenceforward in the earnest hope that Pegler will rejoin the forces working for social justice and economic democracy." The Wage Earner is published by the Association of Catholic Trade Unionists.

Pegler, who started in newspaper work as a sports writer, and later turned columnist, after expending his venom for years on the labor movement, recently announced in one of his columns that he is against all unions.

(Ed. Note: Pegler's repentance seems unlikely. In a recent column he brushes off the ACTU by saying that the organization does not speak for the Catholics and then launches into an attack on CIO Pres. Murray by saying he is unimpressed by Murray's moves against the Communists in the CIO.)

Mrs. Rapoport Gets New Post

CIO'ers who attended one of the several summer schools held this year at the Univ. of Wisconsin's School for Workers will be interested to know that Mrs. Gwen Goodrich Rapoport, popular instructor at the school, has a new job. She has just been appointed associate director of union programs at Univ. College, Univ. of Chicago. A. A. Liveright is director of the project.

Mrs. Rapoport will be in charge of the recruiting and development of the program, which is an experiment in long-term workers' education. She will also be associated with the workers' education training program being developed to train discussion leaders for local union education programs.

Before her appointment at the Univ. of Wisconsin in 1948, Mrs. Rapoport was executive secretary of the Cooperative Health Federation of America. From 1944 to 1947 she did educational worker for the Cooperative League of the U. S. A.

Ky. Council Asks Higher Compensation Rates

INCREASED unemployment and workmen's compensation payments were advocated by the Kentucky CIO Council convention which met at Louisville.

The convention, which was attended by 207 delegates, also recommended that the present state unemployment compensation law be amended to provide payments to strikers.

The delegates, in another resolution, urged the CIO to provide a haven for any locals in communist-dominated CIO affiliates. A companion resolution condemned CIO members and locals in Kentucky following the Communist party line.

Moral and financial support to the striking Steelworkers was pledged in another resolution.

COUNCIL PRES. Al Whitehouse's report to the convention stressed the importance of increased work prior to primary elections.

"The 1948 Kentucky election taught us in a very clear and forceful way," Whitehouse said, "how terribly important it is that we get out a large vote in the primary election.

"Twelve or 13 thousand more votes would have defeated Virgil Chapman and elected John Y. Brown and Kentucky would have had a U. S. Senator who would have voted and worked for both the CIO and Pres. Truman's program . . ."

COUNCIL officers were not chosen this year. (Elections are held biennially.)

Speakers included Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization; Mayor Charles Farnsley of Louisville; George C. Burton, Kentucky Commissioner of Industrial Relations; Stewart Meacham, administrative assistant to Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers; George L-P Weaver, director of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination; CIO Reg. Dirs. William B. Taylor and Robert J. Davidson.

ACLU Finds Greatest Threat To Civil Liberties in 29 Years

A FEELING OF "imagined insecurity" created by the cold war with Communism has given the world's strongest democracy a bad case of jitters which threatens to weaken our civil rights permanently, says the annual report of the American Civil Liberties Union.

Entitled, "In the Shadow of Fear," the report surveys the record of the year up to August 1949, and finds it pretty bad. "The present exceeds in its severity, intolerance and fears any such period in the Union's 29 years of activity," it states, "and the dangers of enduring damage are therefore the greater, as well as the obligation to combat them."

The report serves as an excellent reference book, giving a summary of the main issues involving civil liberties, such as the loyalty purge, the hearings of the House Un-American Activities Committee, lynchings, freedom in schools and colleges, racial minorities, censorship, labor's rights under the Taft-Hartley law, wire tapping and other matters.

A "Balance Sheet of Civil Liberties" lists favorable and unfavorable decisions of the U. S. Supreme Court and lower courts, and gives chief issues pending in the courts.

Copies of the pamphlet may be obtained from the American Civil Liberties Union, 170 Fifth Ave., New York 10, N. Y., for 25c a copy.

Strikers OK Singer Pact

A 24-WEEK strike at the Singer sewing machine plant at Elizbeth, N. J., was ended last week after more than 5000 members of CIO Electrical Workers voted to accept a contract which contained some improvements but continued an incentive piecework system that the union had charged was a speedup.

About 1000 workers not under the incentive plan will receive wage boosts of from two to six cents an hour, but no general wage increase was granted. Vacation benefits and work provisions were improved, with a three-week vacation for many of the employes. Better seniority and grievance rules were provided.

The contract covering the 9000 Elizabeth workers follows a pattern set recently at a smaller Singer plant in Bridgeport, Conn.

Hospital Employes Reject Public Workers

Left-wing remnants at Rochester, Minn., the Minnesota CIO took another shellacking when workers at St. Mary's Hospital rejected the left-wing United Public Workers as union representatives in favor of the newly-formed Local 600, CIO Optical and Instrument Workers. The vote was 144 to 36.

In the campaign, UPW officials charged Local 600 was inspired by Rodney Jacobson, state CIO secretary-treasurer. After Jacobson accused the UPW of disloyalty to the CIO, the left-wingers filed a $75,000 libel suit against him, but Jacobson refused to retract.

Public Workers Flay News, Swim

The CIO News and its editor, Allan L. Swim, are denounced in a resolution approved unanimously by the Executive Board of the CIO Public Workers.

Under the editorship of Swim, the resolution says, "the CIO News has become a partisan, factional newspaper and is being employed as a tool in raiding activities against the United Public Workers of America."

The resolution concludes by saying, "We condemn the factional, disruptive journalism practiced by Allan Swim in the CIO News. We insist that it be stopped."

Ohio Labor Cooperates Politically

FORMATION of a political action coordinating committee, which includes official representatives of all major labor organizations in Ohio, was announced at Columbus last week.

First official action of the newly-formed political arm of organized labor in Ohio was a blast at the so-called Massachusetts-type ballot, which it labeled "a deliberate attack on our two-party system and an attempt at political manipulation of our election laws by the Taft organization, trying for temporary political advantage without regard for the basic democratic principles involved."

This ballot lists candidates by office, makes it impossible to vote a straight party ticket by making one mark, and eliminates a ballot to which Ohioans have grown accustomed.

Included in the newly-formed United Labor League of Ohio are representatives of 1,200,000 Trade Unionists in the state.

They represent the Ohio CIO Council, the Ohio State Federation of Labor, the United Mine Workers, the International Association of Machinists, and the following Railroad Brotherhoods: the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, the Order of Railway Conductors, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks and Maintenance of Way Employes.

FOLLOWING an organizational meeting held in Columbus, the United Labor League of Ohio elected an executive committee composed of leaders of all of these organizations.

The executive committee includes: Co-chairmen, Secy-Treas. Philip Hannah of Ohio State Federation of Labor, and Secy-Treas. Jacob Clayman of the Ohio CIO Council; Secy-Treas. Roland Owens, District 6, United Mine Workers; and Matthew De More, Machinists; C. H. Spangler, Railroad Brotherhoods, and Thomas Ryan, CIO Communications Workers of America.

Co-chairmen Hannah and Clayman, speaking for the executive committee, said that all of the organizations represented were in perfect accord and determined to work together in the field of political action. They added:

"We share the complete realization that the actions of Senator Taft and other reactionary leaders affect all workers in the same fashion.

"We are jointly convinced that the interests of all workers will best he served by all of organized labor working toward a common goal: getting every trade unionist in this state (and every member of his family) registered, acquainted with all the issues in the election and to the polls on Election Day.

"That shall be the goal of the United Labor League of Ohio. We are determined to achieve it in 1950."

The three men to the right are members of the State Fair Project Committee of the Birmingham CIO Council. Shown are John J. Playfair, president of the Alabama CIO; J. N. Cason, member of the AFL Picture Machine Operators, and three committee members, Robert C. Lynn, E. L. Lindsey, chairman, and Joe Lindsey.

CIO Acts On Two Fronts Against Racial Bias

THE CIO HAS initiated legal action on two fronts against racial discrimination.

The CIO joined in the appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court attacking the validity of the segregated dining car regulations of the Southern Railway.

In a brief filed in the Supreme Court by CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg, the CIO supported the position taken by Elmer W. Henderson in his suit against the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Southern Railway Company, in which the dining car regulations of the Southern Railway are assailed as discriminatory and contrary to the Interstate Commerce Act and the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution.

GOLDBERG asked the Supreme Court to overrule its decision in the case of Plessy v. Ferguson (163 U.S. 537) holding that a state statue requiring racial separation in public carriers was not a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment. He contended that the Supreme Court's decision in the Plessy case was founded on the assumption that the Negro race was inferior and, given the freedom of choice, all whites would refuse to associate with Negroes. Commenting on this, he said in his brief:

"The assumption is false. The CIO is living proof that it is false. The time has come, we believe, for the court to disavow that assumption and the constitutional doctrine which rests upon it."

THE CIO ALSO initiated proceedings to revoke the corporate charter of the American Bowling Congress because of the discriminatory practices of that organization.

The proceedings were commenced by a Notice signed by Goldberg on behalf of CIO Pres. Philip Murray and other CIO officials, directed to Ivan A. Elliott, attorney general for the state of Illinois, and John S. Boyle, State's Attorney of Cook County.

It requests these officials to bring proceedings to oust the American Bowling Congress of its corporate charter. The American Bowling Congress is organized under the laws of Illinois.

In the Notice, the CIO General Counsel reviewed the background of the American Bowling Congress' activities and then charged "the American Bowling Congress has become big business. It possesses one of the most iron-clad monopolies in the United States, having over one million members and exercising an absolute control over the largest single competitive sport in the United States and the largest organized competitive sport in the world."

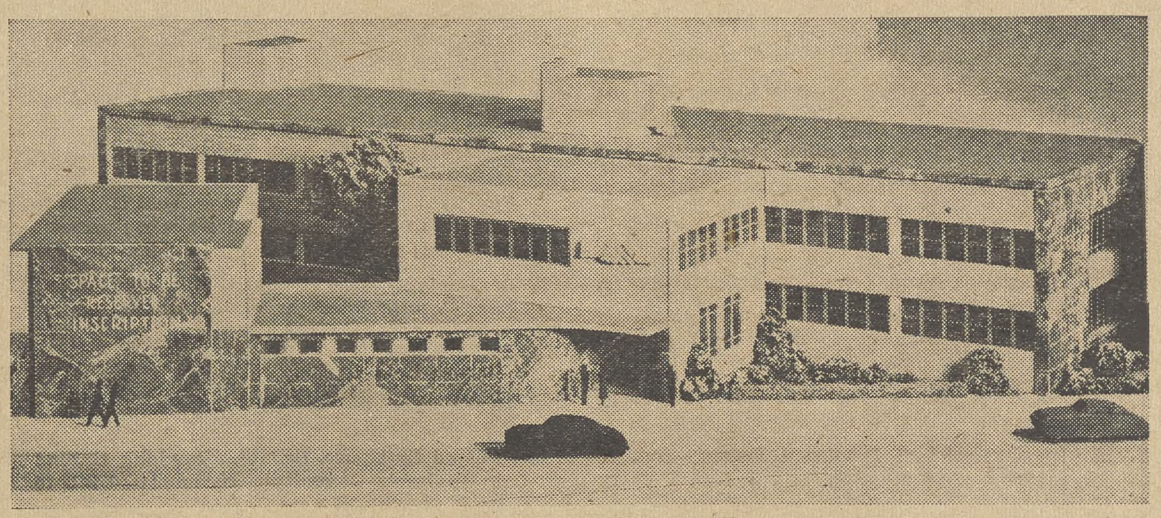
The CIO counsel pointed out the constitution and by-laws of the American Bowling Congress restricts its activities to teams "of the white male sex." Referring to those provisions, the CIO complaint said:

"These provisions of the Constitution establish the admitted discriminatory policy of the ABC and provide for its enforcement. In addition, this discriminatory policy has been carried into effective practice by the ABC and its affiliated organizations. As far as is known, no non-white bowler has ever participated in an ABC national tournament."

These provisions in the ABC constitution and by-laws and the discriminatory practices of the ABC, it was charged by the CIO, violated the Articles of Incorporation of the ABC, the Illinois Civil Rights statutes, similar civil rights statutes of other states, the Sherman Anti-Turst Act, the Illinois Constitution, and the U. S. Constitution.

The CIO's Notice requested the Attorney General of Illinois and the State's Attorney in Cook County to bring proceedings quo warranto to forfeit the corporate charter of the ABC. The Notice concluded by saying:

"In the event that you do not do so within thirty days, we hereby serve notice upon you that we shall apply to a court of competent jurisdiction of the State of Illinois for leave to file a quo warranto proceeding on our own relation against the American Bowling Congress because of the matters referred to above."



THIS IS the architect's model for the million and quarter dollar medical center in Philadelphia, the joint project of the CIO Clothing Workers and Philadelphia clothing manufacturers. Ground was broken last week. The center will offer free medical services to 25,000 clothing workers. Employers will contribute $350,000 annually for services and upkeep.

Says Local Will Oust Fitzgerald

A MEMBERSHIP meeting this week will expel Albert Fitzgerald, president of the CIO Electrical Workers from his own Local 201 at Lynn, Mass., Frederick Kelley, business agent for the local, predicted last week.

The Lynn executive board has recommended that Fitzgerald, Organizer Joseph Turkowski and Executive Board Members Leo Corcoran and Jerome Flynn be barred from holding office in the local for a year. For Fitzgerald, such a punishment would be meaningless because he holds no local union office.

A membership meeting of Local 201 several weeks ago suspended Fitzgerald, Turkowski, Corcoran and Flynn.

The four were charged by Kelley with acting "against the good and welfare of the membership" after they failed to follow membership instructions as delegates to the recent UE convention. In a referendum election, members of the Lynn local had voted 7778 to 3078 in favor of the pro-CIO convention slate headed by Kelley. Fitzgerald and the others disregarded the referendum and voted for the left-wing slate.

CORCORAN, THE only one to show up at the Lynn meeting, merely picked up a copy of the union constitution to give to his lawyer. Fitzgerald's reason for not appearing was that he was busy with Westinghouse and GE negotiations. "He spent two half-days altogether on those negotiations," Kelley said.

If the Lynn local expels the four men they can appeal to the district executive board and from there to the national UE Executive Board.

Kelley charged that UE leaders have been consistently violating CIO policy, their most recent such action being to accept Farm Equipment Workers locals voting to affiliate with UE. The CIO Executive Board had directed FE to merge with United Auto Workers.

Illinois State Unit Joins GWA-CIO

A large group of employes of the Illinois Dept. of Labor has rebelled against the anti-CIO policy of the United Public Workers and joined the CIO Government Workers, IUMSWA.

The new local, 1006, is busy organizing the remainder of the employes. It is conducting a training course for civil service examinations in clerical and stenographic classifications. V. L. Murphy is president of 1006.

81st's Record Solid—And Also Disappointing

THE 81ST CONGRESS has gone home, weary and almost talked out.

After 10 months of sessions, its 531 members had talked their way through nearly 15,500 pages of the Congressional Record. They passed a not unimpressive number of important bills.

A Congressional physician indicated, in polite and scientific medical talk, that members of the House and Senate were getting tired and punchy, and that they need a rest.

It was a Congress which passed a new 75c minimum wage bill, appropriated funds for European recovery, gave additional strength to the Labor Dept., and passed a long-needed housing act for slum clearances and home building.

IT WAS ALSO A Congress that passed H.R. 627, "an act for the relief of the Southern Fireproofing Co. of Cincinnati, Ohio"; H.R. 5305, "an act to increase the retired pay of certain members of the former Lighthouse Service"; H. R. 4966, an act Enabling the Hawaiian legislature to authorize the city of Honolulu to issue sewer bonds; and a host of other bills, important and unimportant, necessary for the conduct of the government of the United States.

The 81st Congress started off in a blaze of glory, fresh from the impressive 1948 election victory of liberal Democratic candidates. Sworn into office amidst newspaper predictions of another "100 days" like the first F.D.R. Congress in 1933, the 81st almost got bogged down. Weeks lengthened into months before progress began to register on the basic elements of the Fair Deal program.

But at adjournment, its record looked both solid and promising in some respects, and disappointing in others.

TAFT-HARTLEY ACT repeal, a prime mandate of the 1948 elections, was sabotaged in both the Senate and the House. The House passed the vicious Wood Bill, then—in a surge of liberal voting—sent it back to Committee. The Senate rejected the Thomas bill to repeal T-H, then approved Sen. Taft's package of amendments which could only have strengthened Taft-Hartley on the statute books.

The 81st Congress took little action on health insurance. Promised changes in the Senate rules, aimed at blunting the filibuster weapon held by southern reactionaries, were watered down by the Dixiecrat-Republican coalition. As a result, the important civil rights program failed to get beyond first base.

Rent control, a prime need in terms of inflationary conditions, was extended—but in such form as to allow widespread rent increases throughout the country.

The record was better on many other bills, domestic and foreign. The housing program became law, after years of demand from labor and tenant groups, and Uncle Sam is getting set to tear down thousands of slums. New low-rent public housing units will go up in their place.

THE MINIMUM wage in interstate commerce—set at 40c in 1940—almost doubled, to 75c an hour, and some of the law's enforcement provisions were greatly strengthened. Coverage, however, was reduced.

Reciprocal trade agreements, necessary for international trade and economic recovery, were extended, as the President had asked. Congress gave additional funds to carry on the European Recovery Program, and approved the Atlantic Pact to back up the defenses of the democratic world.

Some bills made progress, but not enough—and they'll be high on the agenda when Congress comes back to Washington in January.

A social security measure—increasing coverage by 11 million workers and raising benefits by 70% to 80%—was passed by the House. It is almost certain to be adopted by the Senate next year.

THE DISPLACED Persons bill—to remove discriminatory features from the law passed by the 80th Congress and to increase up to about 300,000 the number of war refugees allowed into the country—was passed in the House. But in the Senate it ran into obstacles, both in committee and on the floor. It was put on ice until January, and may have difficulty then.

It was a Congress confronted at crucial periods by a tight and efficient Dixiegop coalition. The coalition threw its weight around heavily, and halted progress on many important pieces of legislation.

It was a Congress with many "freshmen"—the result of the 1948 repudiation of the 80th Congress. In both the Senate and House the liberals—newcomers and veterans alike—made their influence felt.

And, to an overwhelming degree, the men and women who had asked for labor's support at the polls carried out their pledges to the people.

Box Score on Congress

17.	Improved tax structure.	No action.

Fair Deal Planned For Defense Unit

A fair deal for civilian employes of the U. S. Dept. of Defense is promised in a statement of policy issued last week by Defense Secy. Louis Johnson. The Department is responsible for the security of the country.

Here are some of the principles which the statement says will guide the department's conduct of human relations:

No discrimination because of race, sex, color, religion, national origin, lawful political affiliation or physical handicap.

Safe and healthful working conditions.

The right to join or refrain from joining any lawful employe organization.

Wants State To Aid In Jersey Housing

"While state aid for housing has not yet become an established practice in New Jersey, we may well emulate the successful experience of the State of New York in this matter," Harold S. Buttenheim of Morristown, editor of the American City Magazine, says.

"Starting under a Democratic administration and continued and increased under the present Republican administration," says Buttenheim, "New York state voters have authorized in recent years housing bond issues totaling $435,000,000 and seem quite certain to approve an additional $300,000,000 at the coming election. "It is to be hoped that the Garden State will not lag behind the Empire State in its concern for meeting the housing needs of its families of low and medium incomes."

CIO Marking UN Birthday

CIO members and unions joined other American citizens today in celebration of United Nations Day. October 24 is the UN's fourth birthday. The event was observed internationally by each of UN's 59 member nations in its own fashion and according to its own customs.

United Nations films, posters, and pamphlets by the thousands were sent to CIO unions by the National CIO's Dept. of Education & Research as part of a campaign to interest CIO members in sharing in the observance of UN Day.

It was on Oct. 24, 1945, that all the required ratifications of the UN Charter had been received, and the UN Charter became world law. But it was not until 1947 that the day was officially set aside for worldwide observance by a unanimous resolution adopted by the UN General Assembly.

In 1948 and again this year, Pres. Truman issued a proclamation calling on all Americans to honor UN day in a fitting manner. This summer the Secretary of State invited a representative group of American citizens and a number of national organizations to join together in a National Citizens' Committee for United Nations Day. CIO Pres. Philip Murray is a member of this committee.

Editorial Blasts Nod To Dworshak

The appointment by Idaho's Republican Gov. Robbins of former Sen. Dworshak, Republican, to succeed the late Sen. Miller, Democrat and Administration supporter, brought this condemnation from the Washington Post:

"Former Senator Henry C. Dworshak, with whose services the people of Idaho thought they had dispensed last November, will return to the Senate through appointment by Idaho's Republican Governor, C. A. Robbins. Senator Dworshak will succeed the late Bert H. Miller, a Democrat, who roundly defeated him at the polls and who died here 10 days ago.

"The Governor of Idaho has indisputable legal power, of course, to thumb his nose in this fashion at the people of his State. But we wonder if it is good politics or even good sense, let alone good taste, to send this unregenerate isolationist back to Washington against the express wishes of his constituents?"

Stockholder James Gerard Backs Steel Strikers

By GLORIA CAPLAN

MOVING INTO their fourth strike week, 500,000 CIO Steelworkers gained an unexpected ally in their battle for non-contributory pensions and insurance as federal mediators hammered away furiously on U. S. Steel's stone-wall adamance.

One of "Big Steel's" biggest stockholders, former ambassador to Germany James W. Gerard, vehemently attacked the corporation for its refusal to grant employer-financed pensions and social insurance, as recommended by the presidential fact-finding board and demanded by the union.

Gerard said he and his family owned more shares of U. S. Steel than "the combined holdings of a majority of the board of directors."

The attack on the industry stand was contained in a four-page statement issued from Gerard's law offices in New York City. It accused U. S. Steel of rendering a "disservice to the employes, the shareholders and the country," termed the strikers' demands "a modest concession to labor," backed the union's contention that employe contributions to pensions and insurance would constitute a pay cut, and demanded that U. S. Steel accept the non-contributory "six-and-four" plan immediately.

BUT U. S. STEEL executives—usually long on lip-service to stockholders—proved short on concern for stockholders this time. Day after the Gerard bombshell was released, U. S. Steel Board Chmn. Irving S. Olds was still singing the old refrain. To him the principle of industry's responsibility for worker depreciation—just as for machine depreciation—constitutes a "Santa Claus philosophy."

Meanwhile, U. S. Steel's attitude was severely riddled by a growing number of non-labor spokesmen, most vigorously perhaps by New York City's Mayor William O'Dwyer and the Catholic Commonweal magazine.

In a blistering letter to U. S. Steel Pres. Benjamin Fairless, New York's mayor, asked: "Is this a matter of principle or just bullheadedness?"

"You have told us that a great principle is at stake," the mayor wrote, and then proceeded to question that "principle."

In 1901, he recalled, Andrew Carnegie introduced a company-financed pension at U. S. Steel. (This was virtually wiped out by the company's directors in recent years.)

Jones & Laughlin, Bethlehem, Consolidated Edison and numerous other big companies have had company-financed pensions for years, he pointed out.

Even Iron Age, the steel industry organ, said editorially after issuance of the fact-finding report, "Steel Management now has a tremendous responsibility . . . Now it does not have too much to fight about—or at least not enough to plunge the country into a steel strike," O'Dwyer noted..

The Commonweal, in discussing the steel strike, peeped behind the curtain of contributory or non-contributory pensions—and reminded readers that U. S. Steel, pacesetter for the industry, is controlled by J. P. Morgan. And the list of top corporations controlled by this mighty house "reads like a history of labor trouble in the U. S.," Commonweal said. It listed a few, all seats of bitter anti-unionism: Pullman, General Electric, Montgomery Ward, Nalt. Biscuit, American Telephone & Telegraph.

Even though the fact-finders' report "was a considerable blow to the union's hopes," and even though U. S. Steel's top executives will receive $50,000 pensions, entirely financed by the corporation—U. S. Steel termed the non-contributory principle "revolutionary doctrine," Commanweal said.

Of course," it continued, "U. S. Steel (J. P. Morgan & Co.) assures us in fullpage ads that it 'favors proper programs of insurance, welfare and pensions for its employes'. Yes, indeed. And what is its idea of a 'proper pension'? Well, last year U. S. Steel pensions—for the workers, not the executives—averaged $7 to $8 a month, not week or day or hour.

"And this flows quite logically from the social philosophy of J. P. Morgan & Co., whose spokesman, Mr. Voorhees, testified before the President's fact-finding board as follows:

" 'Pensions can take from people jurisdiction over their thrift and saving and subject them to unwanted mass disciplines.'

"But of course," Commonweal concluded, "executives aren't people, or so it would seem."

WHILE THIS battle of words raged, there were these developments in the strike picture:

- Federal Mediator William Margolis, following prolonged talks with industry representatives, hinted they had granted some few concessions—but union Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg said the sum total of the talks was "no progress."
- The CIO Executive Board, in a pre-convention meeting at Cleveland, O., voted to raise a multi-million-dollar fund to back the strikers. A $100,000 contribution from the Auto Workers launched the project.
- Indications that the steel companies anticipated a long, bitter strike long before its beginning came in a story by Mary Heaton Vorse, written for Labor Press Association.

"In every steel town where I've been," she wrote, "the mills have been provided with deep freezes full of food. They are victualed as for a seize." In addition, all the mills are equipped with bunks, Miss Vorse reported. These preparations—which looked to steelworkers like accommodations for scabs—began as early as last July, one union international representative said.

- Despite its forecast, before the fact-finding panel, of a lean last-half of the year, U. S. Steel reported its third quarter profits topped those for last year's third quarter by $5 million. Total profits for the first nine months of 1949 were $133,223,409, compared with $88,042,150 in the same period last year.

On other CIO collective bargaining fronts there were these developments:

AUTO: As General Motors indicated a willingness to talk pensions, the UAW scheduled a strategy conference of 250 delegates from 92 GM locals for Nov. 10.

PACKINGHOUSE: United action of the CIO Packinghouse Workers and AFL Butchers broke the "Big Four" companies' solid wall of resistance, resulting in pay boosts of up to 15c an hour for 80% of the Swift employes. The new one-year contract provides higher job-rate differentials, three weeks vacation after 15 years, improved sick leave provisions, liberalization of severance pay, progress toward elimination of geographical differentials and improved seniority rules.

RUBBER: A tentative agreement with Goodyear grants the CIO Rubber Workers a 10c company contribution to a pension and insurance fund. A similar agreement was won by the union at Goodrich previously.

Glass Worker Wins Mayoralty Primary

Butler, Pa., may elect a Mayor next month who is a member of the CIO Glass Workers Union. He is Tomy Nicholson, who was nominated as Republican candidate at the primaries; defeating the present Mayor, W. C. Campbell.

Members of Local 15, Federation of Glass & Silica Sand Workers, to which Nicholson belongs, naturally are elated.

Murray Hails Lehman, O'Dwyer At Rally

AS MICHAEL Quill put it: "It proves that America is a great country when an immigrant like myself can introduce the Vice President of the United States to a gathering like this."

The "gathering like this" was a New York City united labor rally for former Gov. Herbert H. Lehman, who is running for the U. S. Senate, and Mayor William O'Dwyer, candidate for reelection.

In addition to Quill, two other immigrants starred at the Madison Square Garden rally, which was attended by more than 18,000 persons, admission free.

This gathering of persons who attended voluntarily was in sharp contrast to one held previously for Vito Marcantonio, "Labor" Party candidate for mayor against O'Dwyer, who has the backing of virtually the entire labor movement. At the Marcantonio rally, the Communist party forced 18,000 of its members and stooges to shell out admission fees from their meager funds.

The other two immigrants were CIO Pres. Philip Murray and O'Dwyer.

Murray, who was the feature speaker along with Vice Pres. Alben W. Barkley, said he felt the issues involved in the campaigns of Lehman and O'Dwyer so important that he had left "the heart of a great industrial controversy"—the steel strike—to attend the rally.

Other speakers were Lehman, Quill, Martin J. Lacy, AFL city chief; Bernard Alderman, Brotherhoods; Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, her son, Rep. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., (D., N. Y.), Jacob S. Potofsky, president, CIO Amalgamated Clothing, and Richard F. Walsh, president, AFL Theater and Stage Employes.

Recalling a statement years ago by the late Samuel Gompers, Murray said: "Labor must look to its friends and defeat its enemies. The parallel between the fight against entrenched wealth that the steelworkers are making on the economic front and the fight the people of New York are making is so striking that I wanted to come to New York, not alone to lend my support to these two great public servants, but to bring it to your attention.

"Behind the steel industry are the same barons of wealth—the House of Morgan, to be specific—that are seeking to restore the reactionary type of government of a former era when the very lives of men were not free.

"You of New York will never let that happen again in government. I assure you that we in the Steelworkers and in CIO will never let it happen again in our economic life."

MRS. ROOSEVELT described as "childish" the action of Sen. John F. Dulles (R.), Lehman's opponent, in writing to Bernard M. Baruch to get a reply that he was not a bigot. "Herbert Lehman stands on his own feet and says 'My record will stand,' " she declared amid thunderous cheers.

Rep. Roosevelt assailed the GOP attempt to return to the "good old Republican days with two empty pots for every chicken, a mortgage on every home, to those good old days of the Coolidge bubble boom, to the reactionary philosophy of Hoover, Dewey and Dulles." (Dulles was appointed to the Senate by Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, after the resignation of liberal Sen. Robert F. Wagner (D.) and after Dewey himself had been soundly repudiated by the American people last fall.)

Potofsky described Dulles as a standpat, reactionary Wall st. lawyer, a bigot against racial minorities and against social security, low cost public housing and extension of aid to health and education.

Picket Boat Crash Kills Local Head

EDWARD J. DUFFY, president of Local 39, CIO Shipbuilding Workers, was killed last week in a tragic accident while performing union duties.

Duffy, 37, along with Michael Anderson, 25, a shop secretary, was picketing in a motor boat off the struck Todd Shipyards in Erie Basin, Brooklyn, when a passing tugboat sideswiped the boat.

Duffy was thrown far out into the water, but Anderson was able to hold on to the overturned boat. The tugboat proceeded, the captain not knowing he had struck anything. Anderson's shouts, however, caused him to turn the boat.

The tugboat picked up Anderson. Another tug spotted Duffy and a seaman dived in and brought Duffy on deck. He died before they reached the hospital.

Duffy is survived by his wife, Elizabeth, and two children, Maureen, 8, and Edward, Jr., 2.

The IUMSWA has been on strike since Oct. 6 against Todd. Cause of the strike is a work classification dispute.

Murray Lambasts 'Small, Noisy Clique'

CIO Pres. Phillip Murray, in his annual report to the CIO Convention, predicted that the policy of "harassment . . . opposition . . . and obstructionism" created in CIO ranks by a "small but noisy clique of union officials" will soon give way to unified support of democratic policies reflecting the needs and aspirations of American workers.

In a 67-page document, the CIO president reasserted the organization's interest in economic, legislative and political advances in this country. He said that "the overwhelming proportion of the membership of CIO unions firmly and solidly support our policies . . . freely and without coercion because they know that CIO policy is developed through the democratic process."

Philip Murray

In a sharp attack on Communist union leaders in the CIO, Murray said he had examined at great length the "demands of the small group within the CIO who adhere to the program of the Communist Party. I have sought to assess that program in the interest of our members, of our organization and of our country. Only one conclusion can be reached. The Communist program for American labor is a program of destruction. Couched in terms of pseudo-militancy, it invites defeat for labor, rupture of our organizations, failure of attainment of even our most modest goals."

He charged that the "left-wing" program was set forth by a party interested not in the aims of American labor but in the "establishment of a retrogressive dictatorship in our life. I want none of that. The CIO wants none of that."

Recalling a series of bitter attacks upon him by both left-wing union leaders and the Moscow press and radio, Murray asserted that this type of propaganda is answered by "my open record of more than 45 years in the labor movement."

Murray further charged that the CIO's left-wing, which he said speaks for less than 10% of the organization's membership, has created a "dangerous divison" which "no self-respecting organization can long tolerate."

"If the leaders of this 10%, often against the desires of their own membership, disagree and sabotage the majority on every important aspect of policy, it is clear that the majority has the inherent right to protect its course of action and its future stability.

"The CIO has the power to confer affiliation upon labor unions which wish to join our organization; it obviously has the power of disaffiliation of those organizations whose leaders' policies, statements and actions demonstrate their contempt and their hostility toward our general policies."

MURRAY, NOTING "carping, unjustified criticism of the United Steelworkers of America and its leadership" by left-wing union spokesmen during the course of the steel fact-finding hearings and in the subsequent dispute in the steel industry, charged that this criticism—"diabolical, prejudiced and ill-founded in fact"—has constituted "the most flagrant approach to union strikebreaking that I have ever seen in the history of the CIO."

Murray expressed confidence that the Steelworkers would win its dispute with the steel industry and that other CIO affiliates "acting in their own interests and under procedures which are determined to be best for their particular industries, will also be successful."

The CIO president voiced approval of the legislative advances made by the 81st Congress. He charged that failures to carry out the full program enunciated by Truman in his State-of-the-Union Message last January are largely due to the "vicious, bi-partisan coalition of Dixiecrats and reactionary Northern Republicans."

But, he said, the CIO will continue to press forward toward "the complete enactment of our legislative demands which are so imperatively required in the interests of all the American people."

Nevertheless, Murray added, the record of the 81st Congress "represents real improvement not only by contrast with the record of the notorious 80th Congress but with a number of its predecessors."

He praised the work of the CIO Political Action Committee and predicted that it will play a major role in the 1950 elections.

The CIO president pledged continued support for the European Recovery Program and he opposed the efforts of certain American economic interests to interfere with the actions and policies of democratic labor union groups in England, France and other countries.

The CIO president said the new international labor federation to be formally established in London at a conference starting November 28, "offers a practical basis for working toward solution of the many problems that confront workers in every section of the world."

He said that the "now Communist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions" had been distorted by Communists in leading positions "into a meaningless and ineffective organization." He expressed pleasure that the CIO had been able to achieve "friendly and harmonious working relations" with representatives of the AFL in establishing the new international labor body.

IN A DETAILED analysis of current economic conditions, the President's Report emphasized that "we refuse to accept unemployment and lost production and above all, the loss of human dignity entailed, as permanent features of our society . . . we must master the intricacies of the business cycle and build permanent and lasting prosperity for all American people."

Murray's presentation to the CIO Convention contained reports from the various CIO departments and standing committees.

The report of the Organization Department, headed by Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, described as "the proudest accomplishment of CIO this year," in the organizational field, the affiliation of the Communication Workers, which was chartered by the CIO in July and already represents "appreciably more" than 300,000 telephone workers.

The Organizational report indicated that CIO unions in the period from July 1, 1948, to August 31, 1949, had petitioned for 2153 union security authorization elections and had won 2102 of these polls. Of 1850 union representation elections conducted by the National Labor Relations Board, 1017 were won by CIO affiliates. Similarly, CIO unions won 20 out of 25 elections sponsored by the National Mediation Board in which they were concerned, in the period from September 23, 1948, to September 27, 1949.

The CIO Legal Department, in a detailed analysis of the operations of the Taft-Hartley Act during the past year, charged that labor's predictions of the anti-union effects of the Act have proven correct.

PAC, IN ITS SECTION of the report, charged that the Dixiecrat-Republican coalition in Congress reflects the "waning strength" of reactionaries in both parties. The PAC voiced belief that the next problem for labor and the people of America is to "break the hold" of this coalition on the Congress, by electing additional senators and congressmen who will stand fast by their pledges and "by re-electing those who have fought valiantly for progressive legislation."

The report of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination, headed by Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, called for a "major effort" to enact a federal FEPC bill and other civil rights legislation. It said that the moral and financial contributions of CIO toward the improvement of state anti-discrimination legislation have been "considerable."

The Housing Committee, headed by Vice-Pres. Walter P. Reuther, hailed passage of the Public Housing Act of 1949 as a "long step to meeting the needs of the most underprivileged portion of our population." The Committee called for further efforts to win government approval of the prefabricated housing program offered by the Committee's chairman earlier this year and for passage of legislation to facilitate construction of badly-needed housing for the middle income group of Americans.

Board Backs Steel Strike

FULL SUPPORT—"moral, organizational and financial"—has been voted to the nation's half million striking Steelworkers by the CIO Executive Board.

Meeting in Cleveland a few days before the opening of the CIO's 11th convention, the Board commended the Steelworkers and Pres. Philip Murray for leading "a courageous struggle on behalf of all labor and all the American people."

The resolution was passed unanimously. It was introduced at the Board session by Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers.

"No amount of double talk on the part of the steel industry and Wall St. can hide the obvious conspiracy of the industry and the financial interests to deny security to the workers and to weaken their union," the resolution said.

The Board lashed out at what it termed "an immoral double standard" of industrial leaders, under which "fat pensions, on a non-contributory basis," are given to steel executives, while "modest pensions are denied to workers."

"In order to conceal this immoral double standard and to hide their calloused indifference to the needs of the workers and their families, the steel industry charges that the non-contributory pension principle, which the Board approved and for which the steel workers fight, is 'socialistic,'" the resolution commented.

"The monopoly steel industry would have the American people believe that to pay steel executives such as Fairless, Voorhees, Homer, White and others non-contributory pensions upward of $50,000 a year is sound business management, but to pay a worker a modest pension is 'socialism.'"

The resolution was the principal business at a brief two-hour meeting of the Executive Board on Oct. 25. Pres. Murray announced that the Board had adjourned subject to further call, but it appeared unlikely that any additional sessions would be held prior to the convention.

Acheson, Bradley, Ewing, Tobin Among Convention Speakers

A group of important government officials, headed by Sec. of State Dean Acheson, will address the CIO convention.

Acheson is scheduled to speak on Monday afternoon, Oct. 31. It will mark the second time that a secretary of state has addressed the national CIO meeting. Two years ago, at the Boston convention, Sec. of State George C. Marshall outlined his thinking on the need for a European Recovery Program.

Other speakers will be Federal Security Administrator Oscar Ewing, Tuesday; General Omar Bradley, head of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and Sec. of Labor Maurice Tobin, Wednesday; Murray T. Lincoln of the Ohio Farm Bureau Federation and Roy Wilkins of the Natl. Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Thursday.

A Good Start

You can always attract attention by throwing brickbats and, frankly, we feel like heaving some heavy ones at certain segments of the 81st Congress, which is now in recess.

But we think a better purpose would be served by trying to assess the work of the entire Congress—and we intend to distribute a few bouquets.

Here's the record on measures of interest to labor:

Our lawmakers passed a good housing bill and a modified rent control act.

They strengthened our defense program, approved the Atlantic Pact and continued the operations of the Economic Cooperation Administration.

They extended the reciprocal trade agreements program without restrictions, ratified the International Wheat Agreement, passed an agricultural measure designed to provide farmers a fair return on their work.

They increased the minimum wage to 75c an hour, provided badly needed raises for federal employes and reorganized a number of federal agencies. (The latter strengthened the Dept. of Labor.)

The House passed a bill providing major improvements in the social security system and the Senate is likely to follow suit at the next session.

The Senate approved a federal aid to education measure, but the program got snarled up in the House.

An anti-poll tax bill was approved by the House—and a similar bill is expected to come before the Senate next year.

Labor suffered a major defeat when it failed to obtain repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Liberals On The Offense

In sharp contrast with what occurred during the 80th Congress, liberal and labor forces have been on the offensive since the 81st Congress convened. They've been moving steadily—if not spectacularly—toward realization of the goals set forth in the Democratic Party platform.

One of the important things they accomplished was to force into the open the GOP-Dixiecrat coalition and expose it for what it really is.

Certainly there are gaps in the record—such as on T-H and the displaced persons bill—but the Congress as a whole has been heading in a direction which labor approves.

With few exceptions, lawmakers supported by CIO-PAC fought for labor's program. In no instance did more than eight of the 168 PAC--indorsed House members vote contrary to CIO's legislative program. The record in the Senate was equally good.

From these facts some general conclusions can be drawn. Among them:

The trend toward reaction so evident in the 80th Congress was checked by the elections last year and a trend toward liberalism started.

The present Congress, although it got off to a slow start, has been making considerable progress.

There are a lot of "good guys" on Capitol Hill who deserve a pat on the back from the trade unions.

The forces in Congress are rather delicately balanced, so the course of future legislation could easily depend on the amount of steam labor can generate in its campaign to get unionists to register and vote next year.

Convention Action Won't End Battle

If They Walk Out Or Are Thrown Out, Commies Will Still Be Around

By ALLAN L. SWIM

IT HAS BEEN a long, bitter, nasty fight and it won't end this week, no matter what action is taken by the CIO at its convention in Cleveland.

The Commies and fellow travelers may be kicked out of the CIO—or they may walk out—or the convention may pave the way for their expulsion.

Any of these three moves would mean the lefties were through as a force inside CIO, but it wouldn't mean the left-right battle in the trade union movement is over

Some of the skirmishes in the future probably will be nastier than any that have occured in the past—if that is possible.

So it would be foolish to regard what happens this week in Cleveland as anything more than it actually is—an important battle in a worldwide ideological war.

THERE WAS a time—not many years ago—when the average person in this country regarded the Communist Party as "just another political group."

Perhaps they had good reason to feel that way—but recent events have shown the domestic Reds to be, for all practical purposes, agents of a foreign power that seeks the overthrow of our form of government.

The close coordination of the Kremlin and the Commies in this country was illustrated recently when Radio Moscow injected itself into CIO's internal squabble.

Bitter and unfounded charges similar to those made by the Daily Worker were hurled at Philip Murray during an official Moscow broadcast.

The Russian government wouldn't have sanctioned such action had it not regarded the left-right battle inside CIO as an important one from the standpoint of worldwide communism.

LET'S GO back over a bit of history—just to review the steps leading up to the struggle slated to take place this week in Cleveland.

The Commies began infiltrating into the CIO as soon as it was founded, and in the early days they devoted a large portion of their energies to what were regarded as normal trade union practices.

During the Spanish revolution they began revealing that they had interests outside the U. S.

They began throwing their weight around — and throwing verbal brickbats at Philip Murray —during the period of the Hitler-Stalin pact.

When Germany and Russia began fighting each other, the U. S. Commies switched quickly from their "The Yanks Aren't Coming" campaign to their drive for the launching of a second front.

AT THIS point the Commies became super-patriots and they decided almost overnight that Murray wasn't the "dirty warmonger" they had been picturing him to be.

He became their hero, their leader, the man who could do no wrong.

But Murray was shoved back into the Commie doghouse as soon as the war ended and Russia began her campaign of conquest in Eastern Europe.

The open split within CIO came over the Marshall Plan and the candidacy of Henry A. Wallace.

Soon thereafter, Murray and his cohorts were being accused by the Commies of "cooperation with Wall Street," of playing footsie with the monopolists and of selling the workers down the river.

Since then the Murray forces have been "found guilty" by the lefties of nearly every trade union and political crime under the sun.

REGARDLESS of the specific action taken this week at Cleveland, the Commies will not fold up their tents and migrate to Moscow.

They'll still be around—making nasty noises, hurling unfounded accusations, striving to split the labor movement even further.

No action the convention delegates could take would make the Reds into good citizens and cause them to drop their campaign to make American trade unions subservient to the Politboro.

There will be a lot of fighting after the convention ends.

So those who believe in democracy and abhor totalitarianism should be prepared to roll their sleeves up a bit higher.

'We Refuse To Accept Unemployment'

The year 1949 brought the economic decline and unemployment rise which organized labor had predicted would be the logical outgrowth of excessive profit and price increases without comparable wage boosts.

Thus, CIO Pres. Philip Murray reported to the CIO convention, the CIO in the past year has thrown its efforts into a three-pronged battle to get the nation's economy back on an even keel:

- In order to restore purchasing power and revitalize production, CIO unions have pushed hard for wage increases through collective bargaining, and for higher social security benefits through federal legislation.
- To alleviate and help stem the unemployment tide, CIO pushed for federal action, calling for government purchases to be concentrated on most critical unemployment areas, for far-reaching public works projects, tax relief for low-income groups and improved anti-trust legislation.
- To alleviate individual suffering growing out of unemployment, CIO published a manual instructing CIO personnel on how to service families of the jobless.

THE MURRAY report took issue with the business theory that full employment depends on giant profits. This theory holds that such high profits encourage high investment, which in turn brings increased production, jobs and demand for goods.

Exploding this argument, Murray pointed out that each slump in the past 20 years was immediately preceded by record profit-taking by business.

What happened in each case, Murray reported, is that "the consumption side of our economy fails to keep pace with its productive ability. The unequal income distribution between the property groups on the one hand and the wage and salary groups on the other, leads to an eventual drying up of markets and the demand for goods falls.

"Many industries are confronted with the existence of 'excess capacity'. This adds to the already slowing-down rate of business investment, and the downturn of the cycle is intensified."

The report continues: "In contrast to the business theory that prosperous economy depends basically upon high profits in order to encourage high investment, the CIO argues that prosperity depends first upon broadened and rising consumption levels. For consumption can be expanded indefinitely, and by its very nature it fluctuates far less sharply than investment. It offers a more durable underpinning to an expanding economy."

UNTIL WE SHIFT our economic base toward greater consumption expenditures, with less dependence upon exorbitant profits and business investment, the booms and busts of the business cycle "will continue to plague us," the report warned.

Necessity for this shift was further emphasized in Murray's discussion of foreign trade and government expenditures.

As European recovery proceeds, he pointed out, American exports will decline. This will leave a vast vacuum in the demand for our products unless some other outlet is found for this volume of goods. To the 1948 CIO convention Murray had pointed out this same situation. At that time, he recalled, his report stated: "We must be in a position to maintain a full-employment-and-production economy when these temporary props no longer exist."

Turning to government spending, Murray noted that "one dollar of government deficit spending at a crucial moment may prevent the loss of $5 in national income over the next few years."

So long as inflation confronted the country, the CIO argued for accumulation of federal surpluses, Murray reported. But in a period of deflation, "when the private forces in the economy are not sufficient for full employment and maximum production," government spending can be used to prop up the economy.

With over 12 per cent of the labor force out of work in more than 30 labor market areas by last August—and with unemployment ravaging such industries as textile, leather goods, electrical supplies, shipbuilding, rubber, nonferrous metal mining and others—CIO urged immediate action, the report stated.

"We refuse to accept unemployment and lost production, and above all, the loss of human dignity entailed, as permanent features of our society," the report insisted. "Our trade union movement must fight on both the political and industrial fronts" to build a permanent prosperity for all the American people.

Film Firms Sued

Seven major film firms have been sued for $1,800,000 in Federal court at Philadelphia by the Mayfair theater on charges that they conspired to favor three other neighborhood theaters over six years in the distribution of films. The suit, brought under the Clayton anti-trust act, asks treble damages for claimed losses and damages of $600,000.

Work For FEPC Bill 'Should Be Major Effort'

"THE MAJOR effort in the 2nd session of Congress should be toward securing passage of a federal FEPC bill," the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination recommended in its annual report.

The committee, of which CIO Secy. James B. Carey is chairman and George L. P. Weaver is director, has intensified its civil liberties program since the last convention, it reported to Pres. Murray. The program:

1. Establishment of a permanent Federal Civil Rights Commission, a permanent Joint Congressional Committee on Civil Rights, and expanding the Civil Rights Section into a Division in the Department of Justice.
2. Strengthening existing civil rights statutes.
3. Providing adequate federal protection against lynching.
4. Protection of the right to vote in federal and state elections for all citizens.
5. Establishment of an FEPC to prevent discrimination in employment based on race, color or creed.
6. Prohibiting discrimination in interstate transportation facilities.
7. Providing home rule and suffrage for the residents of the District of Columbia.
8. Providing statehood and a greater measure of self-government for our island possessions.
9. Equalization of the opportunities for residents of the U. S. to become naturalized citizens.
10. Settling the evacuation claims of Japanese Americans.

"The greatest obstacle to overcome in Congress before this program can be realized is that of providing limitations on the right of unlimited debate (filibuster) in the Senate," the report said.

"Time and again civil rights legislation has been stymied in the Senate by a few wilful men resorting to the techniques of unlimited debate, which is popularly known as 'filibustering a bill to death.'

"Fair employment practice legislation, in addition to legislation covering other phases of the Civil Rights Program, was introduced in 28 of the 42 states whose legislatures met this year.

"Four states, Washington, Oregon, New Mexico and Rhode Island, enacted fair employment practice legislation during the 1949 legislative session. Connecticut and New York enacted legislation ending segregation in their states' National Guard.

"New Jersey enacted legislation wiping out segregation in education, recreation, and places of accommodations, which include hotels, restaurants, taverns, theatres, swimming pools, bath houses, board walks, gymnasiums and bowling alleys. The New Jersey legislature also created effective enforcement machinery to carry out the intent of this legislation.

"Indiana passed legislation outlawing segregation in public schools and in the transporting of children to and from schools.

"In conformity with the recommendations of the President's Civil Rights Program, in which the CIO participated, the Department of the Navy and the Air Force have revised their personnel policy to eliminate discrimination and provide for equality of treatment and opportunity.

"The Air Force has revised its policy to guarantee that all members and recruits are to be considered individually for assignment and reassignment throughout the Air Force and in training schools, on the basis of ability, without regard to race, color or creed, on a completely integrated basis. This new policy of integration will eliminate the old, difficult policy of absorbing a Negro quota into a few specialized branches.

"On June 7, 1949, Secretary of the Defense Johnson approved the Navy proposals for equality of treatment and opportunity, which included the assignment of Negro officers without regard to race, color, or creed, throughout the Navy. It also ordered to active duty qualified Negro reserve officers; qualified Negro students will be urged to participate in the ROTC. Within the Marine Corps, the training of Negro recruits will be integrated with whites.

"The Secretary of Defense has repeatedly refused to approve, the Army's policy, as it is still unsatisfactory, and has ordered the Army to restudy its position, to consider carefully the suggestions of the President's Committee on Equality of Treatment and Opportunity in the Armed Forces and the recommendations of the President's Committee on Civil Rights."

SIGN OF THE TIMES!

Efforts For Security Laws Increased

INCREASED public interest and demand for more realistic security measures added to the work in the past year of the CIO Social Security Committee.

The committee, which was headed by the late Van A. Bittner, felt that CIO's bargaining drives helped greatly to fan this public reaction.

The committee said: "Our unions have won substantial victories in improving their agreements in this regard, and the report of the President's Steel Industry Board was a notable vindication of the Steelworkers' contention that the employers should bear the cost of such programs. The CIO has continued to take the position that legislation and plans won through collective bargaining supplement each other.

"Unfortunately, many conservatives have not recognized the value of genuine social insurance. They prefer to keep payments to a minimum and to apply the needs test. They also wish to see as much as possible of the cost imposed upon the workers. Insurance companies have lobbied actively to prevent raising the wage base on which payments are made and in other ways raising social insurance above a minimum level. They have sought to increase the scope of their own activities through clauses in state disability legislation permitting contracting out to private companies.

"Some progress has been made in improving social security legislation during the last year in spite of these conservative forces, but too many of our proposals still are in the form of proposed bills rather than accomplished acts. Labor must elect more liberal legislators to attain its objectives.

Old age, survivors, and disability insurance. The Ways and Means Committee, after months of hearings and executive sessions, finally reported a bill, HR 6000, which would raise the pitifully low benefits now available and extend coverage by over 10,000,000 persons.

"Benefits for lower paid groups would be enhanced by about 100 percent, and middle-income workers by about 50 percent. A system of permanent disability insurance would be launched, although dependents' allowances are not included. These improvements are by no means all we wish, but under present conditions, even enactment of such limited improvements will require much effort.

"Public assistance. Experience with unemployment has demonstrated the need for Federal matching grants to the States for general relief, so that employable persons may secure at least minimum assistance as a last resort. This important proposal did not receive sufficient support in the House Ways and Means Committee and thus is not contained in HR 6000.

"Unemployment insurance. Our state CIO councils made vigorous efforts to improve the State laws, with some success, but they are still pitifully inadequate to meet the needs of jobless workers.

"Only seven out of ten employes are covered by unemployment insurance, and benefits average only one-third of weekly earnings because of the low legal maximums.

"We have urged the Administration and Congress to support a national law in line with CIO policy.

"Temporary disability insurance. We have not yet succeeded in securing Congressional support for a national system of temporary disability insurance. Four States have set up programs in this field, but they have many weaknesses and cause great confusion especially in connection with collective bargaining agreements covering workers in many states."

Murray Tells How CIO Aided ECA In Making Marshall Plan Work

SOME 30 MILLION men and women are organized in the trade union movement of countries taking part in the European Recovery Program, according to the ECA.

"No group has a greater stake in the success of ERP, and no group has a more important part to play in making ERP a success," declared a statement of labor policy issued by the ECA, quoted in CIO Pres. Murray's report.

"The joint efforts of the free people of Europe toward the attainment of economic stability, self-reliance, and unity rests upon their democratic institutions, among the most important of which is the non-Communist labor movement," stated the ECA.

"Western Europe trade unions, except for those dominated by the Communists, have been among the leading champions of the Marshall Plan. They have mobilized their organizational facilities, and their press to give effective and aggressive help to the program.

"LEADERSHIP in this undertaking has been assumed by the European Recovery Program Trade Union Advisory Committee (ERP-TUAC) which was organized at the first Intl. Trade Union Conference on the ERP, held in London on Mar. 9-10, 1948.

(The conference now consists of representatives of 23 trade union federations in practically all of the participating countries and in the U. S.)

"On Dec. 28, 1938, this committee was recognized by the OEEC (Organization for European Economic Cooperation) as the official international trade union body to be consulted on those questions of direct interest and concern to labor which come before the OEEC."

Murray summarized ECA's labor policy as follows:

"1. To cooperate with the democratic elements in the trade unions in participating countries in securing their support and counsel in the operation of the recovery program;

"2. To share knowledge and experience with European labor in the field of labor-management relations toward the end of furthering industrial stability and democracy;

"3. To enlist organized labor's cooperation in each country in promoting industrial productivity leading to a higher standard of living in the participating countries;

"4. Through the OEEC and appropriate international organizations, to encourage, with proper safeguards programs for improved manpower utilization, including of workers from surplus to shortage areas, and the improvement of public employment services;

"5. Through an active labor information program, to help develop and maintain the understanding and active support of the European Recovery Program by free trade unions in the participating countries and by United States labor organizations; and

"6. To include labor's views and experience in the establishment of ECA policies and programs.

"SINCE THE last convention the Office of Labor Advisers has continued to function in Washington offices of the Economic Cooperation Administration," Murray's report continued. Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey has continued to fulfill his appointment by President Truman as a member of the ECA Public Advisory Board, which meets monthly under the chairmanship of the Administrator on high policy questions.

"Clinton S. Golden has been the Labor Adviser from CIO and Ted F. Silvey has continued through the year as Executive Assistant to the Labor Advisers, on leave from CIO headquarters staff.

"The 1949 convention of the American Newspaper Guild continued the leave of absence to President Harry Martin, who functions in Paris as Chief Labor Information Officer under Ambassador Averell Harriman, the ECA special representative in Europe. Numerous CIO officials, on leave from their respective union duties, are also serving ECA missions overseas.

Productivity Teams

"One of the aspects of the European Recovery Program that has come into operation during the past year is the 'technical assistance program.'

"Funds are allocated for the exchange of scientists, technicians, industrial managers, agronomists and veterinarians, labor union officers and other specialists to provide an interchange of many kinds of information by which productivity can be increased and recovery increased.

"The U. S. labor movement has been helpful in receiving 'productivity teams' made up in whole or in part of trade union officers and members who have come to the U. S. to visit manufacturing establishments and union organizations.

"THE FIRST team was seven trade union officers from Norway who were in the U. S. at the opening of 1949. A similar team of Norwegian trade unionists had been to the Soviet Union. Each team wrote reports of their experiences and observations. A booklet has been published giving the highlights of the two trips. It is distributed not only in Norwegian and English, but in the languages of Western Europe.

"Other teams of workers from Europe include one or more from United Kingdom, Denmark, Italy, France and Sweden.

"The largest number of teams has come from Great Britain under the program of the Anglo-American Productivity Council in which, on the British side, there are official representatives from the Trades Union Congress and, on the American side, official representation from the CIO and other labor organizations.

"Victor Reuther, Education Director of the CIO Automobile Workers Union, continues to serve. Since the last convention the Council held meetings in New York and Washington, with the British members reciprocating to the U. S. the visit the American members had made late in 1948 to London.

"CIO unions have been called upon to act as hosts for the trade union and other members of the visiting teams, and have been most generous in providing information about the functioning trade union movement in this country, in its collective bargaining relations with management, its community relations and its internal functions and work.

"Personal association with national and local union officers and members from other countries by their American counter-parts at the shop and community level has been most wholesome.

Isolationism Revived

"LIMITATIONS of time and funds have required that most of the visitors from abroad remain in that section of the U. S. east of Detroit and Chicago, and north of Atlanta and Knoxville. Only a few individuals have gone farther west and the union people there also have been enthusiastically cooperative.

"Many CIO local union people and representatives of national unions in the various cities and towns have been hosts to the trade union members from abroad.

"There is no question that trade unionists from abroad, after seeing CIO and other union people in their plants, in their union halls, in communities, and in their homes, carry back to Europe with them an understanding of the democratic labor union movement and its role in American life which gives the lie to the anti-labor statements made about the CIO by Communists and their reactionary allies.

"As the catastrophe of unemployment touches every segment of American life, so the rising number of jobless in the U. S. during the middle part of 1949 caused isolationist attitudes to revive with respect to the foreign aid program.

"In some circles there began to be raised questions if Marshall Plan money ought not be used to send Europe those articles which were in 'surplus' in the U. S.—that is, where plants were shut down. A corresponding idea was that Europeans who were supplied Marshall Plan money should be forced to spend their dollars with certain industries in this country, whether or not they needed the products of those industries as much as they needed essential commodities and equipment for recovery.

"The CIO has worked carefully with ECA

North Atlantic Pact

"The North Atlantic Pact was regarded by the CIO as a 'necessary development' to supplement the European Recovery Program, and the treaty received full support from the CIO," the CIO Legislative Dept. said.

"Secy.-Treas. Curey, appearing at the Senate hearings, urged endorsement of the Pact, and pointed out that the CIO would support no program 'which diverted money from reconstruction to military purposes, and it is our understanding that this Pact will not require any such diversion.'

"The Pact was overwhelmingly ratified by the Senate, as well as by the western European democracies, which see in that agreement a strong bulwark against Soviet infiltration and aggression."

DP's Friends Lose Bout

"Together with a number of liberal, church and civic groups, the CIO urged liberalization of the Displaced Persons Act voted by the 80th Congress." the CIO Legislative Dept. reported.

"That law, as passed near the close of the 80th Congress, permitted the entry into the United States of only about 200,000 war refugees. However, its provisions for eligibility, selection and qualifications constituted a serious and harassing form of discrimination against many displaced persons on grounds of religion or nationality.

"The CIO extended full co-operation to the Citizens Committee for Displaced Persons in that organizetion's earnest endeavor to achieve drastic improvements in the law. A bill approved by the House lifted the number of war refugees that this country will accept to over 300,000 and added a year to the two-year period in which they may enter the United States. In addition, the new bill removed the criticized discriminatory features of the present law.

"In the Senate, however, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee—Sen. Pat McCarran (D,. Nev.)—has exhibited a callous and cynical disregard for America's obligation to the people of the world and to the humanitarian needs of the displaced persons themselves.

"After refusing to call hearings on the bill until late in the session, Sen. McCarran made obvious his dislike for the displaced persons bill. A number of Senators from both parties who have filed a petition to discharge the Judiciary Committee from further consideration of the bill—a move rarely taken in the Senate—are to be congratulated for their efforts to remove discriminatory and un-American provisions from the 1948 law."

(Ed. Note: After this report was written, the Senate voted to recommit the House-approved bill to the Senate Judiciary Committee)

European Visitors

"As part of CIO's program to create better understanding among peoples of the world, the Education and Research Dept., has brought three European trade unionists of the local union level to the United States," the department reported.

"This project was made possible by a special grant. It was worked out in part by the quarterly meetings of CIO education directors. A number of them are co-operating in arranging schedules for the visiting unionists and making it possible for them to see as much as possible of union life at home and in the shop. The project will also help CIO members understand the problems of other countries."

which we have supported from its inception," stated Murray's report. "We look forward to continued support of this great international humanitarian project, which is strengthening the economic foundations of our worldwide democratic society."

THE REPORT warned of the dangers involved in "the efforts of certain American vested interests to interfere, under cloak of the ERP, with the internal affairs of democracies," and stated that these efforts will be resisted in the future as they have been in the past.

Expressing sympathetic understanding with British labor's experiment, "while maintaining our own American approach to our own economic problems," the report said:

"We will use all our influence to halt the efforts of those groups in this country which seek to thwart the economic experiments, voted freely by British voters and supported by their labor movements to improve and protect the economic and social welfare of the British people."

The report also offered support and encouragement to the democratic unionists of France, and reiterated the belief "that the role of the United States should be to assist French workers in their effort to win attainment of their worthy economic goals."

It praised Truman's Point Four Program as being "an intelligent approach" to a problem calling "for far-reaching improvements in the economic, health and social conditions of many peoples in the so-called backward areas of the world," and adds:

"We will support it to the extent that it helps the people of those areas, but we will resist any efforts to distort this program into one of economic exploitation."

DISCUSSING THE first steps taken during the past year to create a new international federation of democratic labor unions, after ties with the WFTU were severed, the report stated:

"We join the new organization because it offers a practical basis for working toward solution of the many problems that confront workers in every section of the world.

"Our primary reason for leaving the WFTU was because the Communists in leading positions had distorted the WFTU into a meaningless and ineffective organization. We are interested in results and achievements that will benefit humanity.

"Through the new organization, we see a basis for establishing programs, policies and a field of action which can yield maximum results for labor in the world."

The report noted that in the preliminary conferences devoted to setting up the new international labor body, friendly and harmonious working relations were achieved with the American Federation of Labor.

"It is likewise heartening" said the report, "that in other aspects of our day-to-day activities, the fruits of cooperation in both legislative and political activity have borne out our predictions of many years' standing that such cooperation can be highly beneficial to organized labor.

"We look forward to the eventual unity of all American workers as the end product of this type of cooperation."

Sections of the report dealing specifically with various phases of our foreign policy and the CIO's program for friendly relations and cooperation with democratic unions abroad follow.

ing, shipping and allied services.

"The official CIO policy is for economic expansion and growth which will help maintain full employment and high prosperity, of which international trade is a fundamental part.

"With American aid, Western Europe is recovering. The successful end of the program is not definitely in sight, but millions of little successes are adding up. These little successes are the cooperative effort of working people through their unions.

"The basic CIO concern with workers' welfare in Europe represents some progress but much more is needed. In France, for example, recovery is 130 percent of 1938, but workers' income is only 80 percent of 1938, and that is with 15 percent more working hours in a week. The democratic labor unions in France are alert, but need strengthening in the face of continued Communist sabotage of the democratic objectives of the unions to the policies of the Soviets.

"The workers through their unions in every country have a continuing struggle, through collective bargaining, through political and legislative activities, sometimes through collaboration, sometimes by conflict."

Two-Way Trade Aids World

"Our huge export surplus during the postwar years has been an important supporting prop in the economic life of the nation," CIO Pres. Murray reported to the convention.

"This export surplus has been paid for, in the main, by U. S. loans or grants. Foreign nations no longer have earnings from American investments or holdings of gold that permit them to meet their imports, nor do they as yet produce enough to export to us in exchange for our exports. Consequently, this is a crucial area for decisive foreign policy action as well as one that must be watched for its effect upon our domestic economy.

"In 1946, net foreign investment (the official measure of the contribution to total national production made by the country's foreign economic operations) accounted for $4.7 billion of the nation's total product. Under the stimulus of continued heavy European purchases of raw materials, fuel, machinery, etc., in 1947 this excess reached $8.9 billion.

"In 1948, as world recovery proceeded, our total exports declined considerably and, at the same time, our imports rose and the net surplus of exports was only $1.9 billion. This rate has continued on into 1949.

"As recovery proceeds in Western Europe, the balance between exports and imports should come even closer. This is a desirable goal since a high two-way flow of world trade can raise living standards in all countries.

"So far as our own economic budget is concerned, however, it is clear that some replacement must be found for the great surplus of exports which we have produced over the past few years. If no other market or outlet is found for this volume of goods, the net result could be a reduction in both production and employment in the United States."

New World Labor Group Plans Made

THE STORY of the CIO's determined efforts to help set up a world trade union organization, is told in full in the section of the CIO President's report on the activities of the CIO's International Affairs Dept., headed by Michael Ross.

James B. Carey

The report reviews the CIO's participation and brief sojourn in the WFTU, describes the reasons for the break with the Russian unions, and outlines the preliminary steps taken to set up a new international union organization.

Next step will be the world conference to be held in London, Nov. 28-Dec. 9, to take final action on a draft constitution drawn up at a preparatory conference held last June in Geneva.

The report said:

"The CIO has pursued its goal of furthering world peace and prosperity by working with like-minded trade union groups throughout the world. The last convention, after discussing developments in the world labor movement, resolved: 'The CIO officers and Executive Board are authorized, in consultation with the British TUC and other free trade union centers, to take whatever action in relation to the WFTU and the international labor movement as will best accomplish CIO policies and objectives.'

"THE 1948 Convention of the CIO adopted this resolution after a thorough debate on the situation within the WFTU and an account of the policies pursued by that organization. It was made clear during the debate that the WFTU Secretariat and administration had been permeated and taken over by adherents of the Soviet communist policy and that the organization had departed from the declarations adopted when it was organized with the assistance of the CIO and British TUC in 1945.

"Immediately after the Soviet Union opposed with all its power the projected plans for European Recovery, its agents within the WFTU followed this line regardless of decisions taken by the WFTU itself. WFTU publications began to carry abusive stories about trade union leaders—particularly the American, English and French trade union leaders who refused to depart from the WFTU policy and follow the Moscow line.

The trade union work of the federation was obstructed and hindered at every turn by the communists. The convention resolution was a last effort on our part to attempt to restore the WFTU to its original purposes.

"IN ACCORDANCE with this resolution a delegation consisting of James Carey, L. S. Buckmaster, Emil Mazey and David McDonald, proceeded to Europe in January 1949 and consulted with British and European trade union leaders.

New Labor Group

"When the WFTU Executive Bureau met, Jan. 18, the British TUC, having arrived at a similar decision, made an effort to save the WFTU by suggesting that a cooling-off period be inaugurated during which the WFTU would cease from this internal destructive strife. Thereupon the representatives of the CIO witnessed an example of the obstructive tactics of the communist members which had become so prevalent during the previous eighteen months.

"After consultation with Pres. Murray, Secy-Treas. Carey on behalf of the CIO, gave notice of the intention of the CIO delegation to recommend that the CIO sever its relationship with the WFTU. The British and the Dutch union served similar notices on the WFTU Executive Bureau.

"At the same time, Elmer Cope resigned as Assistant Secretary of the WFTU, opened a CIO office in Paris and continued to serve as European representative of the CIO, providing first-hand reports of developments there.

"Before returning from Europe, Secy.-Treas. Carey announced that the CIO, as always, stood ready to cooperate, in the future as it had in the past, with all bona fide trade union movements.

"Soon after the delegation returned to this country, Pres. Murray received letters from Vincent Tewson of the British TUC and Leon Jouhaux of the French Force Ouvriere. Both letters dealt with the problem of forming a new free, democratic trade union international and expressed the opinion that it was essential for both CIO and AFL to belong and the hope that our two organizations would be able to work together in such an organization.

"A top-level group of British trade union leaders came to the United States in March, 1949, on ECA Productivity Council business. When the British delegation arrived, they conferred separately with the AFL and the CIO. Mr. Tewson visited President Murray in Pittsburgh and had a frank talk on the perspective of the project.

"After the departure of the British delegation, the CIO representatives met with AFL representatives and held a friendly discussion which covered a number of points which may be expected to arise in connection with our joint participation in such a new organization.

"All the actions were reported to the CIO Executive Board which met in Washington, May 17-18, 1949.

International Conferences

"After consulting with national trade union centers in Europe and in the United States, the British TUC convened a Preparatory International Trade Union Conference in Geneva on June 25 and 26, 1949.

"The CIO was represented by Secy.-Treas. Carey and Michael Ross, with John Brophy and Elmer Cope as substitutes. A full report of the Geneva conference is being printed and will be distributed as soon as it is received.

"The Geneva conference appointed a Preparatory Committee of 16 members to draft a constitution and program for the international trade union organization and to convene as soon as possible a World Conference for the purpose of formally establishing the new international body.

"The committee, on which Michael Ross represented the CIO, met several times in London in July and August, completed a Draft Constitution and arranged for the World Conference to be convened in London, Nov. 28 to Dec. 9, 1949.

"This conference, at which the CIO will be represented by a full delegation, will examine the draft Constitution, amend it as necessary and then proceed to constitute formally the new body."

Hands Across Border

Friendly relations between trade unions of below the U. S. border and the CIO were promoted during the year through the CIO's Committee on Latin American Affairs which extended its liaison work.

The committee has given practical help to unionists in Latin America and supported them in their struggle for better working and living conditions and a freer life. Here are some instances of its activities reported by the committee:

It helped the Guatemalan banana workers get a satisfactory agreement with the United Furit Co., and aided Colombian banana pluckers in their conflict with U. S. companies.

Intervened with U. S. authorities on behalf of the Cuban sugar workers who asked for a higher U. S. sugar import quota.

Protested the discrimination exerted against Mexican migrant workers in the U. S. and the so-called 'silver' workers in the Panama Canal Zone.

After the recent earthquake in Ecuador, the committee sent $5,250 to the Red Cross fund for relief of the victims.

Two members of the committee—Martin Kyne and Ernest Schwartz, the committee's secretary,—made a four months' good will tour through a number of L-A countries during the past summer

Chartering CWA Year's Organizing Highlight

CHARTERING of the new Communications Workers of America, with 300,000 workers already represented and a total jurisdiction of more than half a million, was the crowning accomplishment reported to the 1949 convention by Allan S. Haywood, Vice President and Director of Organization.

The addition of this vigorous strong union to the roster of CIO internationals was the culmination of two years of effort. In June of 1947 the Telephone Workers' Organizing Committee was set up. In May of 1949, the CWA, largest of the independent organizations in the field, conducted a nation-wide referendum which resulted in a two-to-one vote for affiliation with CIO.

HAYWOOD

TWOC and CWA then each adopted the amalgamation program and the new international was born, with CWA Pres. Joseph Beirne taking over as president of the new organization.

"This organization can be one of the most powerful in CIO," Haywood said. "Its potentialities extend into every city, town and hamlet in America. Its influence can be of tremendous benefit to every worker in America."

THE NEW international, face to face with the world's largest monopoly—the American Telephone and Telegraph Co. and its Bell System—was immediately subjected to vicious intimidation. Recognition was withdrawn from virtually every previously independent union which had voted CIO.

The CWA took up the challenge and won. It conducted a successful drive to get new signed membership cards, it asked—and got—from the NLRB a decision that existing contracts must be honored regardless of change in affiliation, and it sought and won a number of NLRB elections. Largest of these took in nine southern states and produced a vote of 26,216 to 4,264 for CIO.

"The organization of the rest of the telephone workers must and will be completed," Haywood stated.

The United Optical and Instrument Workers of America also was granted a charter during the year, Haywood reported. This likewise was the culmination of long work by an organizing committee.

FROM JULY 1, 1948, to August 31, 1949, CIO unions initiated 2,153 union shop authorization elections, the large number made necessary by the failure of Congress to repeal the Taft-Hartley law, this T-H section has been repudiated even by its original proponents. Of these, 2,102 or 97% were won, Haywood reported. In the same period, the NLRB conducted 1,850 representation elections involving CIO unions, and of these, CIO won 1,017 or 55%.

"The National Mediation Board from September 23, 1948 to September 27, 1949 conducted 25 elections in which CIO unions participated. Of these the CIO rolled up 20 victories covering 4,109 employes," Haywood confirmed.

Here are excerpts from the reports submitted to the Organization Department by the various internationals on progress since the last convention:

AUTO: " . . . won 102 NLRB elections involving approximately 40,000 workers. There are 1,025 active Local Unions now chartered. The UAW now has approximately 2,800 plants under contract."

TEXTILE: "Successfully organized 74 additional plants employing 8,000 workers . . . Thirteen of these employ 1,200 workers in Canada. A total of 157 plants signed their first contract with the union."

CLOTHING: "Continues its active participation in organization of the South and has had considerable success in organizing some of the important non-union plants in that area."

SHIPBUILDING: " . . . participated in 13 collective bargaining elections, of which 11 were won. Also won 17 union shop elections. Relative membership in all ship yards under contract has been increased and all attempted raids have been successfully repelled."

WOODWORKERS: ". . . has chartered 22 new local unions since November, 1948. The greatest progress was in the South, where 12 new locals were chartered. Four new locals were established in Canada." IWA reports reactionary employers forced strikes against wage cuts from Deep South through to West Coast—some still going on, all others victoriously concluded.

OPTICAL: "Became an international union on April 1 . . . has shown an increase in per capita tax payments and has made organizational gains."

In the report of the Organization Department, the section devoted to the activities of the United Public Workers starts off as follows:

"This union has continued to function in its usual manner during the last year."

FUR AND LEATHER: "The overwhelming majority of the membership . . . has obtained wage increases ranging from 5 to 12c an hour. Negotiations and strikes for increases are still going on." Other improvements obtained include "bringing practically all locals up to 6 or more paid holidays; improved vacation system; improved health and life insurance systems."

FURNITURE: "An intensive organizing drive is being carried on . . . with a number of important elections already won in Benton, Ark., and Baltimore, Md."

COOKS AND STEWARDS: ". . . has organized five new steamship companies on the West Coast. With the assistance of the Organization Department . . . contracts were obtained with the Pacific Maritime Association which embraces all major ship owners on the Pacific Coast."

ENGINEERS: "A steady drop in employment due to the severe curtailment of American flag shipping has resulted in the loss of 3,843 members."

RUBBER: ". . . has won 19 NLRB elections during the fiscal year as well as having made notable progress in plants where Local Unions were already established. . . very definite inroads in the South."

RADIO: "During the past year ARA defeated the IBEW-AFL and ROU-AFL in attempted raids on ARA's West Coast organization and contracts. ARA's first convention, in February, 1949, completely supported CIO policy."

STEEL: ". . . has about a million members in 2,200 locals. There are 2,053 collective bargaining agreements in effect, covering employes of 1,670 companies . . . ELECTRICAL: ". . . 61,102 workers have joined the UE (during the fiscal year); 40 new plants have been organized; UE has won recognition in 128 companies since Taft-Hartley was enacted." At the end of the year, UE was bargaining agent for 1,369 plants covering more than 555,000 workers; of these, 105,000 are unemployed.

FISHERMEN: "Continued organizing . . . has more than made up losses due to a number of economic factors, and membership this year is equal to last year . . . Three new locals were chartered during the past year."

PACKING: ". . . won 49 NLRB representation elections covering over 22,000 workers. A wave of raiding attacks was launched against UPWA . . . in early 1948 . . . not a single one of the 23 raids against major plants resulted in a loss for the CIO. In fact, UPWA rolled up a grand total of 13,975 votes to a combined total of 3,993 for all its opponents including the 'no union' vote."

MARITIME: ". . . has signed agreements with 23 freighter companies operating 46 vessels on the deep sea . . . and 27 new companies operating 32 vessels in the tanker field, one each on the Great Lakes and the rivers."

NEWSPAPER: " . . . won bargaining rights for 2,800 newspaper workers either in NLRB elections or by voluntary recognition. Included was an election on the Associated Press covering 1,500 eligibles. The Guild's first contract in Canada was negotiated with the Toronto Star, largest newspaper in the Dominion." ANG reports more than two-thirds of its members won salary increases averaging $5.26 a week.

TRANSPORTATION: " . . . chartered 8 new locals, renewed 20 contracts containing wage increases of from 4 to 25 cents an hour; established and improved pension plans . . . Among the collective bargaining elections won, we consider the election involving 1,200 transit workers in Houston, Texas, and 200 bus workers in Tampa, Florida, a valuable contribution to CIO's Southern Organizing Campaign."

Experience in South Stresses 'Need for Repeal of T-H'

BASED UPON THE solid foundation laid by the late Van A. Bittner, the CIO Southern Organization Drive now enters into its second phase, headed by George Baldanzi, executive vice-president of the Textile Workers, the Organizing Committee reported to the convention.

CIO's first task, started three and a half years ago, was to acquaint the workers of the South with the program and objectives of the CIO, the report stated. "It is clear that the Southern drive must, from now on, be based on a new approach and on new techniques aimed at greater concentration and greater intensification."

"Every organizing campaign must be planned in the minutest detail. . . . There is no one single formular for success, but . . . each particular situation has its special and specific demands," the report continued.

"It would be folly," the report said bluntly, "to minimize the effects of the Taft-Hartley Act on the drive. Our experience in the South underscores dramatically the need for outright and total repeal of the Act.

"Reactionary Southern employers, working with other reactionary elements in the South, have combined to prevent either the establishment or the extension of the trade union movement. The Taft-Hartley Act is currently serving as one of management's most potent weapons in the prevention of the orderly organization of Southern workers.

"An atmosphere of open and active hostility, accompanied by company-inspired intimidation, coercion and violence, strongly reminiscent of the pre-Wagner Act era, has re-established itself. The Taft-Hartley Act has stimulated open, violent resistence to peaceful, legal union activities."

The report concluded on the note that, while organizing will not be easy, "the future of the Southern organizing campaign is bright. . . . We are adequately equipped with trained personnel able to cope with any situation that may arise."

The report was submitted through President Murray by the CIO Organizing Committee: Allan S. Haywood, chairman; David J. McDonald, secretary; George Baldanzi, director; James B. Carey, Jacob Potofsky, Charles Lanning (deceased), Albert J. Fitzgerald, Pietro Lucchi, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve.

'Monument' To Van A. Bittner

"Since last we met, death has taken from us the man who, from its inception in 1946 until his untimely passing in July of this year, had guided our Southern organizing campaign. Van A. Bittner symbolized the determination of the entire CIO to organize the South in order that the Southern worker might enjoy all the rights and privileges to which he is entitled and which are possible only through his union.

"Brother Bittner, whose passing was an irreplaceable loss, laid a splendid groundwork upon which we who remain will build and go forward, re-dedicating ourselves to the great task still confronting us, certain that attainment of the goal which animated Brother Bittner is the finest monument we shall be able to erect to his memory."

PAC: 'Dixiegops' Existence Tribute To Our Work'

THE POLITICAL arm of the CIO has informed Pres. Murray that "while the coalition of Dixiecrats and Republicans has been temporarily successful in blocking important items of legislation, the very fact of its formation is a tribute to the effectiveness of labor's political action."

"The next phase of this action, clearly, is to break the hold of the coalition on the Congress by electing additional Representatives and Senators who will stand true to their pledges, and by reelecting those who have fought valiantly for progressive pieces of legislation," states the Political Action Committee, of which Jack Kroll is director.

Jack Kroll

The report started by remarking that "the 1948 presidential election, which resulted in the victory of President Truman and a large number of liberal and progressive representatives, marked the high point of labor political action. But in terms of labor's political potential, it was merely an indication of the distance we have yet to travel.

"In 168 cases men and women supported for the House of Representatives were elected, but of these 59 were elected by a very small margin. In 36 instances men and women supported by your PAC failed of election by 5% or less of the vote cast.

"As a result of the victory of the progressive forces in the 1948 elections, the reactionary forces in the Congress formed a coalition that was effective in blocking a substantial portion of the Fair Deal program.

"Formation of this coalition, your CIO-PAC believes, has hastened the realignment of our political parties in the country. Issues, and the stand of candidates upon those issues, are becoming the major factor in political campaigns, rather than irrelevant questions of personality, ballyhoo, and appeals to emotion."

REFERRING TO the Dixiecrats, PAC said, "An equally important task is the defeat of those members of the coalition, whether Republicans or Democrats, who worked to thwart the will of the people as expressed at the last election.

"This task can be accomplished only by growing organization.

"And, as has been pointed out before, the growth must be at the local level. For the test of election day—the only test that counts—must be met city by city, district by district, state by state. A strong and active PAC in one district can do little or nothing to elect a good representative in another district.

"It is already evident that unlimited sums of money and energy will be spent by the reactionary forces in 1950.

"Immediately following the November 1948 election your CIO-PAC foresaw this danger and declared that in political action there are no 'off years.' The unprecedented interest in politics on the part of other labor and liberal groups this year is evidence that PAC has succeeded in awakening people to the challenge of reaction.

Faithful

PAC reports:

"Of the 157 Democrats and 11 Republicans elected to the House with PAC support, no more than 8 have departed at any time from the policy and program backed by CIO."

"It is significant that the Congressmen that have been elected with PAC support have, with few exceptions, contributed largely to the work of the Congress not only in the field of labor legislation, but in the broader field of social legislation.

"They have been able champions of the people's cause and they have contributed, more than any other single group in Congress, ideas for the solution of our country's problems."

THE REPORT noted that the calibre of candidates backed by "your PAC proves the wisdom of the CIO policy of local or state endorsement within the framework of both major political parties. It proves as well the wisdom of endorsing each candidate on the basis of his platform and record and underlines the great care that is to be exercised in giving slate or blanket endorsements.

"Endorsements, however, must be backed with activity if they are to carry any weight. PAC this year, therefore, has emphasized the importance of registration, and in a number of states registration campaigns have been carried on with marked success.

"Activity during the past year has also been directed at cementing relations with other groups whose interests are in accord with those of the CIO. The importance of the farmer as a customer for industrial goods has been stressed as has the fight of the small businessman to remain free from the pressure of monopolies and cartels.

"In several states and in many communities United Labor Committees have been formed to present coordinated views to the state legislatures and city councils as well as give united backing to candidates wherever possible."

NEXT YEAR will see, the report points out, "each of the 435 members of the House and 34 Senators facing the voters.

"The tendency of the press and the public has been to single out certain of these races as 'key' contests. Inasmuch as each Congressman casts one vote, your PAC regards each election in the coming year as a 'key' contest.

"Each Congressman with a good record deserves and will receive support. Each Congressman with a record of opposition to the program of the CIO and the people deserves and will receive opposition in the primaries as well as in the general election.

"Upon the international unions of the CIO has fallen the burden of conducting the drives for voluntary contributions which finance the work of CIO-PAC. Some of the unions which have consistently ignored or opposed CIO policy in other respects have failed to take part in this work.

"Among the organizations supporting CIO policy many have done an excellent job of collecting PAC dollars while in others there remains considerable room for improvement."

81st Betters 80th, Legislative Dept.

THOUGH there is a natural disappointment over the failure of Congress to carry out the full Fair Deal program, the CIO Legislative Dept. said "despite the tremendous obstacles under which it has had to operate, the 81st Congress constitutes an improvement over the 80th."

The department, whose head is Nathan Cowan, noted that there is an improvement of calibre of those who make up Congressmen; that the loyal band of liberals who voiced a minority position in the 80th were bulwarked by top-notch freshmen.

The report traced the development of liberal support for passage of legislation. It traced the long and hard fight which ended in the House recommitting Taft-Hartley legislation and the Sennate passing a few Taft amendments.

The department pointed to outstanding success for labor and the people as a whole in these fields:

Wage-Hour: (The report went to press before the Congress took final action on the new wage-hour bill.) The CIO backed the provisions of this bill which raised the minimum wage from 40c an hour to 75c an hour. However, it criticized the provisions which removed some persons from coverage. The bill as a whole is a great improvement.

Social Security: "HR 6000, finally passed by the House, is less adequate than the CIO's proposals, but does make substantial improvements in the Social Security program. In view of current emergency conditions, it should be passed (by the Senate) as quickly as possible with the understanding that other needed reforms will be adopted in the near future."

More details on Social Security on another page of this issue.

"There is considerable satisfaction to be derived from the passage of the Public Housing Act in July."

More details on housing and rent control legislation on another page of this issue.

Labor Dept.: Strengthening of this unit "was realized to some degree during the first session, although the department still needs to acquire many functions now outside its jurisdiction."

Improved State Laws

IMPROVEMENTS IN labor laws laws in a number of states because of some victories in the 1948 election and the activities of the State CIO Councils were listed by the Industrial Union Councils Dept.'s report. These included:

1. Provisions bettering workmen's compensation laws in 34 states.
2. New York and Washington laws providing benefits for loss of income because of sickness and injury not connected with work.
3. Constant gains in state laws on hours of labor for women, equal pay laws, child labor, school attendance, wage and hour, and safety and health.

"The dangerous attacks of a few years ago on the right to organize and bargain collectively have been stopped, and the tide in some degrees has been reversed," the report continued.

"For this the State agencies of organized labor, and in particular our CIO State Industrial Union Councils, must be given the major share of the credit. Together with their PAC's, they have changed the political climate in a majority of the states.

Progress was reported in the education and public relations work of the councils through the cooperation of the CIO Dept. of Education and Research and of the CIO Publicity Dept. respectively.

The Councils Dept. also stated that it was cooperating with the CIO Community Services Committee in combating unemployment. John Brophy, Councils Dept. Director, is also CSC treasurer. Anthony W. Smith is assistant director of the Councils Dept.

The department report continued ". . . whatever action is taken looking toward the development of our river basins for hydroelectric power, navigation, irrigation, and flood control, and for re-forestation and soil conservation, must be carried out in the area by the State CIO organizations primarily involved.

"A number of new certificates of affiliation were issued during the year and a few certificates were withdrawn on one ground or another. The certificate of the Greater New York Industrial Union Council was revoked by action of the CIO Executive Board, and thereafter a conference of CIO locals in New York City was called under the authority of Director Brophy and a new Council established.

"The total number of State organizations is now 39 and of our City and County Councils is 245."

'Before You Turn This Page, Look In Your Pocket'

Samples Of Ads For ACW's Union Label Drive

"STOP! Before you turn this page, look in your pocket!"

The current issue of Life carries this eye-catching cutline on a full-color advertisement prepared by the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers as the kick-off in its $500,000 publicity drive to popularize the union label.

This is the first drive of such magnitude ever conducted by a union on behalf of its label. The Life ad will be followed by others in leading national magazines of general circulation, in the larger newspapers, in nation and local labor publications, in radio announcements, and in "car cards"—advertising trade name for plugs run in street cars and buses.

ACW Vice Pres. Charles Weinstein of Philadelphia is in charge of the campaign. The purpose of the drive, in the words of Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, is to "eliminate the last remnants of non-union products in the men's apparel industry."

Because the men's clothing industry is 95% organized, the first emphasis will be on that. The Life ad carries a picture of a man's suit coat, its right lapel turned back to show the inside breast pocket; a large black arrow points to the place inside the pocket where the label is attached.

THE AIM of the drive is frankly organizational, and the appeal throughout is frankly practical. "That label is valuable," the Life ad reads, "because it guarantees the suit or overcoat was constructed . . . every step, every stitch . . . by skilled craftsmen, master tailors who know how to put the most wear into a garment, how to get the most out of fabric and style."

"When you demand the union label, it cost you no more!" a forthcoming advertisement states. " . . . Those low wages don't mean lower-priced suits. Non-union manufacturers aren't fighting unions out of charity—the last thing they want to do is pass on their high profits to the consumer. Most of it they keep for themselves. The rest goes into the retailer's pocket. . . . For fair value—in every price range—stick to clothes with the union label."

Among the unorganized 5% of the industry, Amalgamated says, are the Merit Clothing Co. of Mayfield, Ky., makers of "Merit" and "Garfield Ace" clothing; the Curlee Clothing Co. of St. Louis and Mayfield, and the Richman Bros. Clothing Co. of Cleveland, who own their own retail outlets throughout the country.

The union label drive is specifically not a boycott of the unorganized shops; it is aimed at making the consumer label-conscious so that when he goes to the store to buy a new suit he will ask, as a matter of dollars-and-cents value, for the union label.

This approach, the Amalgamated figures, will make the owners of unorganized shops see the practical advantages of unionization without giving them undue publicity, good or bad, and will also keep the union out of trouble with NLRB General Counsel Robert N. Denham, who is quick to see a boycott where none exists.

ON SEPT. 20, the Daily News Record, bible of the garment trade, carried a direct appeal from the Amalgamated to the industry itself.

The industry was called on to show the union label in its own advertising, and to make sure that the label was on every garment. Amalgamated also asked the industry to "acquaint your sales force with the label promotion—and prepare them to make the most of the increased consumer preference for garments bearing the Amalgamated label."

"Every Amalgamated message," the trade ad continued, "is keyed to build ever-increasing consumer preference—easier sales—for your apparel carrying the Amalgamated label. To more than 16 million Americans, the union label is already a familiar friend."

The Amalgamated campaign will convert the existing goodwill into buying action. And to the many more millions of value-conscious Americans, the Amalgamated campaign will bring home the advantages which skilled union workmanship brings to styling and fabric."

To fellow-unionists throughout the country, Potofsky emphasizes that "great dependence will be placed upon local trade-union and consumer committees, in all industrial cities and towns in the country, to promote the Amalgamated label. These committees will visit their local clothing and department stores and urge the sale of men's and boys' clothing bearing the label."

"The ability of the Amalgamated not only to serve its own 375,000 members through the years but also to render service to other labor groups has been due, in the largest measure, to our ability to maintain union standards in the clothing and allied industries," Potofsky continued. "The Amalgamated label is a perfect symbol of our work for our own members and our fellow-men.

"Every American should demand the Amalgamated Union label every time he purchases men's and boys' clothing. Union label goods is always available if you insist upon it."

THE CIO convention will be asked to pass a resolution supporting the union label drive. Already three State CIO conventions have adopted resolutions of support—Vermont, Missouri, and New York. Each of these calls on every affiliated local union to set up committees, and asks each CIO member to demand the union label. Amalgamated is also asking every International to push the drive.

Later on, the drive will be extended to other fields. Amalgamated's total jurisdiction includes men's and boys' clothing, department stores, shirts, work-clothes, sportswear, underwear, gloves and neckwear. Organization in these fields is progressing against heavy obstacles, and the Amalgamated staff is convinced that the union label campaign will have a direct—and helpful—effect on membership drives in these related industries.

The problem existing in neckwear is typical of what the union faces. According to Secy.-Treas. Edmund Gottesman of the Neckwear Joint Board of New York, neckwear manufacturers under contract with the Amalgamated are letting out work to low-paying, non-union shops, because of a business slump now being felt generally throughout the field. The union has informed the manufacturers' associations, through their lawyers, that Amalgamated stands ready to take "drastic action" against manufacturers who do not live up to the letter of their contracts, which of course forbid the letting of work to sub-standard shops.

THE PROBLEM is not simple, because during the war, with the huge pressure of business, the union reluctantly and occasionally countenanced sub-contracting to open-shop manufacturers in order to avoid the appearance of impeding the war effort.

In the neckwear industry the union label used to be extensively carried, before the war, but the practice has gradually gone out of fashion.

All of this the Amalgamated proposes to help remedy through its union label drive. And it is because of problems similar to the above that Amalgamated says frankly, in its appeal to fellow unions:

"We have helped to bring peace to the nation's clothing industry through many years of constructive relations with over 6000 employers, and at the same time we have improved the working conditions and raised the standard of living of our 375,000 members.

"Beyond this, as you can see by the record below, we have done more than our share to support the services so essential to everyone in the community.

"Now we are asking your help in our fight to prevent the return of sweatshop conditions and sub-standard wages in the clothing industry. You can do your part by demanding the Amalgamated label whenever you shop for suits of overcoats.

"We will appreciate your help."

27 From CIO Serve The Community

THE NATL. CIO Community Services Committee reported that there were 27 full-time CSC representatives working on the staffs of community chests and councils of social agencies and 40 full-time CSC representatives in a number of cities.

"Last year there were about 6,000 CIO men and women serving on the boards and committees of the voluntary agencies. Today there are approximately 7,000 CIO men and women serving in this capacity.

"During 1949, CIO-CSC worked with many international and local unions in the organization of strike relief programs. In this connection, the Committee paid special attention to the possible needs of the Steelworkers, Auto Workers and Rubber Workers in the event of a strike.

"The recession this year found the CIO prepared—as a result of the community services program—to help meet the personal needs of our unemployed members and their families." Working on the principle that the CIO has a responsibility for the welfare of all its members — whether employed or unemployed — the Committee, working with the CIO Full Employment Committee and Department of Education and Research, gave guidance and staff assistance to affiliates in helping them meet the needs of their unemployed members and families for jobs, homes, food, clothing, medical care, hospitalization and other services. To promote guidance along these lines, the Committee prepared and distributed a pamphlet, "When Unemployment Hits."

"THE COMMITTEE, working through city and state industrial union councils, sponsored training institutes and conferences during the past year in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Colorado, Georgia, Wisconsin, Ohio, New York, Illinois, Michigan and other places. Many of these conferences were attended by both CIO and other community agency leaders.

"To promote community-wide understanding and organization, the Committee worked closely with a number of national agencies and their local affiliates.

"The lack of a national health insurance program and a more comprehensive social security system made it necessary that greater attention be paid to the out-of-plant needs of members and their families for available health and welfare services.

"The Committee continued its oversea relief program through 1949, largely through CARE and the United States Committee for the International Children's Emergency Fund. The chairman of the Committee this summer visited Italy, France and Czechoslovakia to review Committee and CARE operations.

"In 1946 the Committee established an annual award in the name of President Murray. The first award, in 1947, was given to Gen. Omar N. Bradley, then head of the Veterans' Administration. The 1948 award went to Senator Robert F. Wagner. The Committee has decided to present the 1949 award to the person who has done the most outstanding job in the field of health and welfare. With this award, as in the past, will go a grant of $10,000."

Rise In Unemployment Adds To Research Dept. Work

THE INCREASE in unemployment and in part time work earlier this year called for the mobilization of all the facilities of the CIO's Dept. of Research and Education.

The report to Pres. Murray of the department, whose director is Stanley Ruttenberg, says its work included "not only critical analysis of CIO economic data, but the presentation of CIO economic and legislative policy through various field conferences and publications. The work of both research and education was very closely integrated."

The report is divided into two main sections:

Research

"Events of the past year demonstrated need for continuous analysis by labor of workers' problems and methods of solution. Efforts by unions to secure wage increases and social security through collective bargaining had to be bolstered by facts on wages, needs, profits, and many other factors. Increased unemployment required study of methods of overcoming existing evils and seeking to prevent repetition of past depressions.

"The Department has served as a clearing-house for our affiliates in discussion of such matters as union research methods, procedures for bolstering labor's wage demands, and problems that arise in collective bargaining on social security. By means of general meetings of research directors, to which outside economists were frequently invited, major economic problems have been explored and policies developed.

"In addition to furnishing information of many kinds in response to special requests, the department continued monthly publication of the Economic Outlook.

"'The Truth About CIO', which has had a circulation of over a million, has been reprinted in up-to-date form (called "The CIO, What It is and What It Does) and new pamphlets have been issued on the need for passage of federal and local fair employment practice acts, farmer-labor cooperation and housing.

"Staff economists assisted in the preparation of numerous articles and speeches and participated in many meetings and radio programs dealing with current issues.

"THE DEPARTMENT was called upon frequently for preparation of testimony before Congressional committees. Topics covered include taxes, public assistance, old age, survivors' and disability insurance, reciprocal trade agreements, monopoly, and appropriations for the Department of Labor and the Federal Security Agency. The Department continued to carry responsibility for the staff work of the Social Security Committee and the Tax Committee. It has also cooperated closely with the Full Employment Committee, the Health, Safety and Welfare Committee, and the Guaranteed minimum Annual Wage Research Committee.

"The department served as the central point of contact between research representatives of CIO affiliates and the major government statistical agencies.

"The Department's economists served on the Executive Committee of the Productivity Conference, the Economic Statistics Advisory Committee for the 1950 Census of Population, the Federal Advisory Council on Employment Security Programs, the Trade Union Advisory Committee to the U. S. Women's Bureau, the Labor Committee of the National Planning Association, and the Advisory Committee to the U. S. National Commission for the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

Education

"The educational work was carried on through the training at six CIO Summer Schools, the stimulation of local education programs at four Regional Education Conferences; the reaching of more than 75,000 people with sound movies; and the development of visual techniques including sound filmstrips, the wall map, turnover talk, posters, etc.; through the effective utilization of printed materials, the preparation of discussion guides, and the work of coordinating over-all CIO education programs of international unions and state councils.

"The CIO Leadership Training Courses included labor economics, labor history, and problems of union security and union leadership. Workshops gave practical training in techniques of political action, public speaking and parliamentary procedure, preparing union newspapers, problems of union meetings, etc. Evening programs covered topics close to CIO's program such as conservation and regional planning, farm-labor relations, state legislation, etc. A recreation director was hired for the school series.

"The program of the department's film division has responded to the growing demand from local unions for films, filmstrips, and information on film programs, equipment, etc. The CIO Film Library now circulates over 100 prints of 16mm sound films.

"During the past year, the film library handled some 600 rentals of 16mm films. This indicates considerably more than that number of showings, since unions frequently plan several showings for each film. Through these showings CIO films reach 75,000 people.

"The Economic Outlook has wide coverage both from the daily press and the labor press; mats of selected Economic Outlook cartoons are sent regularly to some 80 labor papers and are reproduced widely, accompanied by excerpts or the complete text.

"A social concern of the department is the preparation of materials for distribution at state and county fairs, for mailing to farmers, etc. The pamphlet, Forward Together, was prepared for this purpose in 1949; over 80,000 copies were distributed, including special editions with the imprints of five state councils.

"CIO has provided active leadership in the campaign for the Labor Extension Service bill in cooperation with other labor, education, and community groups, and many CIO international unions, councils, and locals are giving financial aid to the National Committee for the Extension of Labor Education on which the department is represented."

New CIO Pamphlet On Employment

A pamphlet, "When Unemployment Hits," has been issued by the CIO Full Employment Committee and the Natl. CIO Community Services Committee.

Emil Rieve is administrative chairman of the first committee; Irving Abramson is chairman of the second. The pamphlet outlines functions the various arms of CIO and its affiliates can perform for CIO members.

House Unit To Probe Charges Of Forced Labor in Ky. Plant

A CONGRESSIONAL investigation will be conducted into alleged enforced labor at the Bond Brothers' railroad tie manufacturing plant just outside Louisville, Ky.

A hearing will be held at Louisville in mid-November by a House Labor subcommittee consisting of Reps. Burke (D., Ohio), Wier, (D., Minn.), Perkins (D., Ky.), who will preside at the hearing; McConnell (R., Pa.) and Werdel (R., Cal.).

Arrangements for the hearing were made after Rep. Lesinski (D., Mich.), chairman of the House Labor Committee, read a story in the CIO News telling about conditions at the plant where the CIO Woodworkers have been on strike since last May 2.

CIO Reg. Dir. William B. Taylor and CIO Woodworkers Rep. Emil Luther claimed that a score of parolees from the La Grange Reformatory were forced to work at the Bond Brothers plant.

Some of the parolees, all of whose terms have now expired, testified to being forced to work at the plant, at a hearing before George Burton, Kentucky Commissioner of Labor Relations.

Oregon CIO Steps Up PAC Work

IN A MOVE to strengthen its political activity in Oregon, the Oregon CIO Council has set up a state-wide political action committee consisting of members from each congressional district.

Committee members, elected at the twelfth annual convention of the council at Bend, Ore., will carry on their activity within the area they are elected to represent and will work under the direction and supervision of the officers and executive board of the council.

Duties of the committee, as outlined in a resolution submitted by Chester C. Dustin and John M. Brost of the CIO Regional office, will be to increase registration, get out the vote and provide information on legislation and proposed legislation "which affect the principles and objectives of CIO for the promotion of the general welfare of all people."

George Brown who resigned his office as Director of Organization for CIO Woodworkers to become Council secretary-treasurer when Stanley Earl accepted a ECA post last August, was nominated without opposition for his present position.

For president the delegates nominated H. E. Geiger, Klamath Falls Woodworker, and staff member of the Oregon CIO Regional Office, and John Brost, Portland Longshoreman. Geiger presided at the convention as president, succeeding to that office upon the resignation of Neil Griffin a few weeks prior to the meeting. The president will be elected by referendum.

CIO Reg. Dir. Tim Flynn, for northern California, told the delegate:

"The communist problem in the CIO will be in the past tense following the National CIO convention in Cleveland."

Other speakers included Pres. J. E. Fadling of CIO Woodworkers; Pres. Donald Jones of the Oregon Farmers' Union; George Roberts, Western PAC director; Vice Pres. Tom Jones of the Oregon Communications Workers, CIO; and Intl. Rep. Matt Meehan, of the Longshoremen's Union.

A statement on policy adopted by the convention called for the abandonment of the practice of indorsing people for political office on the "lesser of two evils" theory and for recommending support to only those candidates who will "forthrightly" support the legislative program of the CIO.

Resolutions adopted indorsed the proposed Columbia Valley Administration legislation, upheld the withdrawal of the CIO from the WFTU; called for reapportionment of the state legislative and congressional representation in Oregon, and urged continued support of a "truly progressive" legislative program for the people of Oregon.

Other resolutions demanded the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and called for the passage of a national anti-poll tax law.

Local Adopts Weekly

A 70-year-old weekly at Wilson, N. Y., the Star, has become the official publication of Local 686, CIO Auto Workers, and henceforth will be mailed each week to the homes of the 3000 Niagara County members of the local. In each edition of the Star hereafter there will be a special section devoted to news of Local 686 and general labor news.

Legal Dept. Indicts T-H and NLRB

By DOROTHY ROCKWELL CLARK

THE CIO LEGAL Dept., in its annual report to the convention, turned in as damning a recital of evidence against the Taft-Hartley law, in theory and application, as has been collected in one place since CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg presented his testimony to Congress last Spring.

The indictment applied particularly to the NLRB, which the Legal Division declared had "strained law and logic" in a series of "retrogressive . . . shocking . . . almost unbelievable" decisions "which vie with the provisions of Taft-Hartley themselves in their strangling effects upon labor."

As for NLRB General Counsel Robert N Denham, whose ouster was demanded by President Murray on Oct. 26, the Legal Department found once more that the Maryland lawyer had acted in an "arbitrary and irresponsible," as well as an "anti-labor," manner.

The Department found that no compromise was possible with the basic Taft-Hartley provisions, particularly the revival of government by injunction. It noted that on the crucial Senate vote on the injunction power, labor came within two votes of winning its point, and called for redoubled efforts "to return a Congress in 1950 which will follow the will of the people by repealing Taft-Hartley."

Based on answers made by CIO Internationals to a lengthy questionnaire, the Legal Department found and submitted facts to prove that the act and the NLRB had:

1. "Hampered and obstructed the organization of the unorganized . . . Organization of new members has slowed down to a rate where it scarcely equals the loss of members due to death and retirement from industry . . . Employers have been encouraged to commit unfair labor practices. In January, 1949, the number of unfair labor practice complaints issued by the Board were double the monthly average for the past seven years."

2. "Precipitated three classes of otherwise unnecessary strikes: (a) Organizational strikes . . . (b) Strikes forced by the very terms of the Act (such as the provision making unions sueable for unauthorized acts of their agents); (c) Many disputes over economic issues which would ordinarily have been easily adjusted. These have resulted in employers forcing strikes in order to take advantage of the strike-breaking provisions of the Act."

3. "Maintained the gap between workers' living costs and earnings, and encouraged industry to deny wage increases, despite soaring profits and continued high prices."

4. "Encouraged employers to cut contract standards and to become un-cooperative and adamant in the settlement of grievances."

These were the effects which CIO predicted while the Act was under discussion, and after it was passed. These were the predictions which the Natl. Association of Manufacturers soothingly told the public were nothing but the anguished screams of labor czars about to lose their stranglehold on the American public.

The Legal Dept. commented that "tragically enough for our unions, time has proved the predictions of the CIO to be correct."

The most detailed presentation of facts to back up the CIO's indictment of the Act itself, was made in Goldberg's report to Congress; the report to the convention refers only briefly to some of the most spectacular instances, such as the nation-wide strikes in the printing industry, the atomic energy dispute, the mine workers' cases, the longshore disputes on East Coast and Great Lakes.

BY NOW THE provisions of the Act itself, confusing as they are, have through hard experience become familiar to most union officers, and its effects are apparent. The startling new material presented by the Legal Department in its report has to do with the record of anti-labor activity which the NLRB has built up even in interpreting those provisions which did not change the Wagner Act.

The Department pointed out that the Board had many opportunities, because of the confusing and contradictory nature of the T-H hodgepodge, to undo by administrative ruling the most damaging effects of some sections, to choose the more liberal of possible interpretations, and to counteract to some extent the Denham one-man rule.

Instead, the Department said, "we have witnessed an outpouring of rulings from the Board, albeit by divided votes in most instances, which vie with the provisions of Taft-Hartley themselves in their strangling effects upon labor."

Here are some of the instances cited by the Department:

1. T-H provides that economic strikers who are not entitled to reinstatement may not vote in representation elections. This restriction does not apply to men who are on strike in protest against unfair labor practices. But in the Times Square Stores case the Board "enunciated a rule which results in employes who are actually unfair labor practice strikers, being called economic strikers, which means they are not eligible to vote if they have been permanently replaced." Here was an instance where the Board actually stretched the language of one section in order to apply the more severe restriction of another, and the decision also had the effect of giving Denham additional powers.

2. In the Pipe Machinery Co. case the Board "issued an open invitation to employers to replace economic strikers as quickly as possible," by deciding in an anti-labor fashion a problem left open by the Act itself—the question of when an economic striker is deemed to have been permanently displaced.

3. In the National Electric Products case, contrary to "past implicit principles and the plain will of Congress," the NLRB decided that unfair labor practice strikers were bound by no-strike clauses, in spite of the fact that Congress had refused to adopt an amendment outlawing any strike "to remedy practices for which an administrative remedy is available under the Act." Board chairman Herzog, who voted with the majority, nevertheless recognized the sweeping nature of this finding, and said that blanket application of the rule would "encourage commission of unfair labor practices of such provocative magnitude that . . . employes can reasonably be expected — or intended — by their employer to turn to what would prove to be suicidal self-help."

4. The Board gave sanction to "a powerful anti-union weapon—rewarding workers for not participating in a strike," in the General Electric Co. case.

The NLRB said that strikers should retain seniority but could be deprived of vacation and retirement benefits, commenting that "an employer whose operations are strike-bound should be permitted to compensate non-strikers for their involuntary loss of time for the purpose of holding intact that portion of his working force." Nothing in the Taft-Hartley law covers this point explicitly.

5. Foremen were protected under the old Wagner Act, yet in deciding a case which arose under that law, the Board held that supervisors had violated their duty to "forestall destruction of key plant facilities" when they refused to take over work normally done by striking members of the United Steelworkers at the Carnegie-Illinois Steel Co.

The foremen had not refused to do their normal work and were not on strike. Yet the NLRB found "a crude analogy between the refusal of foremen to do maintenance work and the criminal actions of company employes who wilfully damage company property during a strike, and for that reason refused them reinstatement after they had been fired." This was clearly beyond the scope of the Wagner Act which protected the concerted activities of foremen.

6. In a "shocking" decision, the NLRB in the United Elastic Corp. case exonerated an employer from all charges of unfair labor practice by penalizing a union for a wildcat strike which its international representative had tried to stop. The strike was in violation of a no-strike clause and was occasioned by "an accumulation of unsettled grievances," in the Board's own words.

The employer, two days after the strike started, cancelled his contract with the CIO Textile Workers. He also solicited strikers individually to return to work, handed out unilateral wage increases, fired strikers who failed to return to work, and discriminated against strikers in its re-employment policies.

From all of this the Board exempted him, on the "narrow and tenuous" grounds that the International Union had not appealed directly to the strikers themselves but only to their leadership.

7. By contrast, the Board "strained law and logic to absolve" the employer of all responsibility for statements made by his supervisors, in the Beatrice Foods case, in spite of the fact that the NLRB majority found the statements unlawful. The employer had posted notices disavowing responsibility for what the supervisors said, and therefore could not be held responsible, the majority said. This finding, the Department commented, "flies in the face of reality."

'Ready Device'

NLRB minority member Houston, commenting on the infamous United Elastic Corp. decision: "We must be aware that if an unauthorized strike can be attributed to a union so simply, and an employer is permitted thereafter to disregard both his contract and the representative of his employees by individual dealing with strikers, then the board itself has contrived a ready device for dissident employees and collusive employers to subvert honest collective bargaining."

The Legal Department cited several other examples to show "the disparity of treatment accorded employers and unions" in cases involving responsibility.

8. In an "outrageous" decision, the NLRB found that a union had undertaken an illegal boycott simply by picketing a non-union employer and placing him on its "We Do Not Patronize" list. The picket signs did not urge anybody else not to patronize the establishment; they simply stated that the union members did not do so. This was found to be an illegal secondary boycott in spite the fact that T-H specifically states that "the expressing of any views shall not constitute an unfair labor practice under any section." The minority of the Board said flatly that in this case the majority was "rewriting legislation for Congress."

9. "Apparently motivated by a mechanistic search for 'equalization,' the Board (in the Continental Southern Corp. case) held that an employer may challenge a claim of a union to representation of a majority even if he has no 'reasonable basis in fact' for the challenge." Such a "bad-faith" challenge has by long precedent been considered an employer unfair practice, and Congress held that the employer must have at least some reasonable basis for believing the union claim to be false before he challenged it. Now, comments the Department, "the Board has forged an additional union-busting weapon."

Murray Demands Denham's Ouster

CIO Pres. Murray has demanded the ouster of NLRB General Counsel Robert N. Denham. "I am advised," Murray said, "that the President has ample power to remove Mr. Denham."

"Ample justification exists from Mr. Denham's removal. He has overstepped permissible bounds of discretion in administering his office. He has utilized his vast powers to aid employers bent on destroying free trade unions.

"Denham has refused time and again to issue complaints against employers on well-founded charges of unfair labor practices brought by unions. This has encouraged unfair employers to violate the law with impunity.

"On the other hand, Mr. Denham has issued complaint after complaint against labor unions based on frivolous and unfounded charges by employers. Moreover, he has used his injunctive powers in a reckless and vengeful manner in order to suppress legitimate strikes and other concerted activities of unions. No less than approximately 60 injunctions have been sought by the General Counsel under the T-H Act. Fifty-eight of these have been against unions and only two against employers.

"On a number of occasions the NLRB and the courts have found that the complaints issued by Mr. Denham, which form the basis for the injunctions, were baseless and should never have been issued in the first instance.

"This man Denham has even sought to enjoin peaceful picketing of a worker's own employer. The entire NLRB rejected this vicious attempt as a direct violation of the constitutional protection of free speech and as unwarranted even by the infamous T-H Act."

Denham, in Washington, had no comment.

WE WISH THE NAM WERE RIGHT

"Back in 1947, the CIO vigorously protested that Taft-Hartley was the handiwork of reactionary employers and legislators who aimed ultimately to destroy labor unions. Not only does it place untold restrictions on the legitimate activities of unions, the CIO warned, but it provides employers with the very anti-union weapons with which to forge a campaign of destruction.

"Employers, suddenly cloaking themselves in a most suspicious solicitude for the interests of workers, retorted that the Act would actually benefit the rank and file, and that its restrictions were aimed only at a few allegedly dictatorial labor czars. Labor's fears, said the NAM, were based on slogans and generalities which were unsupported by specific facts.

"Tragically enough for our unions, time has proved the predictions of the CIO to be correct. As early as a year ago, a host of specific facts had accumulated to blast the irresponsible statements of employers that labor's fears were purely imaginary. These facts, which attest to the wicked anti-union nature of Taft-Hartley, were set forth in detail in my last annual report to the CIO.

"Since last year new specific facts have been added to this scandalous record. A complete documentation of these facts was made available to Congress by General Counsel Goldberg, who testified on behalf of the CIO before the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare and the House Committee on Education and Labor in support of the Thomas-Lesinski bill to repeal Taft-Hartley."—quoted from the report of the Legal Department to the convention. Goldberg's statement to Congress was 127 pages long.

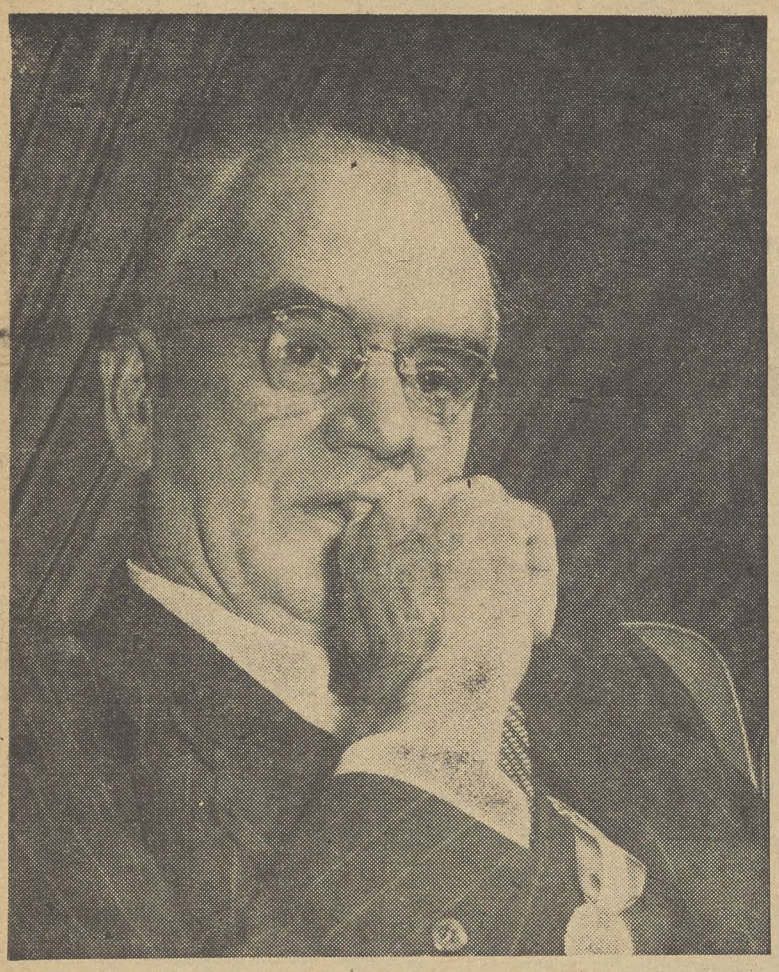
UE AND FE EXPELLED BY CIO

10 Unions To Be Tried On Communist Charges

The 11th constitutional CIO convention dealt crushing blows designed to make it impossible for Communists ever again to gain a beachhead within the organization.

These actions were approved by the CIO convention and executive board last week at the public auditorium in Cleveland:



CIO PRESIDENT PHILIP MURRAY

- A constitutional change barring Communists, Fascists or their consistent followers, from holding the post of officer or board member in CIO.
- A constitutional change giving the board power, by a two-thirds vote, to remove any officer or board member who follows the Communist party line.
- A constitutional change allowing the board to expel any union for pro-Communist actions.
- The United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America was expelled.
- A new union, the International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, CIO, was chartered.
- The Farm Equipment Workers Union was expelled.
- The board authorized trials for nine board members and 10 unions accused of following the party line.
- The per capita was increased to 10 cents.
- Pres. Philip Murray, Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey and Vice-Pres. and Organization Dir. Allan S. Haywood were reelected unanimously. Joseph Beirne of CWA replaced Albert Fitzgerald of the old UE as a Vice President.

Sharp, harsh words were exchanged on the convention floor as Murray led the fight to oust the Commies and fellow travelers. No effort was made to pull punches or to avoid calling the Communist-anti-Communist fight by its right name.

It was obvious as the session opened that the majority of delegates were fed up with the lefties, that they wanted them thrown out of the CIO. Feeling against CP followers heightened as the convention progressed.

When the last session was over the backbone of the left-wing in the CIO had been broken beyond repair.

CIO forces are now girding for the battle expected to be waged between unions inside the organization and those now out or on their way out. Attention centers now on the struggle taking place between the left-wingers loyal to the leadership of ousted UE and the right-wing group that is loyal to CIO policy.

New Electrical Union Chartered By Convention

Bethlehem Pact Breaks Solid Steel Front

"WE BROKE the solid front of the steel industry!"

Although the morning papers were already carrying the happy news, and the announcement had been made 13 hours earlier at a press conference attended by over 200 newsmen, CIO Pres. Philip Murray's dramatic statement to the CIO convention sent a thrill down each delegate's spine.

Bethlehem Steel Co.—second largest steel producer in the world—had settled. Its 80,000 CIO Steelworkers, on strike for 31 days, were going back to work. And the remainder of the steel strikers—420,000 of them—felt it would be only a short time before they, too, returned to work as victors in the nationwide struggle for pensions and social insurance.

The Bethlehem settlement broke many precedents. It was the first time a major steel company had acted independently of U. S. Steel, traditional pace-setter. It was the first time a major steel company had agreed to the principle of an employer's responsibility for its aged workers. It was to mark the first time in history that a uniform Blue Cross hospitalization plan had been negotiated by a union on a nationwide scale.

PHILIP MURRAY, CIO and Steelworkers' president, shakes hands with Joseph R. Larkin, Bethlehem Steel vice president, after they have signed an agreement ending the strike against Bethlehem. Terms give workers $100 company-paid pensions, social insurance.

TO THE CHEERING conventioners, Murray reported: "It is with a degree of pride that I report to the Convention here this morning the perfection of this collective bargaining contract with the Bethlehem Steel Corp.—the first time in the history of the steel industry the so-called solid front of the industry has been broken . . .

"As late as 12 o'clock last night the striking workers, members of our union, at the properties of the Bethlehem Corp., all the communities in which their properties are located, were having giant celebrations, celebrating what they and I believe to be the greatest victory of the Union."

Triumphantly Murray termed the Bethlehem victory "a great moral gain, a great material gain, for the Steelworkers . . . I am proud of the Steelworkers."

CIO presidential bouquets also went to the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, whose executive board had voted financial aid to the strikers; to the Textile Workers who had pledged $250,000 in support of the steel union; and to the Auto Workers, who, Murray said, "do not limit that support to $100,000, but they are prepared to go to any extreme, together with the other organizations, in support of our cause."

MURRAY'S remarks were made after introduction of Resolution 1, "Support of the Steel Strike."

The resolution, unanimously adopted, described the strike as a fight "to end the double standard, which provides fat pensions on a non-contributory basis, to high-paid steel executives, while delaying modest pensions to the workers . . .

"We congratulate Pres. Philip Murray and the United Steelworkers of America for their courageous struggle on behalf of all labor and all the American people," the resolution continued. "We accept this challenge of Wall St. The Steelworkers' fight is our fight. We shall fight side by side with them until victory is won."

The convention—on behalf of CIO's six million members—pledged "full moral organizational and financial support" to the steel strike.

One of the first effects of the Bethlehem settlement—other than the employes' return to work—was to set into motion negotiations in other companies. So far as the union was concerned, there would be no settlement which did not at least match the Bethlehem plan—and the Bethlehem plan was considerably more costly than the presidential fact-finding board's recommendations.

As the CIO News went to press, the industry's third largest pin appeared ready to fall. Talks with Republic, which employs 54,000, began almost immediately on the heels of the Bethlehem settlement and were reported working their way toward final agreement.

Meanwhile, much the same situation was reported of contract talks with Jones & Laughlin, fourth largest member of the industry.

Two smaller concerns—Lukens, with 5,000 workers, and McLouth, with 500—came to terms along the lines of the Bethlehem plan. Estimated cost to McLouth will be 1½c more than Bethlehem's expenditure.

Throughout the week following the Bethlehem peace pact, U. S. Steel, in its new role as follower instead of leader, sat quietly in the background. "Big Steel" was reportedly "studying" the Bethlehem formula.

While the steel companies were falling into line one by one, the Timken Roller Bearing Co. started swimming in the opposite direction. Rather than grant union demands for a Bethlehem-type contract, the company attempted to buy off the Steelworkers indefinitely with an offer of a 6c hourly wage increase beginning Jan. 1, 1950 and extending until conclusion of an agreement on pensions.

The 10,000 Timken employes turned down the proposal and joined fellow Steelworkers on the picket line.

HERE ARE the main provisions of the agreement which put Bethlehem employes back to work:

Minimum pensions of $100 a month are assured all workers at age 65 after 25 years seniority. This includes federal social security benefits. The plan is wholly company-financed. No maximum is placed on the amount of the pension benefits. The union estimated some of the higher-paid employes may draw as much as $250 a month.

After 15 years with the company, a worker may qualify for pension benefits. In such cases, payments will be a minimum of $4 a month for each year of service.

The average pension, including Social Security, will be about $110 a month. This is more than twice the amount workers receive under Bethlehem's 26-year-old pension plan, installed unilaterally.

Under the agreement, at least 1500 workers who were previously eligible for pensions, but instead were thrown on the "Bethlehem Relief Plan" which was entirely financed by the workers will receive the $100 minimum pension the rest of their lives.

These aged workers, the union explained, were denied pensions by the company's General Pension Board, which had absolute right to deny payment for any reason.

Rules governing the company's previous pension plan contain this statement:

"The General Pension Board shall have the absolute right to cancel or suspend payment of the pension of any pensioner whenever it shall consider such pensioner is undeserving for any reason."

These 1500—now drawing $48 a month from their own relief plan—will begin receiving their new pensions as soon as the program goes into effect. The plan is slated to begin operating Jan. 1, 1950, but actuarial difficulties may push it a few months late. In any event, it must be in effect by March 1.

An additional 3500 pensioners, now receiving a $50 minimum pension, will be eligible to receive twice that much when the new plan gets into motion.

Exact cost of the pension formula to the company has not yet been worked out, but both union and industry spokesmen expected it to cost at least 10c an hour.

In his address to the CIO convention, Murray said the union's estimates placed the figure "considerably in excess of 12c an hour."

THE SECOND part of the Bethlehem agreement will guarantee for every employe a minimum life insurance policy of $2100. The maximum runs as high as $4500. The average will be about $3000.

Each employe, his wife and dependent children are covered by a Blue Cross hospitalization plan, which will provide hospitalization up to 70 days.

In addition, employes will receive $26 in sick benefits up to 26 weeks.

Unlike the pension program, which is non-contributory, this phase of the agreement will be financed by a 2½c hourly contribution from the company, matched by equal payments from the workers.

FOR ABOUT 90% of Bethlehem employes, now financing their own insurance program, the new plan will mean a reduction in expenditures and a great increase in benefits.

Present cost to workers of this plan is 3½c to 4c an hour, Murray said. The new plan will cut down this expense by 1 to 1½c.

All told, the Bethlehem settlement is expected to cost the company a minimum of 12½c an hour—2½c above the price recommended by the Presidential fact-finders.

But to the union, the strike had already brought an even more important victory. Murray expressed it to the convention this way:

"The position of the United Steelworkers of America is now completely vindicated. We shall carry forward until the entire industry negotiates with our union similar plans for members of our organization . . . "

Unified Action For Jobless

THE CIO reaffirmed its belief that only a national system of unemployment insurance, geared in with a national employment service and a unified national social insurance system, can properly discharge the responsibility of the national government to deal adequately with the national problem of unemployment.

As a preliminary step, the convention supported President Truman's proposal for national minimum benefit standards.

The resolution added that "such standards cannot really give assurance of proper performance and cannot overcome inherent difficulties in relying on separate state laws.

WEAKNESSES cited in the crazy quilt of unemployment insurance and public employment services were noted:

- Because of low minimums set by state laws, benefits are too low, averaging only a third of weekly earnings.
- Duration of benefits is too limited.
- Discriminatory laws and rulings deprive thousands of workers of benefits to which they are entitled.
- Workers employed in more than one state lose their rights partly or completely.

Proposing a series of recommendations to protect workers and their rights, the resolution adopted by delegates favored, as an interim measure, immediate provision of benefits up to 52 weeks in a calendar year out of federal funds, provided states meet certain minimum benefit standards.

Voice Asked On NSRB

EMPHASIZING the necessity of maximum civilian control of our economy in case of war, the convention called for the appointment of a top policy National Security Resources Board upon which labor is properly and adequately represented.

The resolution pointed out that labor's interest in our industrial mobilization program is broad and all-inclusive, going far beyond interest solely in manpower problems to encompass the proper utilization of natural resources, the proper location and establishment of plants, adequate conversion of civilian production and a continuing interest in major economic policies relating both to peacetime and wartime.

Establishment of the NSRB as a civilian agency was commended by the resolution as a welcome improvement over exclusive military control of essentially civilian operation. But the convention pointed out that continuing domination by the Board by the military and by industrialists and bankers is not consistent with our democratic way of life.

CIO Convention Cracks Down On Left Wing

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

IN CLEVELAND'S huge Public Auditorium, a lot of people cried for joy, hundreds were on their feet cheering and shouting in glee, scores pounded tables happily—and a small band of diehards remained in their seats glowering.

The CIO had clamped down—and hard—on Communists within its ranks. No more would party liners use the good name of CIO to advance their causes. No more could a CIO leader put party loyalty above his obligations to his union and to his membership. This was the 11th annual CIO convention.

In six earth-shaking days, the CIO heard and did these things (all in the Public Auditorium, except where noted):

1. Heard Pres. Philip Murray declare in his keynote: "There is no way, no decent way, by which we can hope to resolve these (Communist) issues in the CIO's International Executive Board. It cannot be done. There will be recommended certain definite, constructive, constitutional changes designed to put an end to these practices within CIO."

2. Barred from membership in the CIO Executive Board anyone who is a "member of the Communist Party, any Fascist organization, or other totalitarian movement, or who consistently pursues policies and activities directed toward the achievement of the program or the purposes of "those organizations."

3. Expelled from membership in the CIO the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America, charging that organization with following the Communist Party line in detriment to members.

The leadership of the old UE didn't choose to stand up and fight at the convention. On the contrary, a few of the delegates —but not its top officers—sat only through the first day's sessions. On the second day, the old UE announced it had decided to withhold per capita from CIO.

4. Issued a charter to a new union, the International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, CIO, which will be directed temporarily by an Administrative Committee chaired by CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, President of UE before it became Communist-dominated, and which committee includes Fred Kelley, Michael Fitzpatrick and John Dillon, who ran against the left wingers at the recent UE convention.

The new IUE-CIO will have offices on the 10th floor of the Walker Bldg., 734 15th St., NW, Washington 5, D. C. Phone: Executive 6096.

This writer will be publicity Director for the IUE-CIO. He takes this occasion to thank all who have cooperated with him in his work for the CIO News and urges them to continue to cooperate with Publicity Dir. Pete Swim and the other staff members. When my leave is over, I'll be back with CIO News.

VICE PRES. ALLAN S. HAYWOOD in charge of organizing congratulates Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey on the granting of a charter to the International Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers which was given jurisdiction over the field formerly held by the expelled UE. Carey is chairman of the administrative board of the new union.

5. Expelled the United Farm Equipment and Metal Workers of America which several times refused to obey a CIO order to merge with the CIO United Automobile, Aircraft and Agricultural Implement Workers and which instead voted to merge with the old UE.

6. Set up, through board action, trial boards to try nine individuals and 10 unions on charges of having consistently followed the Communist Party line.

The charges were brought against the following unions and board members:

Longshoremen and Pres. Harry Bridges.

Marine Cooks and Pres. Hugh Bryson.

Food & Tobacco and Pres. Donald Henderson.

Furniture and Pres. Morris Pizer.

American Communications Association and Pres. Joseph Selly.

Fishermen and Pres. J. F. Jurich.

Public and Pres. Abram Flaxer.

Mine-Mill and Pres. John Clark.

Office and Pres. James Durkin.

Fur and Leather Workers.

In the last case, Pres. Ben Gold was not charged because Pres. Murray ruled Gold, an admitted member of the Communist Party, was not eligible to sit on the board.

Now, back to the convention—

7. The above was done by a new constitutional rule, adopted overwhelmingly by the convention, which allows the board, by a two-thirds vote, to remove any officer or board member and expel any affiliate for Communist activity.

8. Adopted a new per capita rule. The old 5-cent tax and the extra 3 cents approved last year were merged as the basic tax. A non-recurring 2-cent levy was added which shall be earmarked and applied "to advance the interests of the CIO and its members." This makes a total per capita of 10c.

9. Admitted into CIO membership the 150,000-member Puerto Rico General Workers Confederation (CGT).

10. Adopted a series of broad resolutions covering all phases of domestic and international CIO activity.

High up in the galleries sat a pretty, dark-eyed girl. She wept unashamedly, in joy.

And, she had plenty of reason for being happy. Her husband had been an active anti-Communist in the old UE. The company for which he worked and the old UE conspired to have him fired. For almost a year he was unable to get work. Things were tough until Carey was able to secure him a job of Organizational Dir. on Allan S. Haywood's staff.

Now, the long dream had come true. A real American union had been set up in the electrical industry.

No wonder she cried in joy.

A CALL FOR an organizational convention of the new IUE-CIO has been issued by Pres. Murray, Haywood and Carey. The convention will open Nov. 28 at the Broadwood Hotel, Philadelphia.

Already, locals representing thousands of workers have notified the administrative committee that they are remaining in CIO and will attend the convention. Carey and the other committee members have warned workers in the electrical industry that the old UE will make further use of attempts to win restraining orders, injunctions and other legal devices to thwart the will of the workers.

The committee also warned that slander and libel will be resorted to by the outcast "union."

Haywood told the convention that every man and woman on his staff is available to IUE-CIO in its drive for true American trade unionism. Later, he called his staff together and repeated the pledge after an address by Carey.

THE OVERWHELMING MAJORITY of delegates rose to their feet, cheering and applauding when CIO Pres. Philip Murray pledged in his keynote speech that he would rid the organization of a "small group of unions" responsible for "harassment, opposition and obstruction of the CIO program." UE delegates remained seated.

THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE of the newly-chartered International Union of Machine, Radio & Electrical Workers took the place of the expelled UE delegates. CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey who heads the committee is at the extreme left in this picture. Next him is Fred Kelley Allan S. Haywood, CIO director of organization, is in center seated on another man's lap. IUE headquarters is in Washington, D. C.

UE Expulsion

The resolution expelling UE stated:

"NOW THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED:

"1. This convention finds that the Certificate of Affiliation heretofore granted to the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America has fallen into the control of a group devoted primarily to the principles of the Communist Party and opposed to the constitution and democratic objectives of the CIO, and in particular to the following declaration in the Preamble of the Constitution of the CIO:

> 'In the achievement of this task we turn to the people because we have faith in them; and we oppose all those who would violate this American emphasis of respect for human dignity, all those who would use power to exploit the people in the interest of alien loyalties.'; and, in conformance with the provisions of Article III, Section 6 of our Constitution, this convention hereby expels the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America from the Congress of Industrial Organizations and withdraws the said Certificate of Affiliation.

"2. This Convention recognizes that the overwhelming majority of the membership of the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America are not members of the Communist Party, and further, recognizes the desire of the working men and women in the electrical and allied industries for a free and autonomous union affiliated with the CIO and devoted to the constitutional principles and policies of the CIO.

"3. This Convention hereby authorizes and directs the Executive Board immediately to issue a Certificate of Affiliation to a suitable organization covering electrical and allied workers which will genuinely represent the desires and interests of the men and women in those industries.

"4 This convention calls upon the working men and women in the electrical and allied industries to join in the building of a strong, autonomous union affiliated with the CIO that will fight on a sound trade union basis for the interests of its members as workers and American citizens and which will join wholeheartedly with the CIO in its struggle to obtain the benefits of collective bargaining, including higher wages and better working conditions, to safeguard the economic security and promote the social welfare of the workers of America, and to protect and extend our democratic institutions and civil rights and liberties.

"F This convention calls upon all the affiliates of the CIO to support with all their strength the determination of the electrical workers to free themselves from Communist domination and to create a strong, aggressive and democratic union affiliated with the CIO.

"With the full support of the CIO, the organized workers in the electrical and allied industries will win their campaign for freedom from the degradation of automatic obedience to a foreign dictatorship.

"A victory here for democratic unionism will strengthen the constant drive of all American labor against economic monopoly and against all those forces which would deny to American working men and women the economic security and the democratic liberties which belong to all Americans.

"We salute the rank and file members of the UERMWA as the way is opened for them to walk out of the shadows of Communist conspiracy, double-talk, division, and betrayal, into the sunlight of democracy to be enjoyed in the CIO and cherished and made equally available to all men and women who prize freedom, honesty and loyalty to their ideals and their union brothers and sisters.

"In this cause and with this faith, we of the family of CIO shall defeat our open and our secret enemies; we shall grow stronger in numbers and in moral stature. Thereby the mission of the CIO, as stated at its founding, shall be realized in happy men and women, secure in their jobs, in their homes and in their trust in one another."

Amnesty Is Asked For War Objectors

The convention asked that prosecution of men soley on account of their conscientious objection to war cease. Delegates also urged the immediate release of those conscientious objectors now in prison.

Amnesty also was urged for all conscientious objectors previously convicted for violation of the 1940 and 1948 selective service acts.

Board Instructed

The convention by resolution instructed the CIO Executive Board as follows:

"WHEREAS: This Convention has amended the Constitution to empower the Executive Board to take appropriate action to maintain the integrity of the CIO and to protect it against those who seek to pervert it from its constituional objectives and purposes.

"NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED: THAT

"This Convention hereby instructs the Executive Board immediately to exercise its powers under Article VI, Section 10 of the Constitution and to take appropriate action to protect the CIO and to prevent the use of the good name of the CIO by those who insistently direct their policies and activities toward the achievement of the program or the purposes of the Communist Party, any fascist organization or other totalitarian movement."

245 Newsmen At Convention

Handling the press in connection with a big convention is a big job in itself and the CIO convention was no exception.

It took much equipment for the 245 reporters, radio and newsreel men attending. The publicity department made available 25 telephones and 75 typewriters for the use of reporters; Western Union installed five teletypewriter machines and seven Morse telegraph circuits.

Two mimeograph machines were kept busy. And it worked. For example Pres. Murray delivered a 45-minute speech and within 23 minutes after he had finished speaking, the publicity department delivered the last page of a 3,000-word digest of his talk.

PAC Gets Set For Battle In 1950

THE CONVENTION passed this resolution on political action:

"Economic democracy and political democracy live or die together. The weakening or destruction of political democracy, whether by totalitarian conspiracy and aggression, or through the indifference of its citizens, is always followed by the weakening of economic democracy and collective bargaining.

"Since 1943 the CIO Political Action Committee has been in the forefront of the battle to elect to public office men and women who represent their constituents faithfully and ably and who fight for the welfare of all the people of the United States. It has worked untiringly to keep before the people of the country the issues facing the nation and the records of their public servants on those issues. It has stressed without partisanhip the urgency of registration and voting as a duty of citizenship and it has labored to make clear the vital role of elections for city, state and national office in our democracy.

"Today, due largely to the pioneer work of the CIO-PAC, more men and women than ever before are interested and active in the political processes of the country. Issues are taking the place of personalities. The political double talker is passing from the scene. Political parties have come to realize that they must take a stand upon the issues of the day and that they will be held to strict accountability for their platform pledges.

"Faced with a substantial increase of genuine liberals in both Houses of the 81st Congress, the illicit Dixie-gop liaison of Southern Democrats and reactionary Republicans had to come out in the open. In the Senate filibuster vote last March, reinforcing the veto power of the filibuster over civil rights, a majority in the Republican Party formalized the ten-year Dixi-gop liaison in a shameful political marriage of convenience with a minority of the Democratic Party.

"This identification of the Dixie-gop coalition and its members is progress. It clarifies issues. It stimulates political education, organization and action. It is another step forward in the fundamental political realignment that is under way.

"MUCH REMAINS to be done to perfect the political processes of our country. Many barriers to the hard-won right of the people to control their own destiny through the ballot box have been erected by the agents of the vested interests who fear the will of the people.

"These barriers must be torn down.

"The basic political task before us is to develop a strong working consolidation of farm, labor and all liberal forces in a genuine, progressive, democratic political action program which rejects the totalitarianism of Communism on the left hand and the reckless anti-social policies of Wall Street monopoly interests on the right. The political power of people must prevail over the political power of entrenched privilege and monopoly. We must plan our course toward that goal.

"The first step is to bring farm, labor and all liberal forces together in an alliance for political action that is independent of any party but gives support to those parties and candidates which are pledged to an aggressive, liberal, democratic purpose and program.

"WE MUST FACE UP to the political realities of our time by recognizing that the forces of privilege are presently and powerfully represented in Congress and in state legislatures by an open actively working coalition of reactionary elements in both political parties. This we must overcome by supporting and electing true fighting liberals, regardless of party, and by demanding that they, like the reactionaries, act openly and aggressively together to translate into legislation the progressive measures to which they are pledged.

"WE CALL UPON ALL members of CIO in all parts of the country to work and fight, through their political action committees, for legislation that will:

"1. Revise our registration laws to eliminate cumbersome requirements designed to prevent the expression of the popular will and provide only such regulation as is necessary to prevent fraud.

"2. Pay state legislators and state officials enough so that able men and women and young men and women, anxious to make their contribution to the political life of their community, may be attracted to the service of the people.

"3. Provide for direct and open primaries in which all the people can choose the candidates for public office and in which all persons desiring to become canddiates can file without undue restrictions.

"4. Remove from our political life the disgraceful practice of juggling election districts—both state and national—whereby voters in one community exercise more influence than voters in another and where representatives of a few hundred thousand people can outvote millions.

"It is our further belief that the American democratic process, now undergoing its trial by moral strength with totalitarianism ideologies that degrade and destroy human values, must be further strengthened by legislative action to:

"1. Eliminate the outmoded electoral college and provide for direct election of President and Vice President so that there will be no danger that a minority candidate can gain office by a technicality.

"2. Abolish the senority system in Congress by which wisdom is stifled and age takes precedence over ability.

"3. Abolish the Senate filibuster.

"The mercenaries of monopoly must be driven from our temples of government. The power of finance to select the officials who rule the people must be broken. The unholy coalition of reactionaries from the Republican party and the Democratic party which has sought to throttle the will of the people must be defeated. The sinister forces in our political life who seek power by use of appeals to racial prejudice and ignorance must be unmasked.

"To this battle we pledge ourselves. To those of a like mind we issue a cordial invitation to take their places in the war against poverty, in the battle for security, in the dedication of our hearts and minds to the war for a free and happy America.

"Now, therefore, be it resolved:

"1. The Congress of Industrial Organizations calls upon each member of the CIO, together with his family, to register and to vote on election day.

"2. We call upon each member of the CIO to contribute without stint his and her energies to the furtherance of political action work in the block, ward and precinct.

"3. Each national and international union, state and city council and directly affiliated organization is hereby directed to make the utmost use of its energies and resources in building our political action committees and should undertake immediately the systematic check of their respective membership lists to insure that each member and his adult family is registered.

"The collection of voluntary contributions for PAC should be continued on a regular yearly basis within each affiliate of the CIO. This convention authorizes the launching of the 1950 campaign for voluntary contributions at such a time as will permit their full use in the 1950 political campaign.

"The CIO Political Action Committee, as now constituted, shall continue to direct the work of political action and political education of the CIO and service, advise and coordinate the work of political action committees of the state and city bodies.

CHEER MURRAY'S RE-ELECTION

Soil For PAC

Comment by Organization Director Allan S. Haywood on the relation of organizing to political action:

"Considering the whole aspect of our situation, we are bitterly aware that the attacks upon organized labor have continued this year. Out victory in the 1948 elections failed to bring about repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law. We must look to intensified organizing activities and multiplied successes to complete the victory.

"Organizing the unorganized is our most essential task. To defeat the enemies of labor and place in office those whose broad policies will aid the extension of true equality of opportunity and industrial democracy to all citizens, we must first create the political soil of a vast army of workers organized into our unions."

More Political Action Can Repeal T-H, Tobin Says

By WILBUR E. BADE

CITING the failure of Congress to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act, Labor Secy. Maurice J. Tobin warned that "organized labor will have to be more active than ever on the political front."

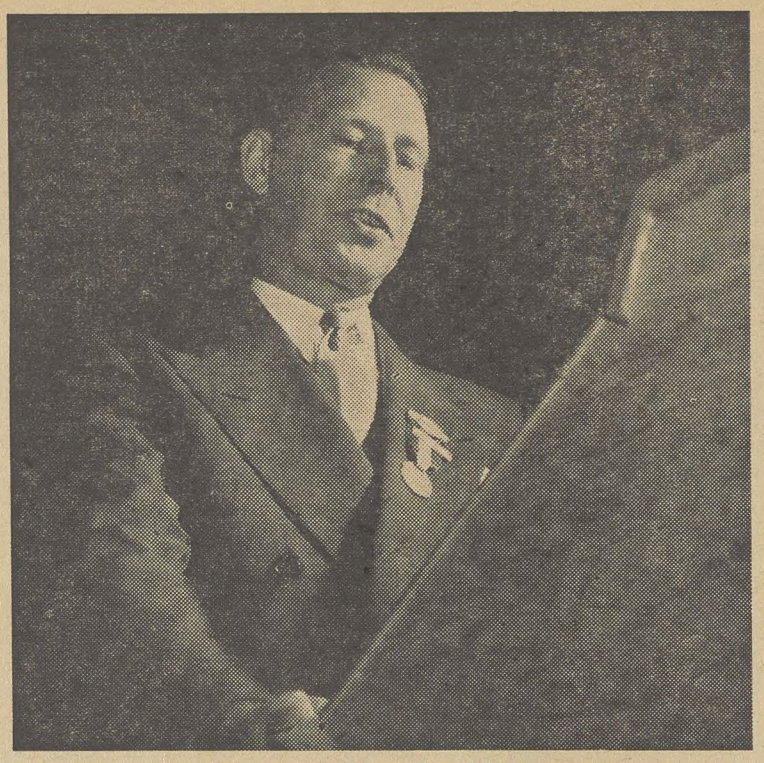
Tobin, in an address to 11th CIO constitutional convention, stressed the need for a firm mandate to congress. Urging labor to get away from factionalism on state and local levels for political co-operation, the labor secretary asserted:

"Labor united must see to it that the promise to repeal Taft-Hartley which the American people approved in November 1948 will be regarded as a binding commitment by a majority of both houses of congress."

At the same time Tobin noted that congress did go forward making good some other extremely vital proposals of the Democratic platform.

The amendments to the fair labor standards act, providing a 75c minimum wage, are a triumph, he told delegates, congratulating CIO leaders who fought for higher standards.

"The 75c minimum wage amendment is a godsend for the 'little people' among our wage earners," Tobin declared. "It is a bulwark for unions affected by the cut-throat competition which comes from plants with low wages. It protects and benefits honest and enlightened management."



Secy. of Labor Maurice Tobin Speaks

THE 75c minimum wage will increase buying power, particularly in the South, Tobin stressed, and thereby will boost the general economy. It also will benefit farmers and merchants, he pointed out.

"It will establish for many workers some sort of relationship between earning power and living costs," Tobin told the convention. "It will not only serve to raise sub-standard wage levels, but also will provide a fresh foundation on which organized workers can build their security."

Tobin stated that President Truman, while saying the amendments to the law were a marked social advance, was justified in pointing out that coverage of the law is not satisfactory.

CONGRESS exempted some workers who were covered under the old law, and "a great body of poorly paid workers who belong under the umbrella of the fair labor standards act have been left out in the cold."

Tobin was applauded when he added: "I intend to press with all the force at my command for a correction of this unfortunate situation."

A discussion of fair labor standards naturally leads to a consideration of the employment problem, Tobin pointed out.

He thanked the CIO and its officers for their efforts to strengthen the Dept. of Labor by working for the transfer to the department of the Bureau of Employment Security, now accomplished under the president's reorganization plan No. 2, approved by congress.

"We are now infinitely better able to achieve for wage earners what the Department of Labor was set up to do for the workers of America and the well-being of the general community," Tobin said.

His greatest concern today, Tobin declared, was to attain and maintain full employment in the United States.

IN THE FALL of 1948, Tobin said, we came as close to reaching this goal of full employment as we have ever come in peacetime, with less than 2 million jobless, or only three out of every 100 who were unemployed.

Tobin contrasted this with the 25 out of every 100 who were jobless when President Roosevelt took office. The nation has gone far toward achieving the aim of full employment, he pointed out.

While the downward movement in the economy that set in last fall was reversed last August, Tobin said there is still much to be done before we will have licked unemployment.

He lauded the Michigan plan of Gov. G. Mennen Williams to help distressed areas to help themselves, having recommended this procedure to other states.

Under the Michigan plan thousands of jobs have been saved by persuading citizens of hard-hit communities to tackle the unemployment problem on their own level.

The key to success, he added, is the degree of co-operation which can be brought into action.

"If everybody concerned first at the federal level, and second at the state and local levels will really get out and work together, the industrial cities of the country which have felt the blight of unemployment are certain to regain their prosperity," Tobin stated.

"American trade unions are their own masters, but only as long as they speak for their members and so long as their members put ahead of all else their support of American institutions," he concluded.

Greater Voice Is Asked For Labor In Plant Safety

ASSERTING THAT industrial hazards which kill 16,000 workers every year and injure 2,000,000 more are the joint responsibility of all those involved in industry, the convention demanded elimination of jurisdictional disputes in the field of industrial safety and for a broad program to make the work places of America safe and healthful.

The resolution renewed CIO's insistence that labor be brought into full joint participation at the plant level in safety and occupational health projects. Also urged were authority for the Labor Department to formulate standards of safety and health, legislation to enable the Labor Department in cooperation with State labor departments to promulgate and enforce national health and safety codes, legislation to provide Federal assistance to State agencies administering labor laws and facilities for the Bureau of Labor Statistics to compile records on accidents and disease in industry.

The convention applauded the calling of the President's Conference on Industrial Safety for June, 1950, and noted with satisfaction the participation of 75 CIO delegates in the 1949 conference. Affiliates were urged to send qualified delegates to the 1950 meeting.

"Thank goodness, the employes are still striking, Botts—our golf's improving!'

CIO Will Bring Benefits To Many More Thousands

TO THE CIO the Democratic victory of 1948 represented confirmation of its belief that the people wanted both Taft-Hartley and state anti-labor laws stricken from the books. As a result, stated the resolution on organizing the unorganized, the CIO "drew new inspiration from the election results and intensified its organizing drive."

Particular emphasis was given the organizing activities in the South, "where thousands of unorganized workers are still living under substandard wage and working conditions and are denied the strength and security of union contracts."

Under the leadership first of Van A. Bittner, then, following Bittner's recent death, of George Baldanzi, the CIO Organizing Committee brought the benefits of unionization to thousands of workers.

"It is a tribute to their leadership that the organizing activity of the CIO in the South and in the North has made substantial progress despite determined opposition of unscrupulous employers who have resorted to methods of terror and repression," asserts the resolution.

To CIO Organizational Dir. Allan S. Haywood—whose work in establishing "a new, strong and unified international union of telephone workers within CIO" received special commendation—and to Baldanzi and his staff, delegates expressed gratitude and approval.

And the CIO pledged to continue its efforts to improve the economic lot of the unorganized by bringing them the benefits of a union.

"Organization of the unorganized is a sure guarantee that the principles of trade unionism will be achieved," the resolution said.

Voluntary Health Plans 'Are Not Geared To Needs'

HEALTH IS a national problem of vital concern to the welfare of all citizens and to the strength of the nation, the CIO convention declared in a resolution calling upon Congress to pass legislation setting up a coordinated and integrated national health and insurance program.

The CIO resolution called attention to the distorted story which the American Medical Association has been spreading throughout America in its campaign against national health insurance.

The AMA, it said, "has refused to face the fact that the majority of the people do not have access to the best medical care and that where it is available they cannot pay for it out of current earnings."

Voluntary plans, once opposed but now advocated by the AMA "are not geared to the needs of workers," the resolution stated. They fail to provide comprehensive benefits, have not been made universally available, and cost too much, according to the resolution.

"We believe that all Americans acting together through the instrument of their government have a right to decide how the costs of medical care shall be met," the CIO said. "We believe that a nation that can meet the exigency of war and defense can meet its national health problem through the democratic process."

The program adopted by the convention outlined the main points of the National Health Bill and deplored the failure of Congress to adopt it. It urged the full use of the CIO's facilities "to further a program of public understanding of the real issues in the fight for an adequate and comprehensive national health program . . . so that all may know that the AMA in rejecting democratic methods for resolving the public policy questions on health insurance does not speak for the workers in the factories and on the farms."

Safe Airlines Asked

Finding that "over-ocean airlines . . . have embarked on a penny-saving campaign at the expense of passenger and crew safety," the convention passed a resolution condemning "companies operating over-ocean flights without Radio Officers and 500-kilocycle equipment, and governmental administrators and agencies who aid and abet these subsidized airlines in their efforts to increase their profits at the expense of safety."

LPA Is Indorsed By CIO Convention

The convention, declaring that only a news service free of ideological slant is suitable for use by newspapers which reflect American trade union policies," went on record as:

"Supporting Labor Press Association, which was created recently by representatives of a large segment of the labor movement to serve the entire labor press.

"Be it resolved that the convention urge CIO affiliates to lend their support to LPA and to subscribe to LPA services for their newspapers wherever possible."

Acheson Says Point Four Next Blow For Freedom

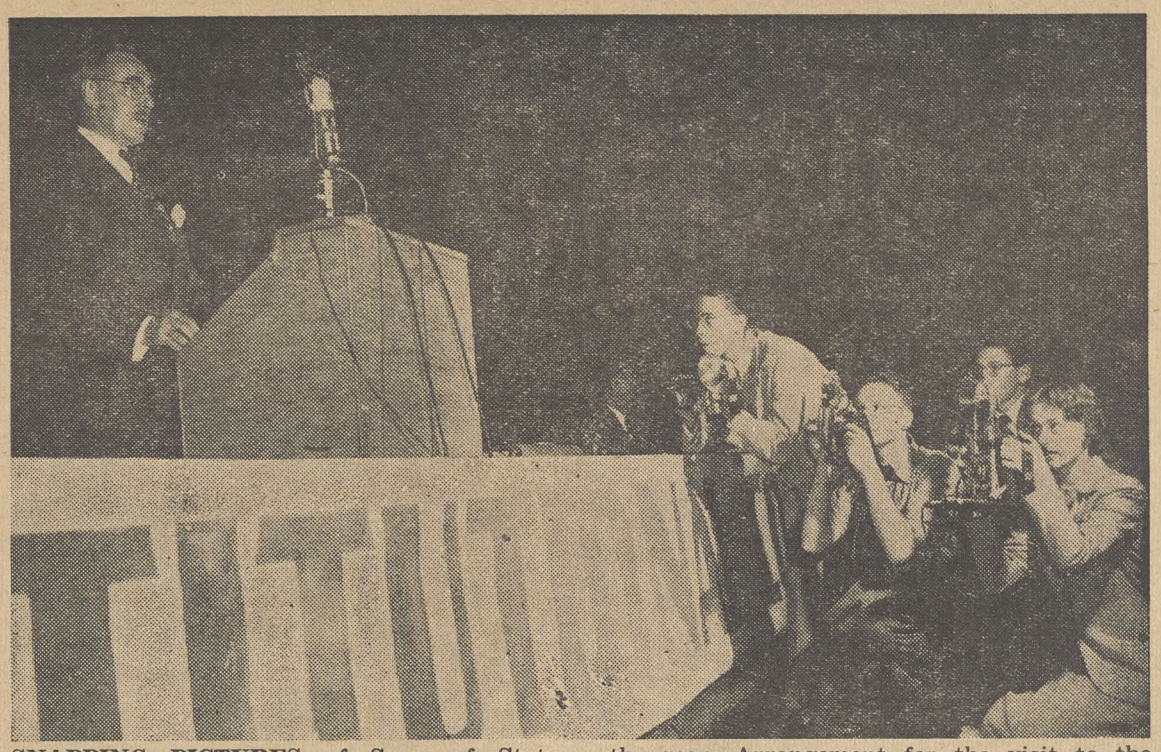
By HOLLACE RANSDELL

FULLY appreciative of the dependency of democracy throughout the world on the support of organized labor in the United States, Secy. of State Dean Acheson told the CIO convention in straightforward language that President Truman's Point Four is the next step toward the creation of more free nations.

Applause received by Acheson showed that the delegates approved Point Four.

Acheson said "you have not always agreed with those in the Government who have had the responsibility of forming our foreign policies. On occasion your criticism has been sharp. But the very fact that you sometimes have been critical is most important.

"This criticism is proof of the complete freedom of the American trade union movement. It means that when you do give your support, as you have to the major undertakings of our foreign affairs, the influence of your support is all the more powerful abroad.



SNAPPING PICTURES of Secy. of State Acheson for their college papers are (l. to r.): Robert Belcaster, Ohio Wesleyan Univ.; Dan Baer, Antioch College, and Marlowe Anderson, Oberlin, with Michael Berla, Oberlin College, in the rear. Arrangement for the visit to the convention was made by the Students for Democratic Action, of which Miss Anderson is the regional secretary-treasurer. She covered the event for the SDA publication.

"THE FIRST few years of the Point Four program will see a great expansion of technical assistance. The results achieved by this means alone should encourage American investors in time to venture their capital abroad.

"There is no direct profit in freeing a country of malaria, or in improving the health of masses of people, in teaching millions of people to read and write, or in gradually increasing the production of food crops that are consumed by the people themselves.

"Private investors cannot be expected to undertake such projects; they have to be carried out by governments as public services. But these things help create the conditions which make private investors willing to risk their money abroad. Similarly, public loans and investments for roads and harbors, hydro-electric power, communication systems, and the reclamation of land should open new areas to development by private capital."

The Secretary of State began his speech to the convention by praising "the contributions that American labor has made to our foreign policy."

"You have supplied able personnel from your ranks to assist Government—men like Clint Golden and Harry Martin. All of these contributions have been vital to the promotion of our interests."

(Clinton Golden, former Steelworkers' vice president, is an ECA labor adviser, and Martin, president of the CIO Newspaper Guild, is labor adviser to Roving Ambassador Harriman.)

Acheson then launched into a general statement of the high ideals inherent in America's desire to help hard-pressed peoples of other lands. He said that the "common denominator that brings American labor and Government into agreement on most international issues, is to be found in our mutual concern with the effect that our international policy has on the daily lives of people.

"We all want the people of other countries, as well as our own, to have the widest possible opportunities for political, economic and social development along the lines which they themselves desire. We all believe that to the extent that this aim is realized all over the world, the people of our own country will be able to achieve the greatest measure of security and well-being."

ONE SET OF problems which arise in working toward this goal, Acheson said, "derives from the attempt of the Soviet Union to extend its control over the people of other countries, and where it cannot control, to interfere with the lives of others. Much of the strength and energy of those who want to remain free has been devoted in the past few years to resisting the threat of Soviet imperialism."

It was about another of the two main sources of problems, the Secretary said, that he wanted to talk. "We are living in one of the great transition periods of history," he said. "A large part of the world is in ferment. And this ferment is of great importance to everyone, because it is taking place in the most dynamic source of power that we know—the human mind.

"Hundreds of millions of people, inhabiting large areas with great natural resources, refuse any longer to accept the notion that hunger and poverty are their natural lot. They are aware that other people live more abundantly. They are impatient to close the gap between their status as 'have-nots' and the status of the 'haves'.

"In many cases the desire for better living conditions coincides with striving for self-government. These people are no longer satisfied with promises of a better life; they want it here and now."

"In the President's Point Four concept," he declared, "there is something of profound significance for all these people who desire a better life. The basic idea is so simple some people can't believe it; they try to read into it a lot of things that just aren't there.

"To suppose that people are to be supplied with gadgets to make them happy, or that steel mills will spring up in the wilderness, or that billions of dollars will be handed out, is sheer nonsense."

The real underlying principle of the Point Four program, Acheson said, "is the use of material means for a non-material end. What we are really concerned with is what happens to people as individuals."

HE ACCUSED the Russians of promising "hungry, distressed people food and material comforts, if only they will accept slavery to the state in return."

The alternative offered these people under the President's program, Acheson said, "is a way to improve their material welfare and at the same time live as free men, retain their personal dignity and independence, and develop to the full extent of their individual capacities."

The Secretary listed some of the practical problems of underdeveloped countries which the U. S. can help them solve:

- More than 1½ billion people—two out of every three persons on earth—live in areas where great resources lie unused. Two-thirds of the world's people receive only one-fifth of the world's income. The U. S. with 150 million inhabitants receives one-fourth of the world's income.
- At least three-quarters of the people of the underdeveloped countries are engaged in agriculture, yet they are underfed. "The 'haves' eat half again as much as the 'have-nots'."

ACHESON THEN described how the advanced technology of the U. S. could enable the people of underdeveloped areas to "take a short cut to progress that will enable them to by-pass centuries of laborious effort." They can learn how to build and organize schools; construct roads; fight disease; produce more food.

"In the age-old struggle of man with nature for the daily bread," Acheson said, "there are many places where the battle has been going against him, or where he maintains his life so precariously or so meanly, that he has no time or energy to develop the things of the mind and the spirit."

It is the purpose of the Point Four program, he concluded, "to aid these people in winning that struggle and winning the time and energy for the things of the mind and spirit . . . It is to gain them in such a way that their possessors may be free men and not slaves of the State—to gain them so that the victory over nature sets minds and spirits free."

Visiting Students To Tell SDA Chapters of CIO Convention

ON THE CAMPUSES of three Ohio colleges they will be discussing the CIO convention.

That is if the score of students who came to the convention from Oberlin College, Antioch and Ohio Wesleyan Univ., near Columbus, have anything to do with it.

Their leaders not only brought their eyes, but copy paper, and three of them brought cameras to record the events for their college papers and the publication of the Students for Democratic Action.

Most of the students were SDA members, and they will take their reports back to meetings of their chapters.

THE LEADERS were favorably impressed by the first day's proceedings.

Dan Baer, a pre-medical student at Antioch College, who was one of those using a camera to cover the meeting for his college paper, The Antioch Record, said he "didn't expect the convention to be so orderly." He said that it was more orderly than other union conventions he had attended.

Baer expected more noise and demonstrations, he said, such as occurred when the delegates arose after Murray castigated the Communists while the members of the Electrical Workers delegation remained seated.

Baer, who took time off from classes and preparations for examinations to attend the convention, hopes to work for the U. S. Public Health Service.

Robert Belcaster of Ohio Wesleyan liked the "smoothness" of the operation of the convention. Armed with a camera and a pen, Belcaster was covering the parley for his university's paper.

Michael Berla, Oberlin sophomore, was not only an SDA observer but was taking pictures for his college paper and annual publication. He started to explain how the trip was arranged when a couple of the students said, "Let Anderson tell about that. That's her job."

IT TURNED OUT that "Anderson" was Marlowe Anderson, a very attractive blonde who is the regional SDA secretary-treasurer and was in charge of the arrangements. She was impressed by an exhibition on national health insurance and said that she was going to try to arrange for a showing of a CIO film at Oberlin.

"We were treated very courteously by CIO Publicity Director Swim," Marlowe concluded.

Deborah Webster of Oberlin College was interested in the section of Murray's speech telling of the intention of the CIO to participate in the founding of a new world labor organization to replace the World Federation of Trade Unions.

Don Austin, Oberlin junior, who is taking a seminar on labor, saw a parallel between the CIO convention and 1936 AFL conclave at Atlantic City, when the CIO unions were expelled because they defied the AFL policy of organizing by crafts.

Austin realized, however, that the ouster moves against some of the left-wing unions at the CIO convention were prompted by a conflict of ideologies.

MARY HEATON VORSE, veteran reporter who has covered some of the most outstanding events in American labor history exchanges reminiscences with Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization who helped make labor history.

Per Capita Increased To 10 Cents

ONE OF THE issues that the dwindling CIO opposition at the convention raised their voices against — somewhat feebly—was the increase in the per capita tax from five to eight cents per member, with a special per capita tax of two cents for a one-year period. The constitutional amendment was adopted by an overwhelming vote—only a few weak "No's" were heard.

The special tax is to be "earmarked and applied to advance the interests of the CIO and its membership." The communist-dominated group took this to mean (quite correctly) that it would be used to fight them, and opposed it bitterly.

The overall increase in per capita since the 1948 convention will actually be only two cents—from eight to ten cents. The 1948 constitution provided for a five cent per capita tax, with a special one-year tax of three cents, or a total of eight cents.

Under the new constitutional provisions adopted at this convention, the regular per capita is increased from five to eight cents, and the special per capita tax is two cents, a total of ten cents.

Delegate John Tisa of the Food and Tobacco Workers said his union was vigorously opposed to the increase unless an anti-raiding resolution was also passed.

A WITHERING reply to Tisa's charge came from Pres. Philip Murray.

It "ill becomes" a representative of the FTA, Murray said scornfully, "to make a case against the National CIO increasing its per capita tax when that national organization has lived by virtue of loans and subsidies, salaries, expenses and so forth . . .

. . . That organization should be the last in this convention to contend that the National CIO has not cooperated with them."

Praise Move Against ABC

PROCEEDINGS to revoke the Illinois charter of the American Bowling Congress were commended by the CIO's recent convention because of the ABC's policy of discrimination.

The American Bowling Congress' restriction of membership in its affiliated associations to "individuals of the white male sex" practically excludes Negroes from this sport.

The adopted resolution urged "all CIO Councils and International Unions to discourage participation by their members in ABC leagues and tournaments, and to support bowling establishments and leagues and tournaments where all people may bowl without discrimination."

Proceedings to revoke the Illinois charter which have now been instituted by John S. Boyle, State's Attorney, had been urged upon the State of Illinois and Cook County by President Murray, Secretary-Treasurer James B. Carey, Illinois IUC President Joseph Germano, Regional Director of the United Auto Workers Pat Greathouse, and CIO Regional Director Michael Mann.

Cleveland Area Steelworkers Cheer Philip Murray

District 28 Steelworkers Cheer Murray As He Promises Victory

A WEARY but happy Philip Murray was given a boisterous reception by District 28 members of the Steelworkers at the Cleveland CIO headquarters as he told them of the Bethlehem Steel settlement and pledged a union victory in the strike against the other companies.

Muray came to the meeting direct from a press conference where he had announced the settlement. Just prior to the conference he and Joseph Larkin, Bethlehem vice president, had signed the contract—the culmination of a series of meetings with the Bethlehem officials which Murray had sandwiched between presiding at the CIO convention and other duties.

The featured speaker at the meeting, he was an hour late, but his tardiness did not dampen the enthusiasm of the thonsand or so workers who jammed the hall to see and cheer him.

Murray's promise of victory was welcome to the members of District 28, who are employed by the American Steel Wire, Republic, Jones & Laughlin, Valley Mould & Iron, and National Tube, a U. S. Steel sibsidiary, at all of which plants the strike continues.

WHEN MURRAY entered the hall, the strikers rose as a man, applauding and cheering. The ovation continued until he reached the platform, where he was introduced to the audience by District 28 Director William Donovan.

Murray's speech was literally punctuated by applause.

"I have been negotiating a contract tonight," Murray said. "About a half-hour ago I affixed my signature to an agreement (here his speech was first interrupted by applause) embracing 90,000 Steelworkers."

He reviewed the attitude of the steel companies that precipitated the strike, telling of the contemptuous attitude that they showed to the President's Fact-Finding Board.

Murray got a laugh when he said: "You know, Mr. White?" after telling how Pres. E. M. White of Republic Steel had told the Board which was trying to pave the way for a settlement—that strikes "are a helluva good way to work it."

"The steel industry is badly managed," Murray continued. "Its stockholders are badly represented. Here in this city and elsewhere the bankers control the strings, but we're going to win this strike." (More cheers and applause.)

"In the eyes of God Almighty, the Steelworkers are justified in fighting for this cause. I believe it to be a noble cause. The young people are going to fight for the older people because the young people of today are the old people of tomorrow."

ALL EYES WERE riveted on Murray as he told of the settlement, details of which are given elsewhere in this paper.

Then he told of the hectic manner in which the Bethlehem contract was negotiated, during a trip to New York City to address a political rally, during the CIO convention.

"But during all this you give me strength. Without you I would not be strong," Murray continued. "You give me strength to espouse your cause. I am conscious of the sacrifice that you are required to undergo.

"You have in you the belief that anything that is worthwhile having is worthwhile fighting for. Your organization has the priceless heritage of devotion to the principles to which your government adheres.

"THEY ARE NOT all Communists who would destroy our democratic way of life. Some of the enemies of democracy are in the banking houses and sitting in the directors' chairs in the steel companies.

"I have no more use for atheistic capitalism than I have for atheistic Communism. Both lead to the enslavement of the people.

"Tonight we broke their line—from here we move on with a firmness of conviction that victory will attend our efforts. As far as God gives me strength, I pledge you eventual victory with your support."

Here there was applause and cheers and the orchestra struck up "The Bear Came Over the Mountain."

MAYOR THOMAS BURKE, who welcomed the convention to Cleveland, is no doubt extolling the virtues of the Ohio city to Philip Murray and James B. Carey, president and secretary-treasurer, respectively, of the CIO, as they sit together on the speakers' platform.

CIO Vows Fight For Betterment

THE CIO will continue its pursuit of higher real wages, security benefits, a shortened work week, a guaranteed annual wage and improved working conditions for its members.

Two resolutions — one dealing with wages and security, the other with security and other collective bargaining objectives — cited the necessity for constant improvements along these lines as part of a full employment program designed to prevent serious recessions and depressions.

The first resolution noted that "a disproportionately larger share of our national income has been and is going to corporations and business and professional people and a lesser share to wage and salary earners."

To stimulate demand, production and employment, this disparity must be corrected by continual improvement of workers' living standards — without increased prices.

"Wage increases and improved security benefits can and must be paid by corporations without increasing prices, that is, through reduction of exorbitant profit margins by corporations," the resolution insisted.

THE CIO Steelworkers were given credit for bringing to the fore the issue of pensions and insurance benefits for workers.

The steel union's contention that pensions and health and welfare benefits must be considered an integral part of operating costs, solely financed by the employer, was indorsed by the fact-finding board in the steel dispute.

Such non-contributory programs should be continually sought by unions in collective bargaining. This is necessitated, the resolution said, by the inadequacy of governmental benefits.

FE Revolt Against Its Leaders Preceded Ouster

By GLORIA CAPLAN

THE FARM Equipment Workers-CIO is no more. Having worked its membership down from a one-time high of 70,000 to a present-day 30,000, after using the name CIO to attack the parent organization's policies and officers and to further its own left-wing concepts, FE received the heave-ho out of CIO last week.

In its seven-year history as an international union in CIO, FE had spent four years in defying the parent organization's orders to merge with the CIO Auto Workers. Except for the war period, when "unity" was the password, FE had been in continual conflict with Natl. CIO policies.

At his union's 1949 convention, FE Pres. Grant Oakes had delivered a bitter attack on CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

"I say further to Phil Murray," he told conventioners, "it ill behooves him and other leaders to continually carp about free unions throughout the world and at the same time not only condone but actually assist in efforts to smash freedom in the organization of which he is president, the CIO."

CIO SECY.-TREAS. JAMES B. CAREY receives the charter of the new International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers from CIO Pres. Philip Murray. Carey is head of the administrative committee of the new union which will have jurisdiction over the industries formerly held by the expelled UE. The new union expects quick gains.

LAST WEEK the convention put an end to FE-CIO and to seven years of intra-CIO squabbling over jurisdiction in the farm implement field. To FE went the notification that its charter was revoked and it as a union was expelled from CIO. To the UAW went unchallenged jurisdiction in the farm tool field—and the blessings of CIO.

The resolution—passed without a single dissent from the floor—recounted the events directly leading to the expulsion. It recalled that on Nov. 27, 1948, acting on instructions of the 10th CIO Convention which had just adjourned, the CIO Executive Board ordered the FE "to take immediate steps to affiliate with" the UAW. If the merger was not completed after 60 days, the board warned, it would "act to implement this decision."

A special committee appointed by CIO Pres. Philip Murray to help bring about the merger met in Chicago in January. It was able to meet with the FE leaders long enough for the latter to tell the committee members, "Your committee carries absolutely no status with our organization"; then FE walked out.

The next official action recounted by the resolution occurred May 18 of this year, when the CIO Board voted to recommend revocation of the FE charter for three reasons:

1) By refusing to merge, FE had defied the Executive Board.

2) The union had "carried on a campaign of vilification, slander, misrepresentation, distortion, race-baiting and other anti-democratic activities in a consistent plan designed to defame and to injure the CIO."

3) FE had—by its refusal to unite the organized workers in the industry—"deprived the workers . . . of the opportunity of achieving maximum benefits and protection through collective bargaining."

BUT THE FULL story was too long to be crammed into a resolution.

There was a time, for instance, when FE leaders were head-over-heels in love with the merger idea.

Skipping over the war years which followed FE's chartering, the story begins in 1945. At that time a CIO Jurisdictional Committee recommended an FE-UAW merger.

Two years later — 1947 — UAW Pres. Walter Reuther was facing a crucial battle for control of his union. Saddled with a left-wing executive board, his first year as head of the union had been marked by continual conflict with the board. He found his every move blocked.

Wise to the growing support for Reuther within the union, the left-wingers hit on a plan to use the Jurisdictional Committee's recommendation to save their skins. Shortly before the 1947 UAW convention, they made a secret merger pact with the FE leadership. There were all sorts of catches in the deal.

FE WOULD have come into the UAW convention with full voting power — without having paid a cent in per capita. These votes, the lefties hoped, would be enough to swing the pendulum for them.

Once in UAW, FE would have retained its full autonomy; its president was to be free to name his own organizing staff—something no other UAW unit was permitted. This amounted to a union within a union.

In case the left wing failed to win out in the convention, FE would have been free to take its membership—intact—back out of the UAW.

Then followed a bitter campaign in both unions leading to a referendum. FE's leaders — along with the anti-Reuther crew in UAW—spoke lustily of the necessity for giving farm equipment workers the strength of a single union and the backing of a mighty UAW.

But the UAW membership — though it obviously wanted the farm equipment workers in its union—didn't want a union within their union. Nor did they want a new group coming in and immediately taking over the political reins of the union. So the UAW turned down the proposal, two-to-one.

Quitting WFTU OK'd

The withdrawal of CIO from the Communist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions was approved by the convention.

The withdrawal had been voted last May by the Executive Board.

Immediately after the November convention, which handed Reuther an overwhelming victory, Reuther wired FE's Grant Oakes an invitation to talk merger. But —there being no political future in it—Oakes wasn't interested.

With Reuther firmly in the UAW saddle, Oakes hasn't been interested ever since.

THE FOLLOWING year the battle took on added heat. In May, 1948, the AFL's UAW petitioned for an NLRB election in the giant Caterpillar plant at Peoria, Ill., then organized by FE.

At that time FE was still "fighting" Taft-Hartley by refusing to sign the non-communist affidavits. Unable, therefore, to participate in the election, FE began campaigning for a "no union" vote. To most observers it looked as if the big plant was on its way out of the CIO— until the UAW-CIO intervened, seeking a place on the ballot.

It was a UAW-CIO victory—and shortly thereafter the new Caterpillar union was signing an agreement providing a 13c hourly increase with fringe gains bringing the total to an estimated 21c an hour.

Came the deluge. UAW was besieged by pleas from workers in other FE plants who, under their left-wing leadership, had been unable to get anywhere in negotiations. UAW's membership in the industry surged upward, and UAW began carrying the ball in Int'l. Harvester negotiations.

FE, too, saw the handwriting on the wall, tried to erase it by renewing its Int'l. Harvester agreement with no improvements, but with a wage reopening clause. This would permit FE to stall off any NLRB elections for a while—and to take advantage of any nationwide pattern which might be set by the steel and auto unions.

Today the UAW has 100,000 farm implement workers; FE has 30,000.

A MONTH BEFORE the CIO convention was to meet in Cleveland, FE's executive board held a secret session in Chicago to make another flip-flop. Forgetting its loud proclamations of a few days before about preserving FE's "autonomy" and battling to the death for retention of a separate union for farm equipment workers, the Board voted to merge with the similar-striped United Electrical Workers.

But FE officers had overestimated the strength of their leadership and underestimated their rank-and-file's loyalty to CIO.

Rank-and-file rebellion was immediate, beginning with ten FE locals in upstate New York, after the district's FE director, Peter Aversa, let the cat out of the bag. The New York locals repudiated the FE leadership, voted unanimously to enter the UAW.

Then Aversa and three FE local presidents sought court protection against FE-UE attempts to carry out the merger.

In their suit, Aversa; Julia Large, president of Local 194; Robert Kilmer, Local 194-A president; and Floyd Loper, Local 210 president, asked for an injunction preventing FE or UE from trying to merge their locals into UE or from attempting to take over the locals' property or contracts.

The plaintiffs charged that FE's referendum on the merger issue was illegal and termed it "a step in the conspiracy by the defendants to cause the withdrawal from the CIO of the FE-CIO and its membership and thus to continue the domination of the Communist Party over its affairs, interests and property."

The only method provided by the FE constitution for such a conversion is by majority vote at a convention, the suit contends.

THE MASTER plan revealed at the secret board session, Aversa said, was to create "a left-wing federation" which would consist mainly of UE, covering the hard metal industry and including the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers; the Fur & Leather Workers, which would absorb unions in the light industries; and the Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's union, slated to take in the left-wing outfits on the West Coast.

"The officers of the FE present at such meeting," Aversa's affidavit charged, "bluntly stated it to be their purpose to bring about such absorption as part of a plan to effect disaffiliation from the CIO regardless of any constitutional or other legal barriers."

Meanwhile, FE officers, smoked out of secrecy by Aversa's public announcement of the plan, conducted a quick referendum, and announced the results as "80%" for merger. The exact vote remained a big dark secret.

UAW's vice president in charge of the Agricultural Implement Division, Jack Livingston will give you one of those "How-naive-can-you-be?" grins if you ask him what he thinks of the announced referendum results. He and his organizers have been petitioned by too many disgruntled FE workers . . .

"They're not the dopes the FE leadership thinks they are," he says. "They know being lumped in with a union of electrical workers isn't going to do them any good. The only way they can strengthen their bargaining position is to get into one union with the rest of the workers in the industry. Management isn't divided, and as long as the workers are, the companies will take advantage of it."

Senate Action On DPs Is Urged

THE U. S. SENATE was called upon by the convention to "stand firmly by its mandate to the Senate Judiciary Committee that it report out a Displaced Persons Bill not later than Jan. 25, 1950."

The resolution denounced "the attempts that have been made to enlist CIO members in opposition to the admission of DPs on the false and contemptible charges that they would take away jobs from American workers.

"We are determined that the U. S. shall make good on its pledge to absorb 400,000 of the refuges from Fascist and Communist terror and mass murder."

The resolution then called on the Senate to "carry out without further shameful delay the three-year-old pledge made by the government of the U. S. to the UN that it would contribute to the international solution of the DP problem by approving the Celler Bill, or any similar bill which conforms with the position of the CIO on the admission of displaced persons to this country and which eliminates the un-American, reactionary and restrictive provisions of the DP act of 1948."

UE And FE Expelled; New Electrical Un

DON'T LET anyone tell you that the CIO convention was like a three-ring circus. Rather, it had nine or ten rings and that makes it tough to write a complete picture of what went on in the five days of the convention itself and at the board meeting which followed it by one day.

Perhaps the best way to do it all is in chronological order.

The convention opened on Monday, Oct. 31. Sam Sponseller, CIO regional director, was acting as temporary chairman.

Sponseller introduced, in rapid order, Most Rev. Edward T. Hoban, Catholic Archbishop of Cleveland; Patrick O'Malley, president of the local CIO council, Mayor Thomas Burke of Cleveland (not to be confused with Congressman Thomas Burke, of Toledo, who also attended the convention as a CIO member); Jacob Clayman, secretary-treasurer of the Ohio State CIO; Jack Kroll, Ohio CIO president and president and chairman of PAC, and finally, Murray.

Murray reviewed the year in CIO, thanking the vast majority of the affiliates for their cooperation in advancing CIO's broad policies.

He devoted some time to the steel strike and then hit at the issue which was going to highlight the entire convention:

"This is a fundamental question that touches the lives of not only the members of the labor movement in the U. S., but its effects are felt in the homes of almost every citizen. No subtlety that might be engaged in by representatives of these organizations to the effect that they are not serving the interests of the Communist Party in this convention will be sufficient to meet the requirements of this delegation.

"We have thus thrust upon our shoulders great and very grave responsibilities, obligations that not only run to the memberships of our own unions, but grave obligations and responsibilities that run to our people and our country.

"This convention has a prime interest in protecting the welfare and the well-being of our people and our nation. We seek the preservation of the CIO as a forward-looking, militant, constructive, democratic trade union movement.

"We will lend our services in that direction to not only the members of our own organization here at home, but to the new world labor movement which will undoubtedly be created before the end of the year."

THUS, THE theme was set for the big event.

That first day saw also a major address on American foreign policy by Dean Acheson, Secretary of State.

All of the left wing unions—except RE, which sent no delegates—were in the hall. They showed obvious distaste for Murray's statements.

One ironic touch was present. John Gojack, a delegate from the old UE—he's a vice president—was noted in the press room helping himself to releases and other materials available there for the press.

When told that he couldn't have them, that there were just enough for the press and that he should ask the ushers for delegates' materials, he got indignant and insisted he was a delegate and had a right to help himself here.

NMU PRES. CURRAN
Against Communists.

At the recent convention of the old UE, delegates were forbidden to enter the press room or press gallery, photographers were barred—in true Pravda style.

Came the second day and the UE delegation was absent. An hour later, the news came that the old UE, unlike the other left wing unions, had decided to run away from the fight. It announced it was withholding per capita from CIO.

That second day heard an invocation by Rev. Francis B. Sayre, Jr., grandson of Pres. Woodrow Wilson.

A resolution on support of the steel strike brought stirring speeches by Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky and by Murray.

Oscar E. Ewing, Federal Security Administrator, delivered an address on the vast program of his department, including health insurance.

THEN, THE Communist issue hit the floor with a bang.

George Baldanzi, secretary of the constitution committee, read that group's first report (Frank Rosenblum, CIO vice president, was chairman.) This was the bar on any Communist, Fascist or sympathizer holding the post of officer or Executive Board member in CIO.

The line of the opposition was first put forth by Delegate Stanley of the Office Workers. Cried he: "I cannot believe that the members of the CIO and the workers who today in steel and in other industries are struggling on the picket line conceive that the issue of Communism is the issue which confronts them. The paramount need for the working people is to unite, and legislation of the type proposed here would prevent them from uniting against their enemies."

Having disposed of what he called the "hokum and baloney about the non-existent Communist menace," Stanley advanced the other part of the left wing line: "If we are to amend this constitution, such amendments would provide punitive measures for raiding, scabbing, finking, for discrimination against Negro workers."

Murray then alternated pro-CIO and left-wing speakers:

Oil Workers' Pres. Jack Knight: "I say these people have interferred with our organizational efforts, they have interfered in the administration of the affairs of our union, interfered in a way that is absolutely contrary to the principles of organized labor.

"I know of no single portion of CIO's very fine program in behalf of the people of America but what will be better off once we have divorced ourselves from these parasites who do not know the difference between CIO unionism and Stalinism."

Pres. Ben Gold, Fur: "When I came into this union, I was not hiding that I was a member of the (Communist) party. You are practically paving the way for the reactionary monopolists and the fascist-minded monopolists to follow your example."

Pres. Emil Rieve, Textile: "I have waited for this opportunity for many years. I don't think we ought to fool ourselves any longer by talking a lot about unity, about democracy, because those who talk the loudest do the least about those things. To me, Communists and Fascists are like two peas in a pod, and they always have been, there never will be any difference between them.

"I am perfectly willing to give them the type of democracy that they are willing to give me if they were in power. I don't care if a guy belongs to the Communist Party, but I do refuse him the right to use the name of CIO in order to spread his propaganda. Let us have a clean, progressive CIO and make it appeal to the workers on that ground."

The debate was interrupted by a warm memorial tribute to the late Van A. Bittner, Southern Drive director. Then, it was resumed:

Pres. Harry Bridges, Longshoremen: "To get rid of us, you are going to have to throw us out. I am not afraid of the ILWU's ability to stand up alone. We'll get by! We'll get by!"

Pres. Joseph Curran, Maritime: "It comes with very bad grace from some organizations to rise on the floor and say to this convention that they have made all gains without any help from CIO particularly when the record points out that they themselves pleaded with the CIO to send help to them.

"I have been around this old world a few times; I have been in the Soviet Union. I am sure that in the union movement in the Soviet, once the top leadership has taken a position, the membership does not go out if they object and commence a great slander campaign around the Soviet against the leaders of the trade union movement.

"Well, in the past two years, this is what has taken place in CIO."

He referred to the CP decision in 1944 to end the class struggle and oppose post-war strikes.

"This cured me quick," Curran declared. "In 1946, the maritime unions, the NMU and ILWU, broke over the question of how a strike and a settlement should be conducted. I broke with the gentleman (Bridges) who speaks so openly of his rank and file and the fact that they vote on everything before it is acted upon. I broke with this gentleman, if you please, because he said that I should have no right to submit any proposition the employers might make to our rank and file. I will break with any man who tells me that.

"The amendment speaks for itself. The records of the Executive Board of this organization and the records of its conventions and of its departments speak of the activities carried on by these organizations in the past two years, and it is a certainty that the patience of the leaders of this great organization should be exhausted.

"The patience of Pres. Murray is the patience of Job, and it finally has worn him. We are about to adopt rules, if this amendment is concurred in, under which this union can declare dual and hostile those people and organizations who place their loyalty to a foreign power above their loyalty to the movement to which they are always giving lip service as being something they have helped to build."

Pres. Joseph Selly, ACA: "We are considering here the enactment of a loyalty pledge."

Pres. Walter Reuther, Auto: "It is a question as to whether or not the majority, in whose hands the responsibility lies for the very existence of our organization, has a right to protect this organization against destruction by the minority.

"Abe Lincoln said that a nation cannot exist half slave and half free. Nor can the CIO exist part trade union, dedicated to the ideals and objectives of a trade union movement, and part subservient to a foreign power. We had better make up our minds. The body politic has a bad case of cancer and we have either got to save the cancer or the body.

"The noisy minority believes that we ought to throw away the body and save the cancer.

"The Communist minority in our organization, like the disciplined Communist majorities throughout the world, want the rights and privileges without the obligations and responsibilities, and we are saying here and now that those people who claim the rights and privileges must also be prepared to accept the responsibilities and the obligations.

"There is room in our movement for an honest difference of opinion. Sincere opposition is a healthy thing in the labor movement. But, there is a fundamental difference between honest difference of opinion and the kind of obstructionism and sabotage carried on by the Communist minority, because the Communist minority is a trade union opposition group who disagree with CIO policies, because they believe that there are more sound trade union policies that ought to take the place of our current policies.

"Let them peddle the line, let them stand up wherever they can get an audience and peddle the CP line to their heart's delight, but we say, if you are going to peddle the line, don't put the CIO label on it."

Pres. Morris Pizer, Furniture: "The sooner they get away from this kind of nonsense and covering up a violation of trade union principles with political issues, the better off we all will be."

Pres. Michael Quill, Transport: "I discussed this with the leaders of the Communist Party as far back as eight years ago.

"To be more exact, since I could not discuss it in a reasonable manner with Bill Foster and Gene Dennis, I sat down and wrote a letter to the party—they still have it in their files—and I have written them since. I stopped in 1949.

"I told them that the tactics of the Communist Party members within the union movement would one day lead to this clash and it would either wreck the CP within CIO or it would wreck CIO. When this decision is made in a democratic manner, CIO will be bigger and better and stronger than it ever was.

"When Harry Bridges says the issue is not Communism, he lies like hell. As long as they stay in CIO and peddle the party medicine with the label of CIO it was easy, but when they are forced out and have to take off their outer coats and show their real underwear, they will not be able to hold their membership.

"After passing this amendment, we can say to the world: 'there is a home here for all workers who want to organize along industrial lines.'

"Yes, that we are the people who brought real democracy, and not talk out of both sides of the mouth at one time, that we are the people who believe in equality and will not let them get away with the story that they are the friends of the Negroes and Jews and of the oppressed. Hell, CIO has done more in the last 10 years for equality and oppressed people than all the other hundred movements in the U. S."

Pres. Murray: He recalled 1940, when John L. Lewis, then president of CIO, supported Wendell Wilkie against FDR for President. Left wingers followed this one-man decision, Murray recalled. Murray declared he himself thought more of the nation's welfare.

He retraced the history of the split within CIO which started with the end of the war. He told of the many fights within the CIO Executive Board and at the last CIO convention.

"Why do they raise false issues upon the floor of this convention?" he asked. "Why do they drag so-called red herrings across the face of this constitutional amendment? They say, in the course of the debate, that the CIO is trying to subjugate them to the political dictates of other groups within CIO.

"Why don't they state the facts? Why don't they say openly, bluntly, frankly and truthfully, that what they are attempting to do with CIO is to make it subject to the political dicta of the Soviet—the Communist Party. That's the issue—that's the issue in its pure, raw, unadulterated form.

"They make reference upon this floor to raiding within their unions. Ninety percent of these alleged raids have not been raids, they have been insurrections within their unions, insurrections against the Communistic dicta of the leaders of these unions.

"Talk about taking orders from the rank and file. It is subterfuge. It is a lie. They resort to the subtleties and the cleverness of their leaders within this movement to create the impression that the rank and file have something to do with the decisions their organizations make.

"As a matter of fact, when an order comes from the CP—or it comes from Moscow — they then propagandize their membership in the hope that they may be able to convert their membership to the thinking of the Soviet Government and the CP.

"Who could have been more tolerant over these issues than I have been? How many years have I expended a futile effort to resolve these differences?

"How many days and countless hours have I expended in that futile endeavor, meeting with the leaders of these left-wing organizations in my office in Pittsburgh, in my office in Washington, in my hotel room in Washington and in hotel rooms in other cities throughout the U. S., attempting to prevail upon them to recognize the fact that there is a trade union line to be respected in the USA, and that it must be an independent, democratic trade union line.

"I have failed in every single, solitary endeavor in that respect—wholly unable to resolve these important matters.

"I am aware of the fact that since the fall of 1945 I have been subjected to a great deal of vilification, slander and abuse, not only at the hands of the Communist Party, but also at the hands of a number of these left-wing unions. But, despite these attacks, I have nevertheless attempted to resolve the issues.

"What they want is a shamble, a pretense. They don't want a constitution, they don't want laws to govern them. They are not interested in a thoroughly stabilized, forward-looking, democratic trade union movement in the USA.

"I heard Mr. Bridges state upon the floor that he is a firm believer in democracy.

"I have no dislike for Harry Bridges—none whatever. But, I remember in 1945, Bridges attending a CIO board meeting and proposing this kind of stupid proposition, that the CIO and all of its affiliates agree not to have any strikes for five years following the war.

"I don't know where Bridges got the proposal, but maybe it was just another screwy thing that occurred to him at that time. He may have gotten it from Moscow; I'm damned sure he didn't get it from his rank and file. I am sure he didn't, but he had the nonsensical stupidity to appear before the board.

"For God's sake, God help us if we are to accept that kind of nonsensical leadership, that kind of stupid advice.

"We must discontinue the practice of permitting the dissemination of Communistic propaganda within our membership. The rank and file of these left unions have been already decimated, if not destroyed. I have received countless hundreds, yes, thousands of protests from members of these unions proclaiming to the high heavens that unless CIO afforded them constitutional protection of this description they were going to join some other organization and leave the movement entirely."

Curran Trial

On motion by Harry Bridges, the Executive Board set up a Trial Board to investigate Joseph Curran, NMU, and William Steinberg, ARA. Curran insists a hearing be held.

The Board: David T. McDonald, John Green, Jack Moran.

ON WEDNESDAY, the invocation was given by Rabbi Barnett R. Brickner, Euclid ave. Temple, Cleveland. The convention then swung back into constitutional changes. A provision allowing the board to expel, by a two-thirds vote, any union which follows the party line was passed with no debate.

The increased per capita brought howls of protest from the left, but passed going away.

Various resolutions passed and then Secy. of Labor Maurice Tobin took the mike. Following him, another dramatic moment arrived. It was the resolution expelling the old UE.

No one was surprised when Bridges took the floor first.

Baldanzi: "If I were a minister, I would title my text something along the line of the ancient prophets when they said something about ripping the masks from the faces of the deceitful. I think if I were a writer on satire, I would talk about the monkey on the stick.

"This issue is clear. We have an obligation, a solemn obligation to the working men and women of this country. They want unions, but they want decent, clean unions, and we are not going to build the kind of a labor movement in America as we visualize in Europe.

"Let's not kid ourselves about one basic fact. We haven't kicked UE out of CIO; that decision to get out of CIO was made a long time ago by the Cominform and they have conducted themselves in such a way as to encourage CIO to kick them out—and I am in favor of accommodating them.

Haywood: "A few weeks ago, there was a convention here in Cleveland, a UE convention. The CIO had a trial there. We were ousted from the convention, but we did not go out of the convention.

"They lied consistently about CIO and I am going to quote from a tirade by James Matles (UE organizational director) at that convention. He says in a demand on Pres. Murray: 'Tell your paid dogs to stop undermining from within.' Our staffs are dogs, according to Matles. Well, I would rather be a good dog than a lousy rat.

"Mr. Bridges, I had the pleasure the other day to tell Matles to his teeth that he lied. I also told him he was too yellow to come here for trial.

"We are going on the offensive. We are going to champion the CIO everywhere. If these boys want to pay attention to old Joe in Moscow, let them do it. We are going to pay attention to unions in America that will speak for American workers in the American way."

Reuther: He traced several recent publications by left wing unions attacking the integrity of Pres. Murray, of other officers, of the CIO itself.

"I say brothers, this is a matter of simple decency. You cannot work with people who are dishonest, who are devoid of the elemental simple elements of decency and integrity, and these people by the record prove that they are bankrupt morally and that they are not interested in working honestly and sincerely and constructively with other decent trade union elements.

"We have no choice."

Pres. Abram Flaxer, Public: He didn't like the resolution.

Murray: He told of conferences with Fitzgerald, Emspak and Matles more than two years ago, trying to straighten out this situation.

"At the same time," he remarked, "I directed their attention to the fact that the payroll of the old UE, virtually padded by and through the employment of many Communist agents in the field, and I suggested to them that unless UE was prepared to change this policy, in all likelihood, their union would have considerable difficulty over matters of insurrection against Communist domination. The UE leadership did not change its line.

"In the past two years there have been widespread uprisings within UE. A great many locals have been communicating with me. Delegates here talk about a trial for UE. What do they want me to do, subpena the delegates who walked out of this convention?"

He then assailed the old UE for its ultimatum to him. He said UE was given a chance to argue this before the convention, but hadn't shown up.

He then went into UE's history of collective bargaining this year. "According to the Dept. of Labor, UE negotiated 98 contracts, covering 85,050 employes during the past five months. Of these contracts, 56 provided no general increase. These 56 cover 50,825 employes, more than 60% of the total.

"Thirty-two agreements covering 27,425 employes for pay raises of 25 cents or less. In 33 of the 56 contracts that provide for no pay raise, UE was at least able to get wage-reopening clauses. In this way the leadership figured it might to able to obtain some additional benefits after another CIO union had succeeded in establishing a 1949 pattern.

"If UE had the courage of its convictions, it would have remained and fought the issue on its merits. They left like slinking cowards and left these apostles of hate (the Golds, the

Murray Lincoln

'People Have Tools to Fashion Their Own Destiny'

By AL HERRINGTON

FULL UTILIZATION of America's resources in a "mixed economy" was proposed as an economic solution by Murray D. Lincoln, president of the Cooperative League of the U. S. A., in an address before CIO's Cleveland convention.

"For the first time in recorded history," he said, "we now have the natural resources and the technical know-how to eliminate want in every field of human need and desire.

"People have in their own hands the tools to fashion their own destinies if they will just use them. This is the revolution going on in the world."

Lincoln asserted that people of the world, including America, "will turn from one form of political and economic organization to another until they feel they have their fair share of the potential economic abundance of the world." "And they should," he added.

Lincoln said that democracy and abundance are interdependent. "Abundance cannot flourish under regimentation; democracy can't flourish without abundance," he said.

Outlining his program for achievement of abundance, Lincoln said:

"A HEALTHY, resourceful people is a country's most valuable asset. We must improve and conserve our soil and other resources and direct our attention to creating an ever-increasing standard of living.

"This we can do—and we must—and at the same time maintain and improve our democratic processes.

"Under democracy we can have what has been termed a mixed economy. The individual has the right to choose his own course.

"He can go into business for himself, he can join with others in a private profit corporation, or he can join with others to set up cooperatives, or he can join with other citizens in using government to establish public ownership enterprises such as the Tennessee Valley Authority.

"Under democracy each economic form is free to make its own way and to rise or fall as abilities enable them to do, competing one with the other."

LINCOLN DAMNED our present restrictions on production as "social and economic suicide."

He urged further use of cooperatives as "instruments of a more abundant life." He said farmers have been "going down the cooperative road for years" and that labor has more recently begun moving in this direction. He cited the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers as a pioneer in the cooperativ field. "The Amalgamated has proved beyond a doubt that such co-ops can be successful," he said.

"You in the CIO have long been interested in progressively raising standards of living," Lincoln said, "not only for those in your own organization—but also for people everywhere. You have been quick to recognize that free men working in a free society are the best insurance of social progress.

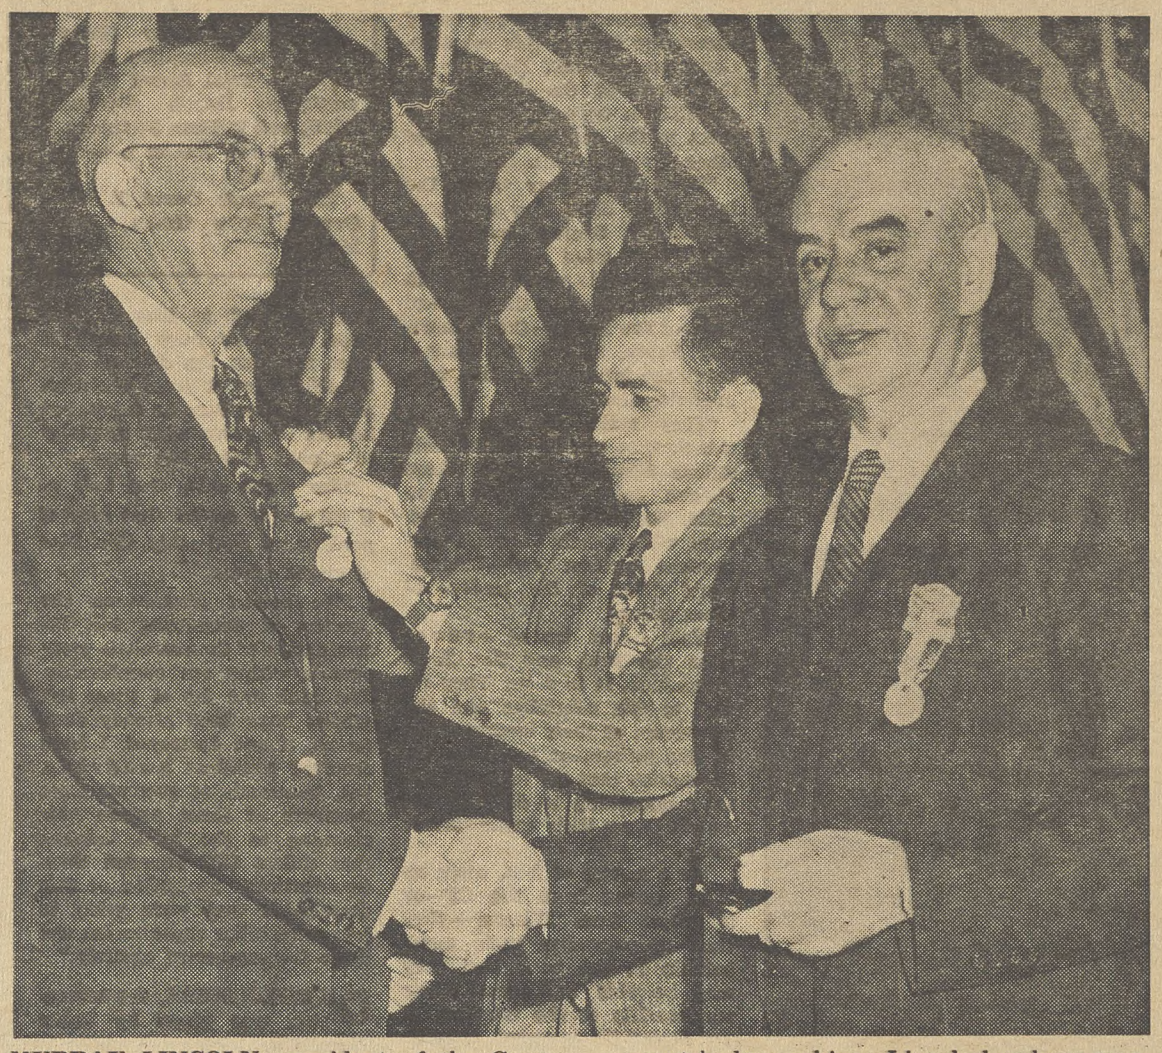
"PEOPLE HAVE decided in their own minds—if not legislatively—the direction in which we are going. You are marking the boundaries of this road.

"We live in one world today—whether we like it or not. There are those in our society—and particularly in our political life—who would have us, by default, give up our stake in world peace.

"These are the people who can't comprehend the idea of one world. We must not let them deceive the American people.

"If we can convince the world that what we really mean is not to exploit them—as has been done by other nations before—but to help them raise their standards of living—eliminate want in every phase of human life—I am sure they would rally to our leadership as nothing else would make them do."

Lincoln, who has had a long period of leadership in Farm Bureau Federation work, the farm cooperative movement, and service on governmental committees, has been mentioned as an opponent of Senator Robert Taft in Ohio's senatorial race next year. The strong sentiment for his election results from his understanding of farm problems and his firm belief in farmer-labor cooperation.



MURRAY LINCOLN, president of the Cooperative League of the United States, is welcomed to the convention by CIO Pres. Philip Murray while Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey pins a guest badge on him. Lincoln has been mentioned as a possible Democratic candidate to oppose Sen. Robert Taft, who is seeking re-election in next year's senatorial race.

Industry Planning Is Approved

THE convention reiterated its support of the industry council plan, which has long been advocated by CIO and Pres. Murray.

The resolution declared "The CIO joins with other organizations which represent and speak for the people to demand that the government take immediate steps to establish practical machinery for the application of economic democracy to meet the social needs of the American people.

"We insist that public planning for the public welfare must prevail over private planning by monopoly for its selfish interests.

"The free world is looking to America for leadership. We must demonstrate that we can combine freedom and security, and establish lasting prosperity."

PRES. MICHAEL QUILL of the Transport Workers is bending over to confer with CIO Pres. Philip Murray. Quill formerly headed the Greater New York City Council.

Foreign Policy Resolution Adopted Over Left Opposition

THE CIO'S policy of favoring the Marshall Plan and the Atlantic Pact, of opposition to aggression wherever it occurs, of support for democracy was approved by the convention almost unanimously.

The resolution brought sharp opposition from the Left. Harry Bridges, of the Longshoremen, as usual was the Left's spokesman. Main CIO-policy speakers were Vice Pres. Joseph Curran, the Textile Workers' George Baldanzi and the Newspaper Guild's Harry Martin, who is with the Economic Cooperation Administration in Paris.

Baldanzi asked the convention, "What does the resolution mean? I think it represents the point of the CIO very explicitly. First, we say we are in favor of creating a UN that will be the means and the vehicle by which nations can learn to live in peace together. No reasonable person can disagree with that policy."

"No. 2, we say that the CIO is in favor of the Economic Recovery Program. The ERP is an instrument by which we pay more than lip service to take care of the needs of those people in Euhope whose countries have been devastated by the war against Fascism. That is the least decent people can do to help those people readjust their economy.

"We do not subscribe in what is happening in many parts of Europe. We do not believe our foreign policy should turn over the Saar or Ruhr Valley to the big steel interests of America. We denounce those kinds of tactics."

Bridges, "I tried to have the committee insert a section urging that we do business with China, so that we can exchange the products of China for the products of the U. S. and thereby help cure the unemployment situation that is growing here.

"Then there is the question of trade with Russia. Anyone who wishes to go to the port of Portland, Ore., right now can find railroad equipment stored there rusting away. It is built to certain specifications, because of the railroad guage. Originally, it was supposed to go to Russia. There is a change of policy and it doesn't go to Russia."

Curran's reply to Bridges came during the debate over aid to democratic trade unions overseas. He said:

"Every trade unionist knows the habit of guys like you to beat your way around the world to evade the issues. You know you cannot talk to the issues in this resolution. This resolution calls for the solidarity of trade unionists in the world against control or supervision of any government, behind the Iron Curtain or elsewhere, free trade unionists, and we are glad to be a part of it and the NMU will be proud to participate in the building of it."

UAW Station Makes Public Convention-Conscious

FOR A GOOD half hour one day last week, the telephone wires at FM Radio Station WCUO, Cleveland, were jammed with calls from irate listeners. Why, they demanded to know, had the station interrupted its broadcast of the CIO convention to resume some of its regularly-scheduled programs?

The station, operated by the CIO Auto Workers, had only planned to broadcast highlights of the proceedings throughout each day of the convention. Certainly it didn't expect listeners to find interest in the steady drone of voices, much of it devoted to routine resolution-passing and for-the-record orations.

But WCUO hadn't correctly assessed the convention's appeal—to its own pleasant surprise. The radio station quickly put the convention back on the air—and kept it there from 9:30 a.m. until the regular 5:30 p.m. adjournment each day therafter.

And WCUO's switchboard operator drew a sigh of relief.

ACTUALLY the station's staff was responsible for bringing portions of the high-voltage convention to thousands of radio listeners from coast to coast.

Each day WCUO recorded the entire proceedings. These were then carefully melted down into a half hour of highlights, interspersed with explanatory comments by Guy Nunn, UAW radio commentator, international representative and administrative assistant to Walter Reuther.

To Guy also went the tedious job of telescoping six hours of speeches into 30 minutes. That kind of job has all kinds of hazards. Obviously, many of the speakers have to be left out. Union members want to know why their particular hero was given the silent treatment. Others draw some kind of political significance from the use of one part of a speech, the omission of another. All this added to the pressure of getting the show ready by 8 p.m. broadcast time.

In addition to its Cleveland airing, the half-hour show was used by more than 75 stations around the country, with an undetermined number of smaller stations piping in for rebroadcast at a later time. Parts of the broadcast were used by each of the major networks as well.

To bring the live broadcast direct from the huge convention hall to its Cleveland audience, WCUO's station manager Ralph Wallace and an engineer manned a microphone and the other necessary contraptions set up at the right of the speakers' platform. Wallace injected whatever explanatory comments were necessary to make the proceedings intelligible to his listeners.

NOW SIX months old, WCUO is the second of UAW's FM stations. The other—only three months its senior—is WDET, Detroit. Policy of each is controlled by a public advisory board. Both are non-profit, devote most of their time to public interest programs. When the UAW wants time to air its own views, it, like anyone else, must buy it.

The sister stations work closely together, and form part of a network of union and cooperative FM stations. The other three members of the chain are WCFM, Washington, D. C.; WFDR, New York City and the AFL Garment Workers' station in Chattanooga, Tenn.

Unlike commercial stations, both WCUO and WDET cover local union meetings and union executive board meetings of particular interest. These broadcasts not only have listener appeal, they found, but stimulate attendance and participation at union meetings.

Once a week Guy Nunn produces a 30-minute documentary broadcast on some current problem. Among these was one on the critical unemployment situation in Muskegon, Mich.

Lefties Get The Works At 11th CIO Convention; Per Capita Up To 10c

Bridgeses, the Flaxers, the Sellys) behind them to defend them.

"This is not a fight over unionism and these hypocrites who pretend to tell you that it is a fight over trade union policies are lying—they are lying out of their mouths and from the pits of their dirty bellies—and they know it, they know it, they know it! I wonder ofttimes if they have a conscience.

"There is enough room within the CIO movement to differ about many subjects, many ideas, questions of reform within the CIO, economic, social and trade union policy—yes, plenty of room, plenty of room, but their is no room within CIO for Communism."

That day, the convention also heard an address by Gen. Omar Bradley, top man in the U. S. Army. A number of European Labor people were introduced to the delegates.

Then, the convention passed, without a ripple of opposition, a resolution expelling FE.

It is reported that Bridges was so busy expounding his personal views to a reporter that he did not hear the FE resolution read and expressed great indignation for his failure to talk.

The rest of the afternoon was devoted to resolutions.

THE FOURTH day opened with an invocation by Rev. Joseph E. Evans, pastor, Mt. Zion Congregational Church, Cleveland. More resolutions passed, with a left wing attack on the CIO's civil rights program.

Murray D. Lincoln, president of the Cooperative League, was heard. Arthur Goldberg, general counsel of CIO, spoke on labor legislation and the CIO's general legal experiences.

Roy Wilkins, acting secretary of the Natl. Association for the Advancement of the Colored People, was a featured speaker. More resolutions passed, with another left wing attack, led by Bridges, on the foreign policy of CIO.

The CIO board met in a brief session and issued a charter—over a few "nays"—to the new International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, CIO.

That night, with the CIO board having chartered the new International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine workers, CIO, the IUE-CIO's administrative committee sent out night letters to more than 1300 companies which had contracts with the old UE, informing them that the new union now claims jurisdiction over the workers and that the contracts now were with IUE-CIO.

FRIDAY, the last day of the convention, opened slowly, with a number of non-controversial resolutions on tap. The Puerto Rican delegation was introduced. Its spokesman was Ramos Antonini, the CGT's secretary of foreign relations. He is also speaker of the Puerto Rican house.

Then Murray called a special order of business and introduced Carey. In his capacity as chairman of the IUE-CIO committee, Carey read a number of wires from former UE locals pledging loyalty to the new organization and to CIO.

He then recalled for the delegates the history of the od UE, which began in 1933, with organization at Carey's home plant, Philco.

He recalled that in 1941, at the UE convention, the "presiding officer"—that is, Carey—was defeated for re-election because he had told a local it could bar Communists, Facists or Nazis from holding office.

"Now we see a strange situation, where these opponents of autonomy, these opponents of democracy, now claim they defend the autonomy of unions."

He then began an introduction of the leaders of IUE-CIO.

"Despite what you see in the papers," he declared, "there is no division whatsoever within the ranks of that group. Let me tell you that they built a movement under extreme circumstances. These men are men of courage.

"They came to a convention in this very hall recently, and they fought to defend the policies of CIO, and they did not walk out of any of those fights.

"And so those Red leaders, Fitzgerald and Matles and Emspak, have red polluted with yellow. In that eight-year fight within UE a group of men and women have solidarity among themselves, brought together through conflict, brought together through opposition to the Communist party doctrines, and they fought vigorously on the floor of the convention."

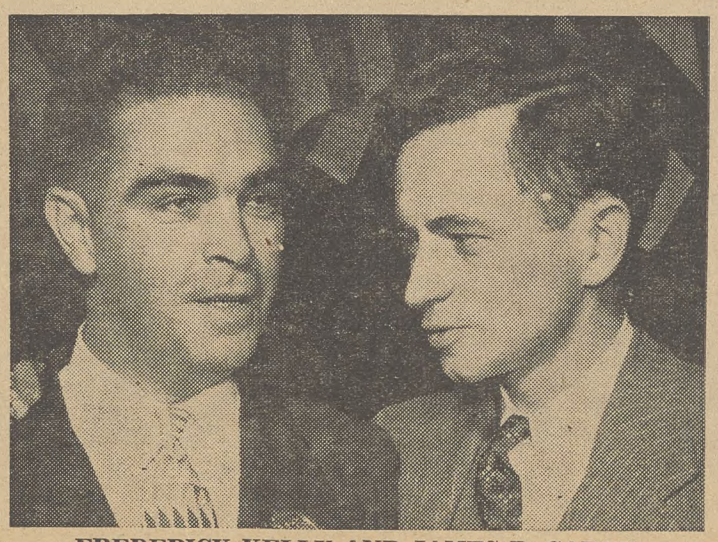
He introduced Fred Kelly, William Snoots, Michael Fitzgerald, John Dillon, Anthony Cimono, John Callahan, James Kraft, Joseph Hawkins, Robert Elsner, Dallas Smith, Al Lowenthal, Paul Jennings, Harry Block, Al Hartnett and Bill Emery.

Carey then warned industry: "We are not going to expect the companies to do our organizing for us. We are not going to permit these companies to feel that they are going to get special consideration because they have a contract that has not yet run out, with the Communist Party."

Murray, referring to the Communist Party and to industry, said: "we are ready to meet, combat and repeal all kinds of opposition in this fight. We are going to win.

"I want to pay my respects and admiration to these young men who appeared on this platform for their stand and their courage in leading this fight against Communism.

"I say to you, Secy. Carey, Fred Kelley and all your associates, all that I can say is that we are with you, we are for you, and we will stand shoulder to shoulder with you in this fight against all kinds of opposition until victory finally attends your efforts."



FREDERICK KELLY AND JAMES B. CAREY

THEN CAME the election of officers, with the colorful demonstration for Murray. Next excitement came when left wing unions nominated their board members.

As each union nominated (the names appear earlier in this story), some pro-CIO policy delegate would take the mike and express doubt over the person's eligibility to serve. However, each said, he did not wish to hold up the work of the convention, so he would leave the decision to the board. In the meantime, he said, his delegation would abstain from voting.

On Ben Gold, Murray ruled he was not eligible.

The convention closed with a heartfelt "thank you and God bless you" from Murray.

Next day came the board meeting.

So that was the CIO convention. It was exciting. And this writer expects a lot of excitement in his new post with the IUE-CIO, too.

Convention Cheers Murray Nomination

By JACQUELINE BROPHY

THE BURST of applause, whistles and cheerful noise-making that broke forth upon Philip Murray's nomination for the presidency of CIO for another year was, strangely enough, not altogether expected.

Murray opened the final session of the 1949 Convention Friday afternoon with a request that the delegates refrain from any demonstration during the nomination of officers, The groan that came from the delegates came from their depths.

Hadn't groups gathered early at the tables in Cleveland's giant Public Auditorium and happily torn sheet after sheet of newspaper into tiny bits to be prepared with homemade confetti to join in a happy and uninhibited demonstration of their loyalty to CIO, to their about-to-be-elected officers, and to the sipirt of release after the week-long grueling sessions of serious business and long speechmaking?

BUT THE CIO President's request, so firmly put and so obviously sincere, created problems. Would the nice mounds of newspaper bits and pieces have to remain in their neat piles? Should the band which was hired be dismissed? No! Let nature take its course!

Nature decreed that the delegates were not to be deterred in enthusiastic expression of their approval of the convention and Phil Murray. In fact the only people who abided by his wishes were a few isolated groups who chose this opportunity to observe the admonitions of the National office—for the first time in many a long year.

They were so few, however, that they practically went unobserved as toy whistles blew, confetti flew, vari-colored streamers floated over the hall, and a snake dance of enthusiastic delegates, gathering length as it went, weaved through the hall and filed up onto the stage where each member of the chain personally greeted Murray.

Each time Pres. Emil Rieve, of the Textile Workers who was chairing the meeting at this moment, called for order, he was met with louder cheers and more vigorous noise making. But the resourceful CIO leaders were not to be outwitted—and the orchestra played the Star Spangled Banner.

No matter how wild your enthusiasm, the national anthem has a sobering effect—whether because of its dignity or its difficulty no one will say— so at its conclusion, with a mighty effort the meeting was brought back to order.

BUT THE nomination of James B. Carey, head of the new UE-CIO, as Secretary-Treasurer of National CIO, was a signal for renewed demonstration. Again the confetti flew. Representatives from the newly chartered UE were the first to bounce to their feet and lead the cheering both when Jim Carey was nominated and when, after the vote was taken, President Murray declared that Carey would again serve as secretary-treasurer for the ensuing year. It might be noted that Carey was among the select company of those good fighters Walter Reuther, Emil Rieve and Joe Curran (who were elected as vice-presidents of CIO) who had the honor of hearing the most vociferous nays when nays were called for. The negatives were loud, but they were few.

The commercial confetti, which joined the newspaper variety, added color to the scene as it flew through the air, Much of it landed on the old black rainhats the ladies present had brought out to wear through the freezing rain that fell in Cleveland that day, and made them as gay as the latest Lily Dache model. A large bunch of vari-colored streamers fell on the broad shoulders of a Steelworker and lodged there like an epaulette, which combined with the cheerful expression on his face could have cast him in the role of an officer from an oldtime operetta.

SECOND FROM THE LEFT is Roy Wilkins, acting secretary of the Natl. Association for the Advancement of Colored People and convention speaker. In the picture are Mrs. Bessie Hillman, member of the CIO Committee to Abolish discrimination; Wilkins; Pres. Willard Townsend of the Transport Service Employees, who is also a member of the committee; and George Baldanzi, director of the CIO Organizing Committee.

Congressmen Who Voted For T-H Also Foes Of 'Rights' Bills—Wilkins

THE WORKER in Youngstown or Yonkers may have his rights taken away from him by a Congressman from Georgia or a Senator from Mississippi, declared Roy Wilkins, Acting Secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, as he pointed out the unity of NAACP and CIO program and interests at the Thursday afternoon session of the National CIO Convention.

"With few exceptions," he said, the men whose filibusters damage the civil rights program are the men who passed and retained the Taft-Hartley Act; "the men who oppose an anti-lynching law also oppose low-cost housing."

NAACP welcomes the aid and experience of the CIO, he said. The fight against injustice and for a better life which both organizations are engaged in "is rooted in the American dream and with no foreign mumbo-jumbo to confuse and divide our people. Like the CIO, we reject the compromising of the battle for our Constitutional rights through any tie-up with the ideology of international Communism."

Wilkins described how his organization is working with CIO's Anti-Discrimination Committee to obtain fair employment practice legislation. More hard work has to be done in this direction, he emphasized, because while eight states have passed FEPC legislation, the heavily-populated and heavily-industrial states of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Indiana and Michigan still do not have these needed measures on their books.

The NAACP is fully conscious of the struggle it takes to elect liberal legislators. In an effort "to remove the barnacles from our Ship of State," Mr. Wilkins continued, "the NAACP is distributing the voting records of legislators, ringing doorbells, and seeing that registration instructions are fully understood."

It took 20 years of effort by NAACP before the white primary in the south finally was ruled unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, Roy Wilkins stated. "Last year, due to this victory and to the battering at the poll tax by many organizations, nearly a million Negroes voted in the South. If we do the right things—your CIO and our NAACP—two million will vote in 1952."

VICE PRES. ALLAN S. HAYWOOD, Pres. Philip Murray, Vice Pres. Walter Reuther and Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey wave to the delegates demonstrating the re-election of Murray to the presidency of the CIO. The others also were re-elected. Murray's son, Joseph, appears in the background between his father and Reutehr. The demonstration was long and loud.

Conclave Praises CSC Activities

Some 600 delegates to the CIO convention reviewed the work of the CIO Community Services Committee and found it good.

On the basis of that review the convention resolved:

"This Convention commends the activities of the National CIO Community Services Committee, its union counselling and community health and welfare programs; and

"This Convention urges all CIO affiliates to establish community services committees to develop and promote this program for the benefit of our membership and the community at large."

AMA Publicists Meet

Physicians who occupy propaganda posts in the American Medical Association and its affiliated societies will meet Nov. 5 and 6 in a medical public relations conference at Chicago.

Presiding over a panel discussion on state society public relations projects will be Dr. A. E. Cardle, St. Paul, Minn., chairman of the health education committee of the Minnesota State Medical Association. It was Dr. Cardle and his group which sponsored the now-notorious medical-press conference in Minneapolis after which Minnesota doctors threw previous ethical standards overboard to allow advertising in papers. Minnesota editors, they explained, had urged a "reciprocal arrangement" in return for opposing national health insurance.

Bradley Says Trade Unionism In National Interest

By RAY DAVIDSON

TO ASSURE peace in the world, the American people must act with courage and decisiveness.

And CIO is acting with courage and decisiveness in the task of building a peaceful world.

So said Gen. Omar Bradley, America's No. 1 soldier, in addressing the CIO convention.

General Bradley, chairman, joint chiefs of staff, told the delegates that the destiny of the United States lies in decisions yet to be made. 'This is unnecessary counsel for the members of the CIO," the general commented. "In labor and trade unionism, more than any other democratic endeavor, the arrow of progress points forward. Having earned and won a significant place in the evolution of our industrial society, labor knows that its ultimate destiny lies in its future decisions, rather than in the glories of its past.

"And so it is with our nation."

GEN. OMAR BRADLEY, convention speaker, was also the guest of honor at a luncheon given for him by the CIO. Here are Bradley and CIO Pres. Philip Murray talking things over between bites.

GENERAL BRADLEY pointed out that the people of the United States are sometimes doubtful of the course to follow in securing domestic and international prosperity.

"With demands for aid, and food, and rehabilitation pouring in from every corner of the world, we are apt to seek refuge in the old proverb: 'Charity begins at home,'" said Gen. Bradley. "The international demands for leadership toward political stability and the end of wars are great. We are besieged by doubters who whisper, 'Is Democracy the best way?'

"For every good, and humane, and inspired idea, there is the paralyzing suggestion: can we afford it?

"The only answer acceptable for Americans is more courage, and new decisions. Our history is one of deeds, not words. Our heritage is action, not supplication. And our spiritual fibre is freedom, not fear."

IN EMPHASIZING the point that courage is the keynote of prosperity and of the securing of peace, General Bradley hammered on the point that in America the individual — and his opportunity to make decisions—is supreme. He pointed out that our armed forces are not professionals who fight for any cause under any flag.

"There are jobs and paychecks in this country for every able person, and this competition springing from a free economy offers a continual challenge to the Army, the Navy and the Air Force," he pointed out.

"Only so long as the man supersedes the machine, and regard for human dignity is not sacrificed to the attainments of results through harsh command, will the American citizen sign up for the armed forces."

General Bradley pointed to some of the difficult decisions made since World War II by the government.

The United States has decided to support the United Nations.

"Your own CIO has supported the United Nations organization," the general pointed out.

The United States has established the European Recovery Program.

"Your (CIO) resolution has been added to that of other Americans for the European Recovery Program as an instrument for the peace and prosperity of the peoples of Europe and the world," said Bradley.

The United States clings to hope for world peace.

"Again, the CIO has added its strong voice to the will of all other Americans against the inevitability of war," commented the general. "The vigorous condemnation of war, as voiced in your resolution on foreign policy at last year's convention, has been a maker of courage and of untold encouragement to your governmental leaders."

"I, for one, am deeply grateful for that resolution," said General Bradley. "It coincides with my own belief that war is not, must not, be inevitable."

The general then pointed out that in America the reward for leadership is the public scrutiny of a man's decisions. It is the same among organizations. The reward for a strong, progressive effective organization is the continued examination by the public of the actions and results accomplished by that membership.

"The actions and results obtained by the CIO is always subject to this critical examination," Bradley added. "As an organization, it is a leader in its field and shall always remain a leader as long as it can bear the close examination of the public conscience.

"We all make minor errors and brief deviations which are readily tolerated. But in the democratic process which encourages such virile trade unionism, the long-range results must be in the national interest, and in the American democratic pattern."

General Bradley closed his address with a plea that democracy not be allowed to lose by default.

"Democracy cannot lose if given the chance to work," he insisted. "But we must admit it could lose by default. It can lose through the fears of its people, through their failure to trust in its strength, through timidity in meeting problems at home and confusion in solving problems abroad."

'Van Bittner Devoted His Life To The People'—Murray

A FAMILIAR figure was missing at this year's CIO convention. Van A. Bittner, one of the CIO's outstanding leaders, who died at his post as director of the Southern Organizing Drive, was missing but by no means forgotten. The convention paid high tribute to him in a moving ceremony during which a portrait "of the great warrior" was unveiled by CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey.

The usual convention hubbub had died away into a deep silence as Pres. Philip Murray stepped forward to tell the delegates something about his 35 years close association with this "beloved friend."

"It is difficult for the younger men of today to understand and appreciate the struggles of men like Mr. Bittner to build up this great labor movement back over a period of 30 years," Murray said. "His was a life of service devoted to the people. He was a man of great heart and great intellect, a man of great executive capacity, endowed by our Lord with great wisdom.

"He was a courageous figure, who conscientiously devoted an entire lifetime to the service of his fellowmen, both in the field where he had to organize and in the office where he had to administer the affairs of an organization after it was brought into being."

PRES. MURRAY recalled the many jobs and responsibilities Van Bittner had shouldered during the years after he left the United Mine Workers to give his services to the CIO. "His crusade to organize the unorganized workers in the steel industry is well known to all of the people throughout the Midwest, the Southwest, and the far West," he said.

"His activities in organizing the unorganized in other industries are well known to many other people, particularly in the packinghouse industry and in other industries where he devoted his time, his talents and his energies to building up those great organizations now affiliated with the CIO . . .

"Many of the successes that have attended the efforts of the CIO are directly attributable to the genius of our departed friend, Van A. Bittner. My close association with him, my deep personal friendship for him prompts me to take the rostrum this afternoon and join with you in paying honor to his memory.

"May his soul rest in peace—a great leader who had lived a great and full life in the service of humanity, our friend, your friend, my friend, Van A. Bittner."

DELEGATES arose and stood for a moment in silent tribute to Mr. Bittner, at the conclusion of Pres. Murray's speech.

Earlier the convention passed a resolution voicing its esteem for the late CIO leader and his "career of service to labor and to all the American people."

"He knew no fear," the resolution declared. "He could not be intimidated by violence or threats of violence by employers or their agents or provocateurs. He had dogged determination to achieve his goals. He refused to become discouraged when progress was slow; but when opportunity beckoned he was able to move quickly, shrewdly and skillfully to strengthen labor's powers.

"He had tremendous capacity for hard work. During the course of many organizational campaigns he worked day and night, speaking to workers in their homes and at meetings, directing staffs of organizers with skill and imagination, negotiating with employers. Van Bittner was available at any moment day or night to carry out his assignments."

Following the reading of the resolution, each delegate was presented with a copy of a citation in memory of Mr. Bittner, "a truly American citizen," who "fought injustice, prejudice, exploitation of people and disloyalty to truth wherever he found them and regardless of whence they stemmed."

Honor Two CIO Leaders

THE MEMORY of presidents of two International unions who died during the past year were honored at the CIO convention as delegates rose to their feet and stood for a moment in silence. The deceased members were Samuel J. Hogan of the Natl. Marine Engineers Beneficial Assn., and Rocco Franceschini of the United Shoe Workers.

The resolution honoring the late Pres. Hogan spoke of him as "a man who well knew the problems of the men in the maritime industry," and who "did much to improve the status and security of the members of his union."

The late Pres. Franceschini who died in December 1948, just six months after becoming president of his union, "was a sincere trade unionist of many years' standing, who contributed much to the formation development of the United Shoe Workers," the resolution stated.

Attacks On CIO Civil Rights Program Lambasted

THE CIO convention called for strengthening of civil rights enforcement measures wherever needed. A resolution declared.

"Preservation of civil liberties is the highest duty of every government, whether it be federal, state or local."

It was in recognition of these facts that President Truman created the President's Committee on Civil Rights on December 5, 1946, the resolution pointed out.

(CIO Secy.-Treas. Carey was a member of the committee.)

"The finding and the recommendations of this committee, in the form of the report, 'To Secure These Rights,' will rank in history as a charter for human dignity and freedom," the report continued.

"With courage and devotion to these principles, the President has moved steadily forward in implementing them."

Delegate Richardson, who is a vice president of the Public Workers, precipitated a debate on the resolution. He said that government employes were "confronted with a mass of red-tape regulations," when they tried to have Executive Order 9835 enforced. The order bars discrimination in government employment practices.

Richardson moved for an amendment to "protest the discriminatory practice in federal agencies," to call on President Truman to end discrimination in federal hiring practices.

CIO SECY-TREAS. James E. Carey, chairman of the CIO Committee to abolish Discrimination and a member of President Truman's Committee on Civil Rights, replied:

"I don't think that we should long tolerate the undermining of this important institution, the CIO, in its efforts to eliminate discrimination.

"Certainly we expect no support from Richardson in carrying out and implementing the President's Civil Rights Report, which the CIO helped write. In fact, the representative designated by Pres. Murray on that committee wrote more of the civil rights report than any other committee member . . .

"If Brother Richardson supports this resolution, I think Brother Richardson should understand that nothing in this resolution calls for the kind of criticism and condemnation of the CIO that he has given it—the only organization that will carry out the program so necessary to the interests of all minorities and all majorities in this nation."

CIO Pres. Philip Murray said any delegate who "seeks to create division between the members of the National CIO on this issue is rendering a distinct disservice to the CIO . . .

"I hope that in the course of our deliberations that representatives from some of these so-called left wing organizations will cease in their willful and malicious attacks upon the Natl. CIO about issues of this description, because they are absolutely false, they are without basis in fact."

THE DELEGATES recommended: "That each CIO affiliate create a Civil Rights Committee or Department on Fair Practices within its respective organizations; and that each international union seek to have incorporated in its collective bargaining agreements non-discrimination clauses particularly pertaining to hiring."

The delegates demanded:

"1 The passage of federal and state fair employment practice acts.

"2 The enactment of a federal anti-lynching bill.

"3 The passage of federal and state legislation outlawing poll taxes and other restrictions on the right to vote.

"4 The abolition of segregation in the armed forces.

"5 The passage of measures to ban segregation in interstate travel.

"6 The enactment of safeguards against racial discrimination in federal appropriations for state aid.

"7 The enactment of civil rights laws in all states which now do not have such laws eliminating segregation.

"8 The abolition of the Wood Committee.

"9 The enactment of laws protecting aliens long resident in the United States and regularizing their status.

"10 The establishment of guarantees to protect the freedom of thought and the freedom of political views of government workers, and the revocation of Executive Order 9835."

CIO Officers Lauded For 75c Pay Bill

CONVENTION delegates commended CIO officers and staff and all cooperating organizations for their work in the successful fight to obtain an increase in the legal minimum wage from 40 to 75 cents.

"This victory will strengthen the whole wage structure of the nation and will encourage states to modernize their minimum wage laws, and it offers protection to fair employers signing new contracts for higher wages against sweatshop competition," asserted a resolution approved by delegates.

At the same time, the convention warned that while a victory had been won in boosting the floor on wages, the CIO cannot relax its efforts.

"The greed of business and industry lobbies seeking the destruction of wage and hour standards" already have started a drive against the Walsh-Healy act, the convention noted.

SINCE 1936, UNDER this act, the Labor Department, through hearings, has determined the prevailing minimum wages for work to be performed under government contracts of $10,000 or more.

Noting that the CIO has given leadership in the fight to boost the floor under wages, the resolution, approved by the convention, pointed to the need for effective political action, illustrated by the bitter see-saw battle to boost minimum wages, to reduce exemptions and to increase coverage of the wage-hour act.

But, delegates concluded, "we are not satisfied."

"We regret the hard political fact that there are not enough uncompromising liberals in this congress to defend a beneficent law . . . we draw from this experience fresh determination to elect an 82nd congress better than the 81st."

CIO Asks Transit Vote

The Milwaukee Union Council, CIO, has voted unanimously to demand a referendum vote on public ownership of transportation facilities in the county. The transit firm has recently asked for fare increases.

Five Steps Urged To Aid Jobless

"CIO organizations should be rallying centers in the struggle to aid the unemployed," the Cleveland convention declared in a resolution.

"To shirk this task would play into the hands of unscrupulous totalitarian groups who will try to organize and exploit the misery of the unemployed."

There are, the resolution said, 3½ million jobless, many additional millions partially employed, 30 important labor markets where 12% of all workers are unemployed with unemployment as high as one-third of all the workers in some industries.

"From its outset, the CIO and its constituent unions have been devoted to the cause of all oppressed and downtrodden workers," the resolution continued. "It is only natural, then, that unemployed CIO members and their families should turn to their unions for help in time of greatest need."

TO DEAL WITH the situation the convention decided that:

- The CIO Full Employment Committee has "the continuing responsibility of developing policies to establish lasting full employment.
- CIO Councils "must take the lead" on the state level, seeking better unemployment compensation and public assistance laws, public works programs and other necessary legislation to help the unemployed.
- The Councils and their Community Services Committees must be prepared to represent the jobless "before all local agencies, public and private, to see that they obtain just treatment."

The resolution called for "policies which guarantee full employment at all times," but, meanwhile, urged that the following steps be taken:

"1. National unemployment compensation system with increased benefits and duration of payments.

"2. Public works programs to absorb the unemployed directly and strengthen the rest of the economy indirectly.

"3. Local, state and federal non-construction work programs in the fields of public health, recreation, education, the arts, and conservation to provide jobs for the unemployed, while at the same time improving American life. These programs should be of a broad and flexible character, capable of expansion and contraction as the general economic situation may require. In planning such projects special consideration should be given to the needs of younger workers just entering the labor force as well as older and women workers, large numbers of whom have been already victimized by this recession.

"4. Special consideration should be accorded to workers unemployed in areas of declining economic opportunity. President Truman's program of concentrating government procurement in areas where unemployment is most acute should be continued and broadened. In addition, loans and technical assistance should be available for small businesses and for new enterprises in order to expand job opportunities in these areas.

"5. To carry out effective work planning to aid the unemployed, both for the immediate recession and possible later needs, a special office should be established. It should have an adequate staff and funds to meet this great responsibility."

Atoms' Usefulness For Peace Stressed

Too little attention has been focused on the development of atomic energy for constructive scientific and industrial uses, the convention asserted in a resolution.

Delegates called on the Atomic Energy Commission to establish labor relations similar to those which have recognized the role and function of free labor unions as democratically chosen representatives of the employes, and which have proved successful.

Cash For Olds Smear

Two members of the staff of Sen. Robert Kerr (D, Okla.) were paid by the Oklahoma Waterways Development Assn. to collect the Daily Worker's reprints of articles written in the 1920's by Leland Olds for Federated Press, presented to a Senate committee which turned down Olds.

Kerr, a millionaire oilman himself, told the St. Louis Post-Dispatch that he didn't pay his staff members for the smear job, which achieved the aim of the utilities lobby—to block confirmation of Olds for another term on the Federal Power Commission.

Labor Unity Goal

Heartened by the good fruits of friendly relations with the AFL, the Railroad Brotherhood and other bona fide unaffiliated unions particularly on the legislative and political fronts, the CIO convention resolved:

"We look forward to the eventual unity of all American workers as the end product of the wholesome cooperation between all branches of the free trade union movement."

Democracy Asked In Peru, Venezuela

DELEGATES turned their attention, too, to workers in other lands, seeking to assist in improving their conditions.

Protesting the throttling of civil liberties in Peru and Venezuela, where the labor movements were the first casualties, the convention demanded the immediate restoration of free and democratic governments by ballot in these two countries.

Unconditional return of those exiled because of trade union activities also was demanded.

Seeking elimination of discrimination and segregation in the Canal Zone, a convention-adopted resolution asked for equal pay for equal work for all workers in the Canal Zone; elimination of segregation; educational, health and recreational facilities for local rate workers equal to those for American citizens; full civil rights for all; citizenship rights for local workers.

Hitting at general conditions of employment of thousands of Mexican immigrant workers in the U. S., the convention approved a resolution seeking to wipe out exploitation of this group.

Federal and state laws were urged to provide a better way of life both for Mexican and other agricultural workers.

"Involved in this subject are such fundamental matters as the undermining of the standards of American workers, domestic and foreign, and a racial discrimination which breeds resentment to the United States and bodes ill to our future relations with Mexico," the resolution warned.

Convention Calls For Stronger Labor Dept.

RESTORATION of and extension of powers of the Dept. of Labor were asked by the CIO convention so that the department can carry out the policy for which it was created "to foster, promote and develop the welfare of the wage earners of the United States."

A resolution told of sabotaging of the department by the 80th Congress, and called for additional Congressional action in behalf of the department.

The resolution called specifically for giving the department authority and funds adequately to perform the following services:

Labor relations, settlement of labor disputes, manpower problems, job placement, unemployment compensation, federal employes' compensation, establishment of standards of safety and occupational health, guidance of the respective State Depts. of Labor, vocational education and rehabilitation, labor education, immigration and naturalization, research statistics and other information on labor problems.

Legislation also was called for to give the department authority "to collect proper, adequate and more extensive facts, figures and statistics."

N. Ireland Accused Of Breeding Bigots

The convention accused the government of Northern Ireland of "breeding bigotry and (it) tends to destroy the unity of a race of people."

Praising the Irish people for having contributed, "over the centuries, aid to the freedom of oppressed people," the resolution went on record as opposed to "the continuation of the partition dividing all of the people of Ireland."

FEDERAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATOR Oscar Ewing and Archibald McDonald Gordon, counsellor and labor attache of the British Embassy, have a chat at the convention.

'Murray Is Great Guy,' Convention Declares

"PHIL MURRAY is a great guy. We're proud of him and we're 100% behind him." In their own words this is what delegates to the CIO convention plainly felt as they shouted their approval of the formal resolution expressing "deep and undying appreciation" for the services rendered by the CIO President.

"During 1949, Philip Murray has given another year of his inspiring and courageous leadership to the CIO, and indeed, to all of American labor," the resolution said, in praising him for his "humanitarianism, wisdom and militant action."

Singling out his leadership of the current steel strike for special mention, the convention declared that "as a spokesman for the steel workers, Philip Murray is fighting to win the elements of security against want and old age, of human decency and dignity. He knows that the future of the labor movement is involved in the outcome of the steelworkers quest for security.

"In engaging in mighty combat with the economic royalists for non-contributory pensions and welfare programs, Philip Murray is seeking to bring about social justice and human morality in an industry which has always given prime protection to high-salaried executives, which has always spent millions of dollars for the upkeep of its machinery, and which has always looked upon its workers as men and women to be exploited and cast aside in their later years.

"There is no greater challenge in our contemporary life than the redress of the just grievances of the workers, old and young, in the steel and other industries of America. It is fortunate that the CIO, as well as the United Steelworkers of America, has at its helm the man whose abilities and devotion to the democratic cause are the best guarantee of success in meeting the challenge of poverty and social injustice."

But Murray's talents are not limited to the collective bargaining table, the resolution continues. "In every field of concern to labor and the American people, he has been an outstanding exponent of humanitarianism, of justice and of social progress.

"He has made significant and lasting contributions toward the achievement of stronger guarantees in support of the fundamental civil rights of the American people. His philosophy has been constructive and influential in the development and enactment of progressive legislation.

"His wisdom and experience have contributed mightily to the growing stature of labor's political action in our country. His leadership in helping shape the course of a democratic foreign policy, a forward-looking European economic recovery program and a sound international labor movement, has been of decisive importance."

Expressing confidence that he will continue in the future as in the past, to contribute greatly to the progress of the CIO and the general welfare of the American people, the resolution concludes:

"We look forward to many long years of continued service by our president—an outstanding leader of labor, a great citizen of the United States, a fighter for decency and progress and democracy."

No Minority Housing

Private enterprise has failed in the "tremendous, relatively untouched market for minority group housing," Franklin D. Richards, Commissioner of the Federal Housing Administration, told members of the New York Savings Bank Assn. If private enterprise doesn't do the job, the government will start direct mortgage lending without using the banks, he added.

Prayers Of All Faiths Go With CIO

ALL FAITHS were represented in the invocations and prayers which opened each day's session of the CIO convention.

The Most Reverend Edward F. Hoban, Catholic Archbishop of Cleveland, addressed the convention on Monday. He stated that unions were motivated by "the principles that put justice and rights ahead of selfishness and personal gain," and added:

"You must repudiate those enemies of God and man who seek to pervert your efforts and to enlist your great forces to fight on the side of evil."

The Reverend Francis B. Sayre, jr., President of the Greater Cleveland Ministerial Association, speaking Tuesday morning, said: "We are all naturally mindful of the good things of life, and of the need for fair distribution of those things among all men. But, in a deeper way, the Church and the union are brought together by our common care not so much for things as for people who produce and use those things . . .

"LABOR IS not a commodity to be bought and sold, harnessed and forgotten. Labor is people—people who have to work together and find meaning together for the whole of their lives; people whose work becomes their prayer . . ."

Rev. Mr. Sayre is a grandson of Pres. Woodrow Wilson.

Dr. Barnett R. Brickner, Rabbi of the Euclid Avenue Temple of Cleveland, told the Wednesday morning session: "There is no contradition between what is spiritually right and what is economically good . . . We all understand, I believe, that the crisis of our times is not so much a political and economic crisis as it is a social and moral one. It is not enough to attain more creature comforts and satisfy more physical wants, for man does not live by bread alone . . ."

The Reverend Joseph H. Evans, Pastor of the Mt. Zion Congregational Church of Cleveland, addressing the Thursday morning session, said that "one of the most ennabling motives that can grip a man is the consciousness that he has been the recipient of such good will and sacrifice from others that he owes it to the world to pay back a little of what he has received."

LPA Wins Fight For Press Gallery Cards

LABOR PRESS Association, after a long and bitter battle, has finally and officially been admitted to membership in the Congressional Press Galleries.

Acting under the new rule approved by the Senate Rules Committee and Speaker Rayburn in the final moments of Congress, the Standing Committee of Correspondents at a week-end session voted unanimously to admit Alvaine Hamilton and Nathan Robertson, of LPA, to membership.

But at the same time the Committee unexpectedly turned down the application of International Press, the State Department's news service, for membership. This was a surprise, as the Committee had been expected to approve the application to give International Press equal status with Tass, the Soviet News Service, which already has access to the galleries.

Chairman William F. Arbogast explained to LPA, however, that the application of Tass, for renewed membership for the session beginning in January had not yet been approved—so there was no discrimination yet against the State Department's news service.

THE NOTICE under the applications of the State Department reporters as posted on the Gallery bulletin board said: "The above applications were rejected unanimously under a motion: That the applications did not come within the rules governing the Press Galleries."

LPA submitted its application for membership last May 31. The Standing Committee, after months of delay, turned the application down by a 3-2 vote under the old rule. LPA quickly appealed to the committee to reconsider, contending that a gross injustice had been done. The Committee promptly recommended a new rule—the first in 70 years revising th basic gallery adminission rule—that would allow LPA to get in.

ANOTHER long delay followed, with a minority of the gallery trying to block action. But finally, on the last day of Congress, the Rules Committee and the Speaker approved the new rule, only, however, after Chairman William S. White, of the New York Times, had resigned as chairman in protest over the tactics of the minority. Under the rule, LPA's application had to be posted 10 days, then was approved promptly.

Membership in the press galleries will enable LPA to give labor and liberal papers faster and more accurate coverage of Congressional news than ever before. It marks a new era in the history of labor journalism.

The convention passed a resolution urging all labor papers to subscribe to LPA, which, the resolution stated, is free of "ideological slant."

'Labor Owes Great Debt To Striking Coal Miners'

The convention passed the following resolution in support of the striking coal miners:

"The coal miners of America are locked in economic warfare with the coal operators in a struggle to win some measure of security for themselves and their families.

"All American labor owes a great debt to the coal miners for the long and gallant fight they have conducted to improve the working conditions and living standards of all workers. The miners pioneered in the historic fight to organize the great mass production industries and to win for the millions of workers in those industries the benefits of collective bargaining.

"The present demands of the mine workers are rooted in justice and equity. In this most hazardous of industries, the long roll call of crippled and killed miners—martyrs to the greed of the operators and the financial overloads of the coal industry—gives eloquent testimony to the urgent necessity for the relief for which the miners are fighting.

"Meanwhile, the coal operators, who shun the dangers and hazards of the coal pits to sit safely in their comfortable offices, show their contemptuous disregard for the welfare of the nation and of their employes by arrogantly and stubbornly denying the just demands of the miners.

"NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED:

"We extend to the striking coal miners the complete solidarity of the whole CIO membership and we pledge our full support to their righteous and heroic struggle against the united power of entrenched industrial and financial interests."

Pledge Fight To Enact CIO Program

A PLEDGE to fight "with renewed vigor" during the second session of the 81st Congress for the unenacted measures in the CIO's legislative program was made by convention delegates.

The pledge was contained in a resolution which reviewed the progress made by the first session of the Congress toward the legislative goals set up at the 1948 CIO convention.

Accomplishments listed were the law providing for low-cost housing, 75c minimum wage, reciprocal trade agreement extension, and the transfer of the U. S. Employment Service and the Unemployment Insurance Service to the Dept. of Labor.

Failure to make more progress was blamed on "a reactionary bipartisan coalition serving vested interest groups."

The enactment of the following measures was urged:

1 Repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and reenactment of the Wagner Act with improving amendments. "We stand solidly against any provisions which would impose the use of injunctions to break strikes or which would impinge on other basic principles."

2 Strengthening and improvement of our social security program, including extended coverage, substantial increases in benefits, addition of permanent and temporary disability insurance, and an improved public assistance program.

3 A progressive tax program which shifts the burden of taxes from those least able to those best able to pay.

4 Enactment into law of the recommendations of the President's Committee on Civil Rights. Specifically we call for:

a. Passage of a Fair Employment Practices bill;

b. Passage of legislation outlawing poll taxes and other undemocratic restrictions on the right to vote;

c. Enactment of a federal anti-lynching bill;

d. Passage of measures to bar segregation in inter-state travel;

e. Enactment of safeguards against racial discrimination in federal appropriations for state aid;

f. Abolition of the Wood Committee;

g. Enactment of laws protecting aliens long resident in the United States and regularizing their status;

In addition, we oppose all bills and Executive Orders to limit constitutional rights of American citizens and curtail the right of organization and association.

5 Extension of rent control for period of the housing shortage.

6 Passage of an adequate housing program for families of moderate income, with provisions for loans to housing cooperatives.

7 Enactment of legislation to protect tenants in war housing from real estate speculators.

8 Improvement of the Fair Labor Standards Act to provide a minimum wage of at least $1.00 an hour, and to extend coverage to all workers whose employment is within the jurisdiction of federal legislation. "We believe that at least an additional 7 million workers could and should be brought under the protection of the Fair Labor Standards Act."

9 Development of an economic program which will promote and maintain a full-employment, full-production, and full-purchasing power economy.

10 Improvement of unemployment compensation and the public employment service through more adequate benefit provisions and extended coverage in a nationalized system.

11 A national unified health insurance program.

12 Federal aid-to-education, properly financed, and an effective labor education extension service program.

13 Strengthening of the U. S. Department of Labor and the return to it of all its legitimate functions.

14 Establishment of a Cabinet-status Department of Welfare to coordinate the health, welfare and social service functions of the government.

15 Veterans benefits adjusted to meet present high costs, and the enactment of an adequate veterans' readjustment allowances program.

16 Legislation to extend the displaced persons program and eliminate the discriminations of the 1948 Act.

17 A comprehensive forestry program, including direct federal regulation of timber-cutting on all timberlands.

18 Support for the integrated regional development of rivers and natural resources, utilizing the experience gained in TVA.

19 A farm program geared to a full economy, including reasonable price and income support, farm credits, soil conservation, and improvement of rural living standards.

20 Adoption of the International Trade Organization's Charter which extends the principle of reciprocal trade.

21 Adequate appropriations for the Economic Cooperation Administration.

22 Retention under full federal control of "tidelands" oil resources.

23 Defeat of proposals to protect monopolistic basing-point practices from action by Federal Trade Commission.

24 Approval of the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project.

25 Enactment of legislation with appropriate safeguards to implement President Truman's "Point Four" proposal for assistance in the development of human and technical resources of under-developed countries.

26 Provisions for the development and maintenance of a U. S. merchant marine of size and status commensurate with this country's role of leadership in world affairs.

Truman Certain Of T-H Repeal, Blasts Extreme Right And Left

President Truman told the CIO convention that he is confident that the T-H Act will be repealed with the help of his Administration.

The President was unable to be present at the convention, but he sent a two-page letter attacking both the extreme right and the totalitarian left as standing in the way of the socially progressive program to which his Administration is pledged.

The text of the letter follows:

"Dear Mr. Murray:

"I deeply appreciate your cordial invitation to address the Eleventh Constitutional Convention of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, which opens in Cleveland on October thirty-first. It is a source of much regret to me that I cannot accept. I shall be grateful if you will extend my congratulations to the officers, delegates, and members who are attending this meeting, which is of such vital importance not only to labor but to the Nation as a whole. I wish to express to you and to them my very best wishes for a successful convention.

"Your organization last November joined with other labor groups, wage earners, farmers, and citizens from every part of our population, in expressing a firm determination to make the Government of the United States increasingly more responsive to the needs and aspirations of all the American people. During the first session of the Eighty-first Congress which has just adjourned we made real progress toward this goal. Major items of forward-looking legislation were enacted, and long strides were taken on other measures which will be pressed to enactment in the second session of this Congress.

"All the advances we want have not yet been made, but this does not mean defeat, only delay. You have my assurance that it is the firm intention of your President and his Administration to fight through to victory on every point in the program to which we are pledged, and the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act is at the top of our list. In this fight I know that I can depend upon the untiring support and assistance of industrial workers, wage earners, farmers and other forward-looking citizens.

"Our Government will continue to be successful only if it serves ever increasingly the needs and aspirations of all our people. That is sound American doctrine. That is the purpose of our program.

"There are two groups which in their different ways seek to defeat our progress.

"One of these is the selfish interests who, in their blind shortsightedness, do not realize that, in the long run, reaction is a far more expensive formula than progress. They are now refusing to accept, as they have always refused to accept, the decision of a free people expressed at the polls. They no longer stand victoriously astride the field as they did in the Eightieth Congress, but they are nonetheless fighting a determined rear guard action.

"Lately, they have fallen back on the device of trying to tar our progressive program and measures with scare words, some of them new. They talk of "statism" and the "welfare state," but they are not frightening you and they are not frightening me. We are going to win our fight despite their opposition. We are going to move ahead. The ironical part of it all is that they, too, will be better off in the long run because of our victory.

"There is another group of a very different character which is also fighting us. It contains elements which give lip service to many of our progressive measures, but that is only a tactic in their efforts to destroy the things we believe in. They claim the protection of all our civil rights and liberties, and this would not be America if we did not accord that protection event to them.

"But if they should ever win the victory they seek, they would deny the same rights and liberties to all those who oppose them. They would destroy the labor movement along with our other democratic institutions. Even the Taft-Hartley Act would seem beneficent in comparison with what labor might expect to receive from these pretended friends if they should ever attain domination. But this they will never do. One of the many things that reinforces my firm conviction that their efforts will fail is the knowledge that your organization and other labor groups are fully awake to the dangers which they represent.

"I am confident that your Government and your own organization will be able to meet and defeat the challenge presented by these two disparate groups, joined only by their selfish and destructive purposes.

"The working men and women of the United States have demonstrated their willingness to make whatever sacrifices are called for to attain the objectives of the peace for which have fought two great wars in the last generation. They have shown, and I am counting on them to continue to show, that they place the national interest above any particular interest, even their own.

"I am confident that the Congress of Industrial Organizations will continue to be, as it has been in the past, a dynamic and constructive element in our national life, and that it will cooperate with other groups and citizens and your Government in formulating and supporting farseeing liberal measures to promote the general welfare of all the American people with peace at home and abroad.

"Very sincerely yours,
"HARRY S. TRUMAN"

Co-Ops Called Aid To Buying Power

The CIO convention in a resolution declared that cooperatives are "an effective weapon in the fight to increase the purchasing power of workers' wages," "a growing defense against monopoly and depression" and a field of common action for workers, farmers and others to "unite to advance their mutual welfare."

On that basis the convention "urged the support of all CIO affiliates for the Council of Cooperative Development which has been established, with CIO representation, to coordinate the efforts of the Cooperative League of the U.S.A., and the American labor movement in developing cooperative enterprises."

Campaign Opened For U. S. Curb On Phone Rates

A DRIVE to bring all American telephone telephone rates under control of a single federal regulating agency—the Federal Communications Commission—was set in motion by the convention.

A resolution approved called on Congress to expand the authority of the FCC so that regulation of all telephone rates will be within its jurisdiction. At present FCC controls only long distance rate matters.

Congress was asked to appropriate sufficient funds to this agency "to employ the personnel needed to establish proper telephone rates which will guarantee a fair rate to the subscriber, a good wage to the worker, and a proper return on investment."

The CIO resolution pointed out that rates at present are regulated by state commissions in all but two states. It further commented that the Bell System, which controls 90% of the nation's telephone business has been said by an association of these same rate regulators to have developed techniques which "make it practically impervious to even the most energetic types of rate regulation."

IN THE INTEREST of the public, "more efficient regulation of industry can be achieved" if regulation is placed in a single federal agency," the resolution said.

Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, of the Communications Workers of America, CIO's newest affiliate, speaking on the resolution, reviewed development of rate regulation in the telephone industry.

"Regulation of telephone rates by the states," he said, "has resulted in a crazy quilt, patchwork situation where rates charged to telephone customers bear no sensible relation to each other."

Beirne said that under complete federal regulation such inequities could be matched against each other and eliminated.

"State regulation of telephones is an expensive business to the taxpayer," Beirne said. "Unnecessarily high rates in many sections of the country are a direct result of laxness on the part of state commissions, their lack of understanding of the complicated barrage of statistics expensively prepared by the Bell System when it asks for higher rates, and even worse, commissions which lean over backward in a far too friendly consideration for the pocketbooks of telephone investors."

Only a federal agency can do an adequate job of protecting the telephone user from exorbitant rates, he said. One big company dominates the industry; one federal agency should regulate it."

CCL Helped By CIO's Struggles—Conroy

BRINGING greetings from CIO members in Canada, Secy.-Treas. Pat Conroy of the Canadian Congress of Labor, told delegates at the Cleveland convention that "what happens in this convention is not only of importance to you in this country, but is likewise of the greatest importance to trade unions in every part of Canada.

"Since our Congress represents members of the same unions as are in the CIO, our problems in Canada by and large are the problems of CIO. Wherever you gain, wherever you make progress we gain and make progress as well. Where you suffer losses, where your progress is set aside, it is quite noticeable on the other side of the international boundary line."

THE CANADIAN labor leader assured the delegates that "our faith is your faith" and defined that faith in these terms:

"We believe it is not enough to achieve economic security. We believe that, side by side with the establishment of material progress, we must insist on maintaining the spiritual and individual freedom of every human being. Without these two gains, without these two freedoms, if, for instance we gain in a material sense and lose our heritage of individual freedom, we haven't made much progress in any respect, because man must be a free soul to enjoy the material benefits that must come to him as an individual.

"On the other hand, we also insist with you that it is not enough to have spiritual, political, and individual freedom. That can become an illusion if, side by side with it the bodily and physical requirements of human beings are not attended to as well. And so we stand side by side with you on your basic problems, that the whole man as a social being must be attended to, that the ills that affect his progress must be eliminated, and there must be substituted for them a spiritual and a physical health that will lay the foundation for a healthy community, a healthy country, and a healthy world in general."

Conroy and his wife, Esther, received distinguished guest badges from CIO Secy-Treas. Carey.

Equal Pay Indorsed

"THE ECONOMIC and political strength of a mass labor movement depends on the unity that results from equality of treatment," the convention declared in stating its stand on equal job rights, equal opportunities and equal pay for women workers.

Failure to defend fairly the job rights of women members of the union plays into the hands of labor's opponents and weakens the movement, the resolution on women workers stated.

The resolution called the so-called Equal Rights Amendment which is included in both the Republican and Democratic platforms, "a menace" for it would outlaw hard-won state legislation protecting women's special needs as workers and mothers.

The convention reaffirmed the CIO's support of the Women's Status Bill, "as a far more reasonable move towards advancing women's rights," and urged the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination to intensify efforts to oppose discrimination against women on the job and in the community. It also asked all affiliates to renew their efforts to draw women into more active participation in unions, both as members and officers.

Two Million Homes Yearly Set as Goal

TO SECURE decent homes and suitable living environment for every American family, the convention demanded a national goal of two million new homes a year.

The convention's resolution acknowledged the beginning made by the Government by enactment of the Truman housing program which provides for 810,000 units of public housing to be built in the next six years and for the destruction of an equal number of slum housing units. But the resolution pointed out that this program does almost nothing for the people with incomes between $2500 and $5000 a year.

"Sixty per cent of America's families," said the resolution, "are forgotten people in terms of basic housing needs."

To meet this need, the convention urged the Public Housing Administration and local housing authorities to accelerate construction of the public housing provided by the Administration's 1949 bill to the legal maximum of 200,000 units a year, and that States and cities supplement the Federal program as has been done by Massachusetts, Connecticut and New York City.

Other measures to alleviate the housing shortage urged by the CIO were adoption by Congress of the REA principle of direct government loans at low interest rates to cooperative housing enterprises and provision for direct loans to veterans unable to get money for homes in the mortgage market without making side payments.

The CIO resolution pointed out that Congress recognizes the inability, and the unwillingness, of the real estate industry to fill the need for housing both from a quantitative viewpoint and particularly in respect to price.

THIS CONVENTION statement also recalled that Federal guarantees to the real estate industry for its ordinary operations have been signally misused and have resulted in the erection of a great deal of flimsy and badly planned over-expensive housing.

It was noted that FHA insured units recently have averaged over $11,000 in price, a level which puts them out of reach of the families of working people

The CIO resolution was directed toward fulfillment of the recommendations of the CIO Housing Committee, which were given Congress last spring. To carry out the terms of the resolution, CIO industrial union councils were instructed to take leadership in their communities, and to repel efforts of the real estate lobby to obstruct and scuttle the national housing programs. The councils also were instructed to set up committees on cooperative housing and to work for appointment of a CIO representative on each local housing authority.

2 Resolutions On Education

LABOR'S traditional role of strongly supporting efforts to obtain more and better educational facilities for the workers of America was voiced at the CIO convention again this year. The convention adopted two resolutions on the subject.

One called for the enactment by Congress of the Federal Aid to Education Bill. This proposed legislation would provide improved facilities on every educational level, from nursery to university, "so that every child shall have a good education, every class a good teacher, and every teacher a good salary." At least 75% of funds appropriated would go for teachers' salaries.

The bill also calls for at least $3 billions in federal funds for a comprehensive, nation-wide school building program during a five-year period.

Passage of a bill to provide a Labor Extension Service Program was urged in the other resolution on education. This bill (S. 110 and H.R. 1380) would set up a Federally-supported extension service program in the Dept. of Labor for the nation's wage earners to be operated through the cooperation of unions and universities within the various states.

With him is Reuben Bloch, ACW regional director from Chicago, where Clark also resides. Contestant having the highest serial number in his suit won the contest which was part of the ACW's union label campaign.

War Housing Razing Flayed

The program of destruction of temporary war housing projects at a time when they are gravely needed because of the great housing shortage was condemned by resolution of the convention.

The convention called on the Public Housing Authority to resist and rebuff efforts of the real estate industry to have war housing torn down and urged Congress and the PHA to give preference in the sale of war housing to non-profit groups of tenants now in occupancy.

Pending such a disposition of the project, the convention urged the PHA to provide adequate and safe maintenance. Most of the temporary housing was built under the Lanham Act which provided for destruction of the units after the passage of the war emergency.

General Counsel Goldberg:

Hope For T-H Repeal Placed On 1950 Elections

ALTHOUGH THE CIO will carry its fight for T-H repeal to the next session of Congress, it is placing most of its hopes for repeal on next year's Congressional elections.

"We can do the job," CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg told the convention. "The job has to be done. The law is a discredited law which no longer has any defenders; even Taft does not defend it. What remains is for us to get into the next Congress a majority so safe and so overwhelming that no misguided coalition of Taft Republicans and Dixiecrats can block us."

Between the harshness of the law itself and the severity of its enforcement by the Natl. Labor Relations Board and its General Counsel Robert N. Denham, "every labor organization already has felt the crippling effects of the creeping paralysis unleashed by one of the most vicious anti-labor laws on record," a convention resolution said.

Since the law's passage, CIO efforts to gain its repeal have been hampered by the CIO left-wing, Goldberg said. Although he did not identify the dissidents—other than to mention an incident involving Longshoremen's Pres. Harry Bridges—he made clear to whom he was referring.

Goldberg charged the red union leadership with circulating false rumors against the CIO during its T-H repeal efforts. On one occasion, he said, Bridges disseminated a document prepared by another union, which "didn't have the courage to present it themselves," indicating that the CIO General Counsel had drawn up a proposed amendment which included an injunctive feature.

Goldberg said he asked Bridges "whether he believed when he published that libel that it was true. I also asked him at the time why he didn't get on the telephone and ask the General Counsel of CIO whether that story which appeared in the Times-Herald was true. He never answered it there and he cannot answer it here."

Attacking the law's co-author, Goldberg noted that Sen. Taft, in campaign talks, is telling Ohioans that no case has been made against T-H by union spokesmen.

To squelch the Taft claim, Goldberg repeated a challenge he made while testifying before the Senate Labor Committee. He offered to debate the issue with the Ohio Senator in a public meeting or nationwide radio hookup with the CIO paying all expenses.

Strong indictments of the law and its administrators were carried in the CIO's resolution pledging continuation of the battle for T-H repeal and restoration of the Wagner Labor Act.

In at least eight ways, listed by the resolution, the Act has been destructive. The resolution charged:

1. ". . . its most direct effect has been to hamper and obstruct the organization of the many millions of unorganized workers in America."

2. It has "encouraged the wholesale commission of unfair labor practices by employers bent on resisting union organization and recognition."

3. It has precipitated "wholly unnecessary" organizational and recognition strikes by encouraging employers to repudiate unions and to evade collective bargaining obligations.

4. "Other strikes have been caused by the refusal of employers to agree to reasonable terms which unions, in self-defense, have sought as contractual guarantees against the most destructive provisions of the Act."

5. Still other "otherwise unnecessary" strikes were forced by employers' refusal "to conclude equitable agreements in order to take advantage of the strike-breaking and union-busting provisions of the Act."

6. By encouraging employers to deny wage boost and security for workers, the law helped maintain the gap between workers' living costs and earnings.

7. Even where established collective bargaining relationships existed, the law encouraged employers to cut contract standards and to become uncooperative in settling grievances.

8. Reactionary employers, "given a new lease on life," have used the law to smash unions, break living standards, restore exploitation, the open shop and "yellow dog" contracts. These were attempted through use of the decertification petitions, company unions and "spurious charges of unfair labor practices against legitimate unions."

Toward the law's administrators, Denham and the Board, the CIO was equally bitter. By going the law one better in most of their interpretations, Denham and the Board subjected workers and their unions to greater repression than the law itself provided, it was charged.

"Glib propaganda," said the resolution, has not fooled either the workers or the American people. "It is the rank and file who have suffered because of the use of the law to force down living standards."

Sen. Taft and the Republican-Dixiegop coalition in Congress were then lambasted for their repudiation of the 1948 election mandate to repeal T-H.

Of Taft's proposed amendments to the law—advertised as "liberalizing" measures—the CIO said:

"Sops to labor of the Taft variety cannot minimize the tremendous industrial unrest which the Act has bred, the chaos and resentment at the plant level which it has brought into being, the time and energy which it has compelled employers and unions to expend in a common effort to avoid its disastrous provisions."

WIDESPREAD USE of injunctions by both federal and state courts prompted the CIO to comment in a resolution on injunctions: "Once again the dark days of the anti-labor past have returned to haunt unions."

In addition to the ease with which employers can obtain injunctions against unions in federal courts under T-H, the convention pointed out, injunctions have been issued in state courts despite the existence of anti-injunction laws.

Such restrictions have been clamped on strikers "even though picketing has been peaceful and no basis for injunction was present..." the CIO charged. "Judges have issued injunctions without permitting unions and their members an opportunity to be heard and to defend themselves."

Resulting from the return of the injunction, the resolution continues, union members and officers have been jailed without trial, others imprisoned and fined for violating injunctions they didn't know existed because they did not receive adequate notice. Others were the victims of anti-labor judges who "have devised farfetched theories of union responsibility in injunction and contempt proceedings."

To eliminate these repressive devices, the CIO pledged to continue its fight for restoration of the Norris-Laguardia anti-injunction act "to its original effectiveness" and to seek enactment of anti-injunction laws in all states which do not already have them.

SNAPPED AT CONVENTION: Mrs. Philip Murray; Mrs. Lee Tierney, wife of the CIO Comptroller, and Mrs. R. J. Davidson, wife of CIO Regional director and the convention's chief usher, are exchanging comments on the convention.

Tide is Turned In The States

IN CONTRAST with its disappointment at Congress' failure to strike Taft-Hartley from the books, was the convention's satisfaction at the reversal of the anti-labor tide in state legislatures.

Except for enactment of a ban against mass picketing in Nebraska, no new restrictive legislation was passed by the states this year. On the other hand, three states — Delaware, Missouri and New Hampshire repealed existing anti-labor statutes.

The CIO resolution on state anti-labor laws warned, however, that such heartening developments must not be a cue to labor to sit back and relax. Most of the restrictive legislation is still on the books, it said, and state lawmakers have turned their back to the need for wages and hours legislation, protective measures for working women and children, and improvements in workmen's compensation and unemployment insurance laws.

Dolly Wilson, board member, Lansing Mich.; Lillian Sherwood, president, Lansing, Mich.; Bertha Perrin, Warren, Ohio, secretary-treasurer, and Evelyn Smith, office secretary.

Parley Backs Israel

THREE RECOMMENDATIONS of the CIO delegation which visited Israel some months ago were adopted by the convention and are expected to spell substantial aid to the infant nation in the future.

The convention authorized the creation by Pres. Philip Murray of a CIO Israel-American Committee to further the CIO's relations with Histadrut, the Israeli Federation of Labor.

It also pledged "to support in any way possible the granting of further loans by the U. S. Government to the Republic of Israel" and to encourage efforts by "legitimate American organizations" to raise funds for the struggling democracy.

Specifically indorsed was the current campaign of the American Trade Union Council of the Natl. Committee for Labor Israel which is trying to raise $10 million for Histadrut's program of rescue, rehabilitation and reconstruction.

Kroll Says Election Shows

'People Standing By Demand For Liberal Government'

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

THE RECENT elections gave a conclusive demonstration —if a further one was needed after 1948—that where labor is politically united and organized it makes its strength felt and its wishes prevail.

The outstanding labor victory was the election of ex-Governor Herbert H. Lehman to fill the unexpired term of Robert F. Wagner as U. S. Senator from New York.

The number of elections was small and the vote did not go entirely labor's way. But in general the results showed, in the words of PAC Dir. Jack Kroll, that "the people of this country are standing by their demand of last year for liberal, progressive government on the city and state levels as well as the national level."

More people turned out to vote, in the states and communities where elections were held, than had ever gone to the polls in previous off-years; and in several cities, where the campaign of labor was particularly intense, voting broke all previous records including those rung up during the hottest Presidential campaigns. And there is little doubt that labor can take the lion's share of the credit for this turnout.

"We are proud of the part CIO-PAC workers played in these magnficent victories for honest, decent government," Kroll says. "It is due to their year-round efforts that this year saw an unprecedented number of voters at the polls and that people demonstrated a keen awareness of the issues before them."

IN THE New York Senatorial race there was no question or confusion as to the identity of labor's candidate; he was Lehman, and he won, by 195,000 votes out of nearly 5,000,000 cast. His Republican opponent, John Foster Dulles, whom Gov. Thomas E. Dewey had appointed to be Senator pro tem upon the retirement of labor's great friend, Wagner, dropped his "bi-partisan" mantle in the campaign and his political future is now unsure.

In New York City, politically the most confusing municipality in the U. S., CIO and AFL united in back of Democratic Mayor William O'Dwyer for re-election, while the Liberal Party and the AFL Garment Workers went out for the Republican candidate, Newbold Morris, and the ALP ran its own Vito Marcantonio. Out of all the hoorah, O'Dwyer emerged the victor by 1,264,600 to 956,170 for Morris and 356,432 for Marcantonio, and the Democrats took all but one of the 25 city council seats. In Manhattan, Robert F. Wagner Jr., son of the ex-Senator, became burough president.

(The GOP also lost eight mayors in Upper New York State, including Syracuse where a record-breaking vote put a Democrat, Thomas J. Corcoran, in power for the first time in 24 years.)

IN NEW YORK'S tenth Congressional district, Mrs. Edna Kelly, Democrat, was elected to fill the unexpired term of the late Rep. Andrew Somers (D), with 48,769 votes to her nearest opponent's 24,505. Her total was larger than the combined vote for all her opponents, and the total vote cast was the largest ever recorded in an off-year.

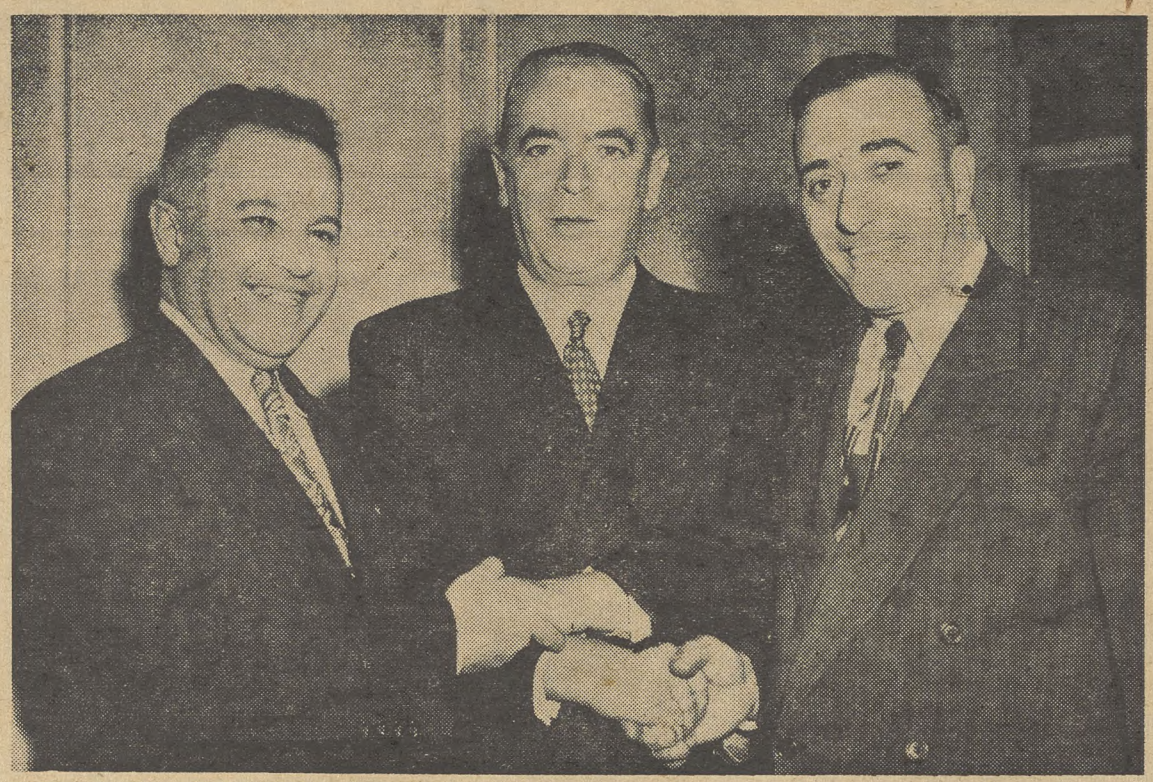
In California's fifth Congressional district, labor candidate John F. Shelley, president of the California State Federation of Labor and chairman of the state Democratic delegation to the 1948 nominating convention, won with 78,877 votes to his Republican opponent's 52,354. The vote here was not record-breaking. Shelley succeeds the late Rep. Richard J. Welch, who though ticketed Republican was a liberal, pro-labor candidate, repeatedly indorsed by right-wing labor in San Francisco; Shelley's election was pretty well assured, particularly since his opponent did him the favor of campaigning on a die-hard reactionary platform. Registration was off 500,000 from 1948.

Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, hailed labor's contribution to the victory of Herbert H. Lehman, William O'Dwyer and other Fair Deal candidates throughout the country, declaring that it was a "people's mandate" for an extension of the social welfare.

The Fair Deal victories, he said, were only a dress rehearsal for 1950 when, he predicted, united political forces of labor "would complete the job of making the Congress completely responsive to the will of the people." ACW participated most intensively in the successful campaigns of Senator-elect Lehman and Mayor O'Dwyer.

Potofsky said the defeat of John Foster Dulles and Newbold Morris was "a complete repudiation" of Gov. Thomas E. Dewey "and all the reactionaries in the Republican Party who sought to turn the clock back and destroy the great gains made by the American people under Presidents Roosevelt and Truman."

"The American people in Tuesday's election," Potofsky declared, "demonstrated that they want more of the New Deal, not less; more of the Fair Deal, not less."



UNITED FOR VICTORY: William O'Dwyer, (center), re-elected Mayor of New York City, shakes hands with Morris Iushewitz, (left), secretary of the Greater New York CIO Council, and Dominic Paduano, of the New York City Central Trades and Labor Council, AFL. The CIO and the AFL set up a joint committee to campaign for O'Dwyer and ex-Gov. Herbert Lehman. The latter was elected as U. S. Senator, succeeding Robert F. Wagner.

Here are some of the other election results, by states:

Pennsylvania: In Pittsburgh and Scranton, united labor committees elected Democratic mayors by record majorities. Mayor David L. Lawrence of Pittsburgh was re-elected with 151,944 votes to his Republican opponent's 95,630—the largest majority ever given a candidate for mayor.

In Philadelphia, Democrats made a sweep of those city offices open for election this year, giving the Republican machine as good a trouncing as it has had in 24 years.

Richardson Dilworth led the Democratic ticket, taking over the city treasurer's office by 464,847 to 353,156. About 80% of those eligible to vote actually did so, an astounding turnout in any year.

CIO-PAC regards the Philadelphia results as the most significant of all from the point of view of sheer organization of the labor vote, because, it points out, in Philadelphia there was no "glamor" candidate to oppose. "It was a matter of working in the wards and precincts to attack a hydra-headed monster and lop off all its heads," PAC says. "We really had to set up a machine against a machine, and we did it."

Ohio: Thomas A. Burke, Democratic mayor of Cleveland, was re-elected over Franklin Polk, Republic, by 158,198 to 79,987 -a victory so sweeping that it was immediately rumored that PAC would back Burke for Senator against Robert A. Taft in 1950. (As of now, Ohio PAC has not made up its mind whom to back. At least two other candidates are under consideration.) This Burke is not to be confused with Rep. Thomas H. Burke (D., O.), only CIO member presently in Congress.

Michigan: CIO-backed George Edwards was defeated for Mayor of Detroit by AFL-backed Albert J. Cobo. The margin was a little over 100,000 votes. The total vote was 513,024—largest turnout of Detroit voters ever recorded in any election. Cobo, the Republican city treasurer, campaigned on a reform platform and had the newspapers with him. There appears little doubt that if labor had been united on a candidate its wishes would have prevailed.

Commie Davis Loses In NY City

Benjamin J. Davis Jr., the only Communist member of the present New York City council, and the last remaining major Communist office holder in the U. S., was beaten by almost three to one last Tuesday.

He was licked by Earl Brown, an independent Democrat and a reporter for Life Magazine, in the 21st Manhattan district. Brown was backed by the Liberal and Republican parties as well.

Davis, one of the 11 Communist leaders recently convicted of conspiring to advocate the violent overthrow of the government, had the support of the CP and ALP, but Brown snowed him under by 63,030 to 21,962.

Labor Wins, Loses On State, Local Issues

A HOST OF STATE and local issues went to referendum Nov. 8, and here again labor made its weight felt.

In Tennessee, for the 12th time, liberals and labor put up a proposal to call a limited convention to consider amendments to the state constitution, the oldest unreformed constitution in the nation. The previous 11 efforts had resulted in failure. This time, with labor united and really working, the proposition carried. The constitution, for the first time since it was written in 1870, now stands a chance of being amended, provided the labor and liberal groups can keep the steam up as the proposals go through the tortuous amendment process laid down in the document.

Nine proposals are being pressed including poll tax repeal, revision of the taxation clause, and increased municipal home rule.

Virginia voters turned down a proposition widely billed as "poll tax repeal," which actually would have (a) empowered the legislature to fix any qualifications for voters it saw fit, (b) added a new $3 annual tax, and (c) switched registration laws to provide annual, instead of permanent, registration and make it mandatory that regristration be held 120 days before an election. Feeling this to be just a little worse than the present voting laws, the labor groups went solidly against it and, with the help of those who favor outright retention of the poll tax, prevailed.

In New York, eight constitutional amendments and three proposals for public housing were approved. In Pennsylvania, veterans won a $500,000,000 bonus; in New Jersey, a similar plan was rejected. In California, control of the vast state pension adopted last year was returned to the legislature, the eligibility age was upped from 63 to 65, and the counties were required to take control of the plan and bear their share of financing it. Also in California, a $250,000,0000 bond issue for school construction was approved. In all of these issues, labor made its voice heard, with mingled results.

IN OHIO, VOTERS repealed the state tax on colored oleomargarine, and also approved the "Massachusetts-type" ballot. This ballot form, which all of Ohio labor vigorously opposed, was put up to the voters by the backers of Robert A. Taft, who reportely spent $250,000 to get it adopted. Taft's crowd figure to pick up 100,000 votes by this maneuver (i. e. hopes there'll be 100,000 fewer labor votes cast).

The Massachusetts ballot groups candidates by position, not by party. The voter must vote for each candidate, picking out the ones who are backed by the party he favors by looking for the relatively small initial showing party affiliation. Hence it is impossible to vote a straight party ticket with one mark on the ballot. CIO and all other Ohio unions see in this maneuver a scheme to make it as hard as possible for workers, who don't have time to stand in line and fill out complicated forms such as this, to vote. PAC points out that in Worchester, Mass., a relatively small town, the Massachusetts-type ballot is five feet long. Kroll says this was just made PAC three times as determined to throw out Taft.

Texas, in a light vote, turned down a poll-tax repealer; labor groups will try again as soon as possible, meanwhile concentrating with increased vigor on statewide education.

New Jersey: Gov. Alfred Driscoll, Republican, was re-elected over State Senator Elmer H. Wene, Democrat, by 822,610 to 761,668. CIO-PAC indorsed no candidate in this race. The AFL indorsed Driscoll. Wene's defeat was credited by all concerned to his connection with the discredited Hague machine. In spite of Driscoll's victory, the Republicans are worried. Driscoll carried Hudson County by 1,550 votes, compared with the plurality of 69,729 received by the Democratic candidate in 1948. And he carried only 12 of the 21 counties in the state, compared with the 19 he carried a year ago.

Massachusetts: In a non-partisan Boston mayoralty election, in which CIO took no position, Democrat John B. Hynes defeated exboss James M. Curley and three other candidates.

Far and away the most important of these victories is that of Lehman, because of the pivotal importance of New York in the national political picture, but the others clearly show what labor can do.

VICTOR LAWRENCE, Jones & Laughlin vice president, and Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray sign a contract ending the strike at J. & L. by providing a non-contributory pension system that pays a minimum of $100 a month, and an insurance plan financed by company and workers.

BACK TO WORK: Here are a few of the employes of the Jones & Laughlin Corp. going back to work at the company's South Side establishment in Pittsburgh after the new contract was signed with the CIO Steelworkers. The pact ended a 39-day walkout.

U. S. Steel Agrees To Pay Pensions

By GLORIA CAPLAN

IT TOOK the report of a Presidential fact - finding board, preceded by weeks of hearings, plus a determined nationwide strike of 31-to-42 days by 500,000 CIO Steelworkers to do the trick—but from now on the steel industry will provide pensions for the men who spend the bulk of their working lives producing steel.

In addition, the steel companies will be financing half—and in some cases more—of the cost of a social insurance plan for their CIO employes.

By the time the industry's traditional pace-setter, U. S. Steel, got around to a settlement, more than 250,000 of the strikers, employed principally by "Big Steel's" major competitors, were already back at work. With the signing of U. S. Steel, the strike was over for another 170,000. Only holdouts remaining were a group of smaller concerns presumably waiting to see what the top company would do.

Also still on the picket lines are 16,000 Steelworkers in nine plants of the Aluminum Co., of America. Union demands here are the same as those made on the steel industry—company- financed pensions and social insurance.

Agreements with most of the steel companies gave the workers more than they had struck for. The walkout began Oct. 1 when all the companies—excepting a few smaller ones—followed U. S. Steel's lead in refusing to pay all the costs of a pension and insurance plan.

Accepting the fact-finding panel's recommendations, the union had reluctantly given up its wage demands, and sought non-contributory pensions costing 6c an hour and social insurance costing 4c. This, Steelworkers and CIO Pres. Philip Murray said, would be the union's rock-bottom basis for settlement.

On the strike's 31st day, Bethlehem—second largest steel producer—signed an agreement with the union which granted substantially more than the pre-strike demands and set a pattern for the rest of the strikebound firms.

Because of varying circumstances, such as the number of employes and the average age, cost of the settlements will vary from company to company. Benefits to workers, however, will be fairly standard.

Settlements provide company-paid pensions of at least $100 a month including Social Security, for workers at 65, after 25 years of service. Benefits will average $110 a month; some will draw as high as $250. Those who reach 65 with 15 to 25 years of service may retire at a pension of $60 to $96 a month. The amount is determined by multiplying the years of service by $4.

Cost of this pension plan to Bethlehem is expected to run above 10c an hour. The union estimates it as closer to 12c.

Most of the settlements provide for payment of pensions to eligible employes who retired over the past two years. Bethlehem went further, permitting payments to all former workers still alive who have ever retired from the company's employ at 65 with the required years of service.

COST OF the social insurance program set up by the new agreements will be shared by the employers and workers. In Bethlehem's case, this calls for a 2½c hourly contribution from the company and each employe. For about 90% of the Bethlehem workers, this payment of 2½c for an insurance program represents in itself a gain of 1-to-1½c. These employes have been financing a "welfare" plan at the rate of 3½ to 4c an hour.

The new program will displace the "welfare" plan and will provide much greater benefits. For each employe there will be a paid-up life insurance policy of at least $2100. These will run as high, depending on the individual's pay, as $4500 and will average about $3000.

Hospitalization up to 70 days will be provided each worker, his wife and dependent children.

Third part of the insurance program provides sick benefits. Workers will receive $26 a week up to 26 weeks to help tide them over during illness.

THE INDUSTRY'S second, third, fourth and fifth largest pins toppled in quick succession, leading the parade of settlements.

All followed, with some variations here and there, the pattern set by Bethlehem.

Bethlehem broke the industry-wide stalemate on the strike's 31st day, the negotiations and dramatic contract signing taking place in Cleveland, O., during the CIO convention.

Unlike U. S. Steel and some of the other concerns, Bethlehem was already financing a pension plan of a sort. Benefits under it were half what the union was seeking, and hundreds of workers had been denied the right to payments by arbitrary decisions of the company's pension board.

These contributions to a pension fund, however, cut down the amount a settlement with the union would cost Bethlehem. This was believed to be the reason for Bethlehem's assumption of leadership, a role that traditionally has belonged to "Big Steel."

Republic Steel and Jones & Laughlin followed the Bethlehem course a week later.

The J & L agreement was like Bethlehem's; Republic's plan differed in that Republic employes will contribute 3½c an hour to the life insurance-sick benefits-hospitalization program, instead of 2½c as provided by the Bethlehem pact. The company will contribute 2½c.

Youngstown Sheet & Tube, fifth largest producer, was next in line, its signature coming at a time when U. S. Steel was in the midst of its first talks with the union since the strike began Oct. 1.

About 40 smaller companies had signed up by the time "Big Steel" got around to talking turkey.

While the strike was moving into its final stages, the bottom fell out of two positions the industry took before the walkout.

● Before the fact-finding board, industry spokesmen had forecast a gloomy period of declining steel profits, beginning with the third quarter of this year. But when third quarter earnings were announced recently, they were enough to warm a stockholder's heart. In the first nine months of 1949, the industry had hit another all-time record.

In the June-through-September quarter, U. S. Steel, for instance, hauled in a net profit of $53,171,-144. This includes the "accelerated depreciation charge" which the company deducts from net profits on its statements, but which are not recognized for tax deduction purposes by the U. S. Bureau of Internal Revenue. The company's 1949 third quarter profits were 13.2% higher than the corresponding quarter of last year.

Based on the first nine months of this year, U. S. Steel's profits (before the strike) were running at an annual rate of $177,631,212 a year—37% higher than last year's record.

At the same time, payroll costs were declining. In the third quarter, wages and salaries and related costs were 12.6% lower than in the same quarter of 1948 and 12.2% less than in the preceding quarter of this year.

● In originally opposing the appointment of a fact-finding board to help settle the steel dispute, the industry insisted that Pres. Truman use the emergency powers of Taft-Hartley instead. Truman refused, insisting that no emergency existed. As the ensuing strike progressed, industry spokesmen and Republican newspapers demanded in a chorus that Truman use the T-H injunction to halt the walkout. The "emergency" was already in existence, they insisted.

When the Bethlehem agreement heralded the end of the walkout, one of the "use T-H" chorus admitted what Pres. Truman and other government spokesmen had said all along.

The Chamber of Commerce, in its November Labor Relations Letter, said:

"Actually, the effect of the strike on the national economy may well be fairly small, in the final analysis. Some further business turndown in the months just ahead is possible, but it seems to have begun before the strike got under way, and developed in spite of, rather than because of, the stoppage."

TWU Steps Up Drive For Improvements

CHEERED BY AN election victory in which they played a big part and restless over the "refrigeration" since May of their 1949 contract demands, 40,000 CIO Transport Workers in New York City are this week beginning a revitalized push for their 1949 program.

To kick off the drive, the union this week will hold a series of shop gate and terminal meetings each morning. The Irish brogue of TWU Pres. Michael Quill will be heard at each of these.

A mass rally at Manhattan Center on Nov. 22 is scheduled to lend impetus to the campaign, which affects both city-owned and private lines in the city.

"Now that the election is over," Quill asserted, "the union will be satisfied with nothing less than its 12 points."

Principal portions of the 12-point goal are the following:

- 21 cents an hour, plus 40-hour week at 48 hours pay.
- Establishment of an "up-to-date" labor relations system in the city's transit industry with recourse to an impartial board in case of disagreement.
- Improvement of the city's retirement system to enable retirement at half pay after 25 years of service regardless of age.
- Three weeks vacation with pay after a year.
- Eleven paid holidays.
- Inclusion of the cost of the health insurance plan in the hourly rate.
- 10 cents hourly differential for night work.

Last year the union won a straight 24-cent hourly boost on both city and private lines. There followed a series of conflicts over retroactivity of the increase. By the time the agreement was reached, contracts had expired many months before. And, since the increase was contingent on fare raises, a further wait of several months was necessary before the raises took effect.

Last May an arbitrator settled some of the retroactivity disputes by awarding the union a portion of the wage increase back to the contracts' expiration dates. In addition, he set a uniform expiration date for all private lines contracts.

A still further battle over retroactivity is now in arbitration again. Involved are six bus lines.

The union recently won a 16-hour strike in Houston, Texas, where 1,200 bus drivers received an 18 cents hourly package increase, pension allowances and other benefits.

The strike was called about two months after TWU was chosen bargaining agent in an NLRB election.

Convention Puts Skids Under Commies

Housecleaning Job 'From Top' Not Enough; Local Unions and Councils Must Oust Reds

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THE CIO SLAPPED the Commies in the teeth and then booted them in the seat of their collective pants at its Cleveland convention.

Even the most stupid of the party liners knew when the session ended that they were through as a force in the CIO.

And people throughout the world knew that the organization headed by Philip Murray had dealt a strong blow to the Russian type of totalitarianism.

When the housecleaning job is completed—and it will be completed before long—the lads and lassies who follow the Kremlin line will have been shorn of the cloak of trade union respectability to which they have been clinging.

Then they will have to travel under their own red flag—if they are able to travel at all.

THE STORY of what happened at Cleveland needs to be told over and over again—without distortion—at union meetings throughout the country, at "bull sessions" in plant locker rooms and whereever else trade unionists get together.

It's a dramatic story, not a dull one. It's an important story.

Here are the essential facts:

A majority of CIO members got fed up with the CPers and decided to drive them out of the organization.

As a result, the convention booted out the Electrical Workers and Farm Equipment Workers and set up machinery for trying 10 other unions on charges of following the party line in violation of CIO policy.

Pres. Ben Gold of the Fur and Leather Workers was denied a seat on the Executive Board because of membership in the Communist Party, and "party line" charges against nine other union leaders were filed.

THE COMMIES, if they follow their customary twisting line, will try to paint themselves as victims of political persecution, as martyrs and as defenders of democratic principles.

They will do this despite the fact that the CIO through democratic convention procedures voted to put them on the skids.

The lefties are now desperately fighting to retain a semblance of a foothold in the American labor movement—and when they're desperate they use all the scurvy tricks they know. And they know many.

The battling that took place before the convention may well resemble a tea party in comparison with what's to come.

Russia isn't going to give up an important part of its U. S. beachhead without ordering the "boys" to shoot the works.

The Amended constitution of the CIO does not mince words where it spells out the ban on Commies.

It says bluntly that those who belong to a Communist, a fascist or other totalitarian movement or who "consistently pursue policies" of such groups cannot serve as CIO officers or board members.

It gives the Executive Board power to lift the charters of unions which consistently follow the party line instead of CIO policy.

The convention acted decisively in the case of two unions and ordered the board to act in the cases of 10 others.

But that's not enough—not nearly enough.

There's a big job ahead throughout the nation for union members who believe in CIO policy and democracy and who oppose red totalitarianism.

It's a job that will have to be done by individuals in local union halls and council headquarters from one end of the country to another.

THE LINE has been sharply and clearly drawn and now it's time to stand up and be counted.

Nobody can now argue that a person can be a "good" Communist and a loyal CIO member at the same time.

Nobody can claim that the policies of the CIO and the Communist Party run parallel.

To put it bluntly, the convention sounded a call for unions everywhere to heave the lefties out on their necks.

The job can and should be done without hysterically pursuing the tactics which the reds themselves use.

It can be done democratically and it should be done quickly.

There's no better time to start than right now!

Shape of Things to Come

He's a guy with a union card in his pocket and a picket sign on his shoulder.

He hit the bricks back on Oct. 1 after the steel industry gave a "final no" to the Steelworkers' request for pensions and social insurance.

He had a pretty good idea that the strike wouldn't end in a few days and he knew that a month or more out of work would really put the pinch on him and his family.

He knew what he was striking for. It's not hard to visualize how it would be to draw a nice pension check every month after reaching retirement age.

But we have a hunch that he undersold the importance of the role he was playing. We have an idea he didn't consider himself as a fellow who was helping make important trade union history.

And we're willing to bet he scoffed a bit the first time somebody said he was "fighting for all American labor."

Yet that's exactly what the Steelworkers were doing when they shut down the industry.

They were battling in the only way left open to them to establish a broad new concept of industry's responsibility for the welfare of those it employs. Industry, in the main, had been shirking that responsibility for years.

Bethlehem Steel, breaking the industry's solid front, began setting a new pattern when it accepted the union's non-contributory pension program. Others then began following suit.

And as strikers began returning to their jobs it wasn't hard to see the shape of things to come—better things.

The security they'll achieve—and other workers will achieve, too—will repay many, many times the high cost of a nationwide steel strike.

'Buy In Europe In Order To Sell In Europe'

"A LOWERING of living standards in Europe as a whole will have a depressing effect on living standards in the United States."

That warning was contained in a special study of Europe's economy prepared by the Economic Cooperation Administration and the Dept. of Commerce. The report was prepared by Wayne C. Taylor, former assistant secretary of commerce and now an aide to ECA Administrator Paul Hoffman.

The report underscored the fact that international trade must be a two-way proposition.

"We must buy in order to sell. If we do not import we will soon be unable to export," the report declared. In the past 35 years, U. S. exports to the rest of the world have far exceeded our purchases abroad, and the gap between our selling and buying is greater than ever before. The gap—the "dollar gap"—is having serious affects on many parts of the world's economy.

THE FOREIGN assistance programs so far have been essential, the report declared.

"But it is time to look beyond salvaging operations. The dollar gap, it has now become clear, is a basic international economic problem. Apart from any reluctance we Americans may feel about carrying financial burdens for others indefinitely our international commitments reflect our desire and our considered determinaiton to cooperate with other countries in finding real solutions for basic international economic problems. Not just stopgaps."

Government grants and loans to foreign countries have, in effect, been conscious subsidies, the report continued, since the dollars have come back to this country quickly through the purchase of commodities by the recipient countries.

Recognizing that there is some fear in the United States that an increase of imports from Marshall Plan countries would jolt both our domestic and export markets, the report pointed out:

"There is existing and potential demand in the United States for a larger volume of goods and services than is now or ever has been available."

WE MUST get back to competition, the report stresses, but adds, "Our insistence on the opportunity to compete with others carries with it an obligation to let others compete with us."

The report points out that "in general, European countries are not well adapted to compete successfully in the fields served by American mass-production industries, where American techniques, traditions, and capacity for mass consumption give domestic industries a tremendous initial advantage.

"In the special-skill industries, however, which include the manufacture of specialized tools and machinery, as well as handicraft, artistic, and artisan products, the advantage frequently lies with Europe. This is likewise true for such products as wines and perfumes whose individual qualities depend upon their being made out of raw materials found only in particular European localities."

"A JOINT effort should be made by labor and management, preferably acting jointly, to raise labor's productivity, to restore and increase its skills, by higher standards of living, improved working conditions, security of employment, training programs, and refresher courses," the report said.

It was suggested to American labor and business that they help to publicize the importance of imports as a means of paying for our exports, rather than by international grants and loans which are a burden to the tax-payers—wage earners and businessmen alike.

"Naw, let him find out for himself."

CIO Newsman Gets ECA Post

HUGH SUTHERLAND, Philadelphia newspaperman, has gone to Paris to take up his duties as special media officer with the Labor Information Section of ECA.

Sutherland worked 12 years, excluding wartime Army service, for the Philadelphia Record as reporter and rewrite man. The morning after Pearl Harbor Sutherland enlisted in the Army, served in the invasion of Germany and was discharged as a major.

He is a member of the CIO Newspaper Guild, and performed strike duties during the three-month walkout which was ended by sale of the Record in January 1947.

Since then, Sutherland has been in public relations work in Philadelphia. His duties with ECA will center about labor's representation in films, radio programs, exhibits and other special information media.

The 'Vote for CIO' Signs Really Stuck

IT, LIKE MANY other organizing campaigns, was a tough battle from the very day the first organizer tried to sign up the first worker.

The plant was located in a town which had no labor movement and it was operated by men who were determined not to deal with unions.

Management made no pretense of abiding by the Wagner Act and it boasted openly that the organizing drive would be smashed.

The organizers boasted just as openly that the plant would be organized.

BECAUSE THE workers had little knowledge of unionism it was expected that the campaign would be a fairly long one.

Weeks were spent setting up a functioning local organizing committee—and then it fell to pieces when several of the local leaders were fired.

"You're being discharged for disloyalty to the company," they were told.

Finally another committee was set up and it functioned secretly in an effort to avoid additional firings.

Workers said they wanted a union but for a long time they appeared afraid to sign membership cards.

THE ORGANIZERS finally decided to bring the campaign out in the open and make wide use of publicity methods.

Efforts to buy advertising space in the local weekly paper failed.

The small radio station in the town refused to sell time to the CIO.

An old mimeograph was shipped into town and the organizers began turning out leaflets.

Leaflets distributed at the plant gates were frequently torn up—because there were always company representatives present to check on those who read the union's messages.

Posters tacked on poles near the plant were torn down almost as soon as they were put in place.

AS THE DATE for an NLRB election approached, the union-minded workers became a bit bolder.

This indicated that CIO sentiment was growing, but the organizers were uncertain as to whether they would win. They felt encouraged and stepped up the drive as much as possible.

For some reason or other, the feeling of fear which had permeated the atmosphere of the entire plant suddenly began disappearing about a week before the election.

Workers began talking openly about joining or not joining the union.

Two days before the election a number of organizing leaflets were posted on bulletin boards throughout the plant. Foremen tore them down immediately.

ON THE DAY before the election, men walked quietly to their jobs. Everybody seemed to be waiting for something unusual to happen.

An hour or so later there was a sudden burst of laughter among the workmen, who were pointing upward.

On the ceiling, about 15 feet from the floor, were dozens of signs, printed on gummed paper. They had been tossed into the air on wet rags and when they hit they stuck.

They said, "Vote for the CIO."

And the next day a majority of the workers did.

Former GE Officer Says—

Big Business Gives Too Much Power To Too Few

By NATHAN ROBERTSON

AN IMPRESSIVE list of small businessmen have appeared before the Celler investigating committee of the House to warn against the dangers of monopoly and big business. But the sharpest warning has come from a big businessman.

He is T. K. Quinn, former vice president of General Electric, who resigned from his giant concern 13 years ago in protest over its monopolistic policies.

Quinn told the committee that such tremendous concentrations of economic power as GE and GM "discourage constructive competition, creative enterprise and new equity investment," and are the "major cause of the trend that Herbert Hoover recently said is 'blissfully driving us down the back road at top speed . . . on the last mile to collectivism'."

Speaking as a man who has seen big business from the inside, Quinn used forceful language in describing its dangers. He said a $1 million business is a good sized business, a $10 million business is big.

"WHEN WE come to a corporation which is from a hundred to a thousand times bigger than a $1 million or a $10 million company (one with tens or hundreds of thousands of employes and stockholders), we have a Frankenstein creature on our hands, and these are the 'monsters' which threaten our democracy," Quinn said.

"In my judgment," Quinn said, "unless they are controlled and restrained they are evil because they constitute too much power in too few hands. Human beings, including you and me, are simply not good enough to be entrusted with so much power over others. The fact that some corporation officials in positions of great power are good and able men is no answer —not any more of a justification than the occasional appearance of a 'good' king justified the system of monarchy."

There are now, Quinn said, more than 100 of these "monsters" in America, and 54 of them with gross assets of more than $1 billion. Many of them are richer than many States.

Their managements are selfperpetuating; the officers are not elected, but merely favored or picked from close associates for their positions; and individual stockholders "have no more voice or control in them than Russian peasants," he said.

"Plans to cut governmental expenditures, reduce taxes, and regulate trade unions may be noble enough in intent," Quinn added, "but the place to strike first is at excessive concentrated private economic power, which is the cause of big government and big unions, and the trend toward Socialism."

Quinn denounced as "simply not true" the claim that "business must be big to be efficient." He said that GM was not a more efficient automobile manufacturer because it owns Frigidaire and truck lines and diesel and aircraft engines and electric motors and washing machine plants. It doesn't have to own more than 100 factories to be efficient in making automobiles. Efficient production, even mass production, is keyed to the efficiency in a single plant.

QUINN denounced as nonsense statistics showing that the number of small firms is greater today than a few years ago. Most of the so-called independents, he explained, are automobile dealers or electric equipment dealers who are controlled by GM or GE, or similar giants and are "examples of complete subjection."

The public is misinformed and uninformed on the subject of monopoly, Quinn said, because the press takes the side of big business from which it gets advertising. He cited the current treatment of the A&P case in the newspapers as an example. "The attitude of much of the press is in itself," he said, "a blatant manifestation of the evil effects of concentrated economic power."

Drastic legislation is the only remedy for the situation, Quinn told the Celler Committee. He recommended that all corporations with assets of more than $100 million, or found to be dominating an industry, be required to take out federal charters limiting their activities if they engaged in more than one line of business, and strictly regulating their conduct in many other respects. They would be offered the alternative of breaking themselves up into smaller units voluntarily.

"I, for one," Quinn concluded, "want and shall continue to work for relief from monster corporation domination, and for the restoration of our economy to honest freedom of opportunity and private enterprise for the greatest number. To the extent that we fail in that best cause, I propose to accept the welfare state and if unavoidable, eventual socialism, in preference to selfish, private controls."

Pictures Couldn't Be Crowded Into Convent

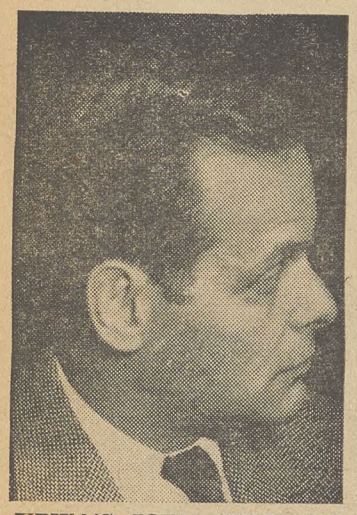
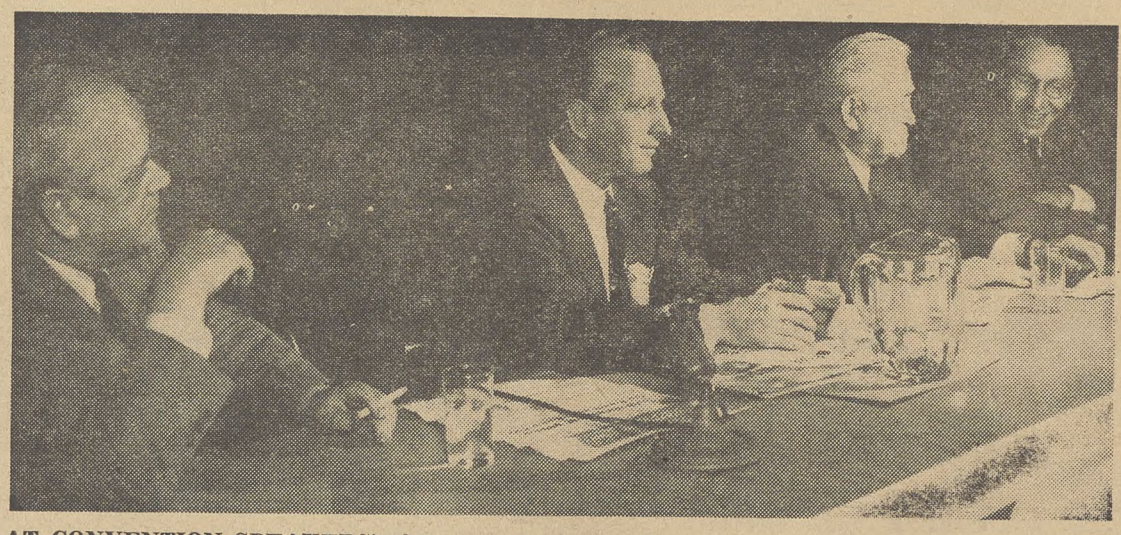
UAW'S WALTER REUTHER

Reuther, who spoke for the amendment to bar Communists from the CIO Executive Board, said: "The minority want all the rights, they want all the protection, they want all the benefits that flow from being part of this voluntary association, but they want none of the obligations and they refuse to accept any of the responsibilities."



UPWA'S JOHN STANLEY

Speaking against the amendment to bar Communists from the CIO Executive Board, Stanley said: "If we are to amend this constitution, we should amend it for the evils that are present in the labor movement today and which need extra attention, we should amend it to go forward and organize the unorganized."



AT CONVENTION SPEAKERS' platform are Pres. John Green of the Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, Textile Workers Counsel Isadore Katz, CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood and Dir. George Baldanzi of the Southern Organizing Drive.

The convention heard Haywood and Baldanzi make stirring addresses. In Pres. Murray's report to the convention, it was noted that failure of the 81st Congress to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act had made organizing more difficult, particularly in the South. The convention voted renewed efforts to elect a Congress that would kick out T-H, and the Legal Dept. made a detailed report on the strangling effects of the statute.

REMEMBER that deluge of full-page ads with which the Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. showered the country after the Government filed suit against it for alleged violations of the anti-trust laws?

Well, one organization decided the public shouldn't be hoodwinked by those ads, and took it upon itself to answer A & P in full-page ads placed in leading newspapers.

The Natl. Federation of Independent Business sent the ad to newspapers in San Diego, Calif.; Austin, Tex; Mason City, Iowa; Quincy, Mass., and Washington, D. C. It appeared in all these cities—except the nation's capital.

Rural Life Unit Hears J. Brophy

Cooperation between farm and labor groups in America was strongly urged by John Brophy, director of CIO Industrial Union Councils, in a speech delivered Nov. 7, before the National Catholic Rural Life Conference, Columbus, Ohio.

The CIO is trying, Brophy said, "to learn more and more about the problems of the American farmer in order that we can work with him economically and politically in solving those problems.

"We understand very well the need of the farmers of America to keep some kind of government floor under their income, and we also know that unless this can be done the farmers will not have the money to buy the goods the workers turn out in the factories."

Farmers should understand in return, Brophy added, that collective bargaining in industry is very similar to agriculture's procedure in trying to maintain its essential price levels.

Brophy described the CIO's program for regional development and conservation, explaining that part of that policy called for "a sound decentralization of industry and population and for encouragement of our smaller communities everywhere."

Guild Leaves IOJ

The Executive Board of the CIO Newspaper Guild has voted to disaffiliate the union from the Intl. Organization of Journalists, on grounds that that group is Communist-dominated.

Lobbyists Spent $6 Million During 81st Session

LOBBYISTS spent at least $6,293,622 trying to influence the first session of the 81st Congress—almost $2,000,000 more than they did on the last session of the late, unlamented 80th.

The amount, which averages out to $11,852 per member of Congress, tops all previous records for comparable periods—and this is only the reported amount. It does NOT include any figure on expenditures by the National Association of Manufacturers, which as of Nov. 3 had submitted no report.

Labor's share of this whopping total, including CIO, AFL, railway labor and unaffiliated groups, was $208,399, or about 3%. CIO's share was $36,126.

The fanciest spending was done by "business groups, including organizations for general business, building, real estate, finance, food and agricultural products, oil, gas, mining, power, communications, transportation and miscellaneous." They reported a combined total of $2,444,637.

THE BIGGEST single spender however, was the American Medical Association, listed as a "professional organization," which levied an assessment of $25 per member and reported expenditures of $1,225,028.

(The Taft-Hartley restriction against political contributions from union or corporation treasuries does not apply to the AMA and it doesn't care who knows it.)

AMA claims that only half of this amount can be put down as expense "for influencing legislation," but the Justice Dept. is unsure on this point. The Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act, under which these reports are made, says that organizations need report only if their "principal" interest is in influencing legislation, but the Justice Dept. says "principal" includes all those who have substantial legislative interests.

The purpose of the AMA assessment was frankly to defeat national health legislation, and a large part of its budget was spent in inflammatory and misleading newspaper advertising and the issuance of dubious public statements.

At any rate, if only half the reported AMA amount went directly for lobbying, it is still the largest expenditure listed by a single organization since the Act went into effect on Aug. 2, 1946. The next largest was reported by the AFL, which spent $834,565 for the full year 1947 on its large-scale campaign to defeat the Taft-Hartley Act.

Next biggest single current spender after AMA was the Committee for Constitutional Government, Inc., with $443,756. This organization fronted for the Iron and Steel Institute during the steel strike by "impartially" attacking President Truman's establishment of the impartial fact-finding board, while the Institute, sensing its unpopularity, stayed in the background.

The figures are not conclusive, since organizations and individuals follow different reporting methods. Some file entire expenses whether or not "directly" connected with lobbying; others file their full budget but list expenditures they judge were for direct lobbying; still others file only what they believe are lobbying expenses.

The U. S. Chamber of Commerce, following the second, or "allocation," method of filing, listed $71,379, to which should be added $45,844 listed by the same method for the Council of State Chambers of Commerce. In 1948, by comparison, the NAM said it had allocated $80,019.

The totals in many instances do not include lobbyists' salaries, since the lobbyists are supposed to report their own. And the grand total by no means includes all the registered organizations. This is for 253 organizations; a total of 1625 individuals and organizations have registered since the law was enacted.

Daggett Elected MEBA President

H. L. Daggett of Seattle, Wash., president of the CIO's National Marine Engineers Beneficial Association, together with other newly elected officers of the union, was installed in office, Nov. 7, at MEBA headquarters in Washington.

MEBA Pres. Daggett succeeds Samuel J. Hogan, the union's deceased president.

Elected in a recent referendum. were William O. Holmes, Washington, D. C., secy.-treas:; Ray Robinson, Portland, Ore., 1st vice-pres., and W. L. Ball, Norfolk, Va., 2nd vice-pres., Charles Evans, Tampa, Fla., 3rd vice- pres.

Trial Boards Appointed

AT THE post-convention Board meeting, President Murray appointed, and the Board approved, three trial boards to investigate nine union leaders on charges of having consistently followed the Communist Party line.

The trial boards:

1. Emil Rieve (TWA), Joseph Beirne (CWA) and Harry Sayre (Paperworkers), to investigate charges against Office and Professional Workers Pres. James Durkin, United Public Workers Pres. Abram Flaxer, and ACA Pres. Joseph Selly.

2. Jacob Potofsky (ACW), Emil Mazey (UAW) and Joe Curran (NMU), to investigate charges against United Furniture Workers Pres. Morris Pizer, Food & Tobacco Pres. Donald Henderson, and Mine, Mill Pres. John Clark.

3. O. A. Knight (Oil), Jim Fadling (Woodworkers), and Joseph Fisher (Utility), to investigate Longshoremen's Pres. Harry Bridges, Fishermen's Pres. J. F. Jurich, and Marine Cooks and Stewards Pres. Hugh Bryson.

Ben Gold, Fur Workers' President, was not charged because Pres. Murray ruled that Gold, an admitted member of the Communist Party, was not eligible to sit on the Board under the new Constitutional provisions adopted at the Convention.

The Board also set up a committee to investigate Curran and William Steinberg (ARA), on charges by Harry Bridges that Curran and Steinberg had indulged in raiding, etc. Curran insisted that a hearing be held. The committee: David McDonald (USA), John Green (Shipbuilding), and Jack Moran (CWA).

Trial of Harry Bridges To Open This Week

Trial of Pres. Harry Bridges and two others officials of the Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Unions on charges growing out of his naturalization as a U. S. citizen in 1945, are scheduled to open in San Francisco Nov. 14.

The Government maintains that Bridges and his associates conspired to produce false information at wartime Government naturalization hearings that the longshore leader was not a member of the Communist Party. On trial with him are Vice-Pres. J. R. Robertson and Henry Schmidt, an ILWU representative.

Economic Outlook X-rays Monopolies

BIG BUSINESS is getting bigger and bigger and bigger.

A few big corporations have swallowed up many of our most important industries. In other sections of the U. S. economy, the trend toward concentrated power is continuing at full steam ahead.

"Unless this immense corporate power is checked, the very processes of democratic and representative government will be undemined, and public welfare will give way to corporate greed and interest."

These observations were made by the Economic Outlook, monthly bulletin of the CIO Education & Research Dept. in the latest of a series of study on corporation monopolies.

For years, the Outlook warned, big business interests have used every possible dodge to get around the anti-trust laws. So far they have been successful.

A bill to close up one anti-trust loophole by preventing one firm from buying out the assets of another has already been approved by the House. But, the Outlook pointed out, "reactionaries on all sides are, of course, trying to rally opposition to the bill (HR 2734) . . . If the Congress is serious about combatting monopoly, this amendment should be passed.

The Nov. 14 issue of Life magazine, which editorializes about the Outlook's attack on monopoly control, thinks the CIO should "improve its sense of humor" about big business.

Life, one of the country's biggest magazines, and published by one of the country's biggest publishing houses, thinks the CIO is seeing ghosts under the bed. It points to the fact that Bethlehem —not exactly a puny steel firm— signed with the union before U. S. Steel did and seeks to leave the impression that there's therefore no hint of monopoly in the steel industry!

BUT, THE Outlook shows, three steel companies—U. S., Bethlehem and Republic—own 49.2% of the industry's assets and control 58.9% of its ingot capacity.

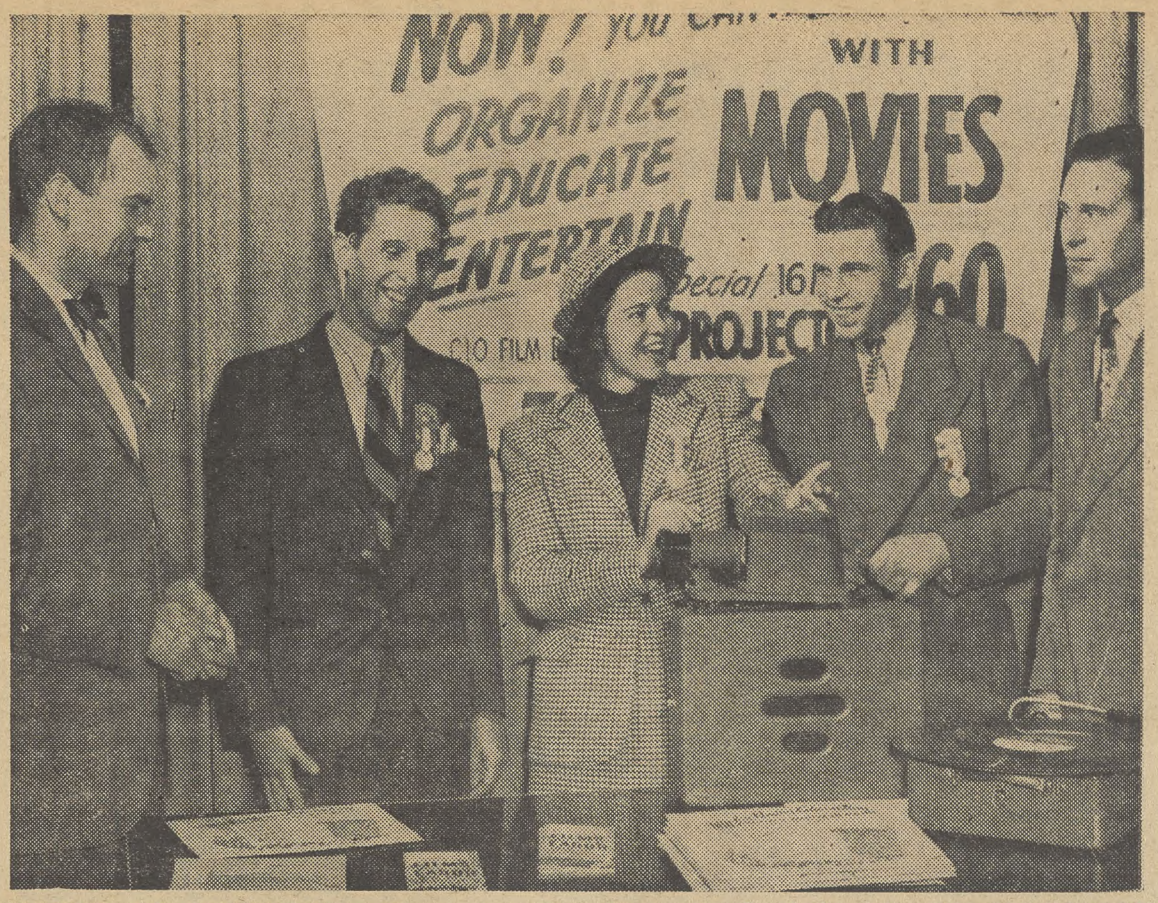
Less than six firms control over 92% of the linoleum industry; 95% of the tin-fabricating industry; and 100% of the aluminum industry.

Less than six firms own 77% of the cigarette industry; 72% of the distilling industry; 70% of rubber tire production; and 64% of meat products.

Single companies control huge sectors of productive power in many industries. Alcoa, for instance, controls 55% of the aluminum industry's facilities; American Can has 55% of the tin can production; General Motors, nearly 41% of motor vehicle production; U. S. Steel, 35% of the country's primary steel output; Intl. Harvester, 45.3% of the total production of farm machinery.

The giant, monopolistic corporations are fighting laws that might regulate them, are seeking to "sabotage" the work of federal government agencies, and are wielding powerful influence, to veto the appointment of government officials whom they dislike.

The problem of "restraining and controlling" these great companies is one of democracy's greatest problems, the Outlook concludes.



MOVIES AS TEACHERS: The value of movies as a union educational medium is being proclaimed by members of the CIO Education and Research Dept. to German and Austrian trade unionists who were brought to the U. S. on funds raised by education directors of CIO unions to attend CIO schools. L. to r., Stuart Brock of the Education and Research Dept.; August Helmer, secretary of the Food Workers Union, Vienna; Mrs. Jane Mandel of the Education and Research Dept.; John Dvorak of the Building and Furniture Workers, Vienna, and Harry Goebel of the Youth Trade Union Group, Frankfort.

Epidemics Depleting Polio Funds

THE HEAVY polio epidemics of 1949 have strained the resources of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis far more than people realize, Miss Elaine Whitelaw, national director of women's activities for the foundation, said last week in appealing for 200,000 women volunteers to aid the fund drive.

Speaking at the fifth annual conference of the organization's women state advisers in Washington, Miss Whitelaw said:

"Few people realize that assistance to polio patients through the National Foundation is endangered, not by lack of interest and concern, but by utter depletion of March of Dimes funds.

"The terrible epidemics of 1949, coming at a time when epidemic reserves were low because of previous years of high incidence, put the greatest burden of financial responsibility on the National Foundation in a period when it had less money with which to do the job.

"It is estimated that it will cost $20 million merely to continue medical treatment for those stricken in 1949 who still will need care in 1950. And this makes no provision for the inevitable caseload of 1950 which Dr. Leonard A. Scheele of the Public Health Service warns us, may also be large.

"The whole situation presents an enormous challenge, particularly to women, who have always led the fight against polio in this country. We must enlist the active support and personal participation of at least 200,000 additional women volunteers to help us now meet the two-fold responsibility of providing medical care for polio patients and raising sufficient March of Dimes fund to assure our ability to do this without curtailing scientific research to find the key to control of polio."

Urge Public 'Don't Buy Wilson Meat'

SUPPORTING THE CIO Packinghouse Workers, delegates to the CIO Convention unanimously adopted a resolution calling upon the consuming public to "refrain from purchasing the products of Wilson & Co."

The convention pledged to bring "to the attention of the public and of union members throughout the nation the facts concerning the labor policies of Wilson & Co."

Among the Wilson anti-union practices listed in the resolution are:

(1) "In the middle of 1948 Wilson & Co. acting without a legal justification or right announced that it was no longer going to abide by its contract with the CIO Packinghouse Workers."

(2) Wilson "is the only major meat packing and processing company in the United States which does not have a union contract, despite the fact that a series of NLRB elections has reaffirmed by overwhelming majorities the desire of the Wilson employes to be represented by the UPWA."

(3) Since destroying its labor contract, Wilson "has discharged or laid off several hundred union members and leaders and otherwise engaged in systematic discrimination gainst employes because of their loyalty to the union."

NLRB Examiner Urges $250,000 Back Pay For 223 In Texas

By HANK RABUN

THE STUBBORN resistance of East Texas employers to CIO Organizing Committee campaigns is at long last kicking back in their faces, Robert Oliver, State CIO Director in Texas, reported to George Baldanzi, National Director of the CIO Organizing Committee.

An award of approximately $250,000 in back pay, believed to be a record penalty in the South, and reinstatement of 223 employes has been recommended by a NLRB trial examiner in a case filed by CIO against Cummer-Graham Co. which operates box-making plants in Longview and Mineola.

The staggering recommendation was the fourth knock-out blow delivered in a month by NLRB and the Wage-Hour Administration in cases filed by CIO against East Texas employers.

The NLRB action against Cummer-Graham Co. climaxed a three-year fight by the CIO Committee and a 63-day NLRB hearing on unfair labor practice charges.

Employes of the company's two plants struck during an organizing campaign because of the company's unfair labor practices. The strikes started in October, 1946, and were called off four months later.

CHARGES FILED against the company alleged that management had refused to recognize the union and that the company had refused to reinstate strikers to their jobs.

Oliver praised R. W. Purcell, CIO Committee representative, who handled the Cummer-Graham organizing campaign and was assigned to hold the units together during the long waiting period.

Purcell rounded up more than 200 witnesses for the NLRB attorney in the case.

"Union enthusiasm in the two units has remained at a high peak despite the long, heartbreaking wait," Oliver said. "Purcell turned in a masterful job through it all."

The other cases were:

1. Employes of the Tyler Courier-Times, a daily newspaper, were paid $4800 for back overtime as the result of a Wage-Hour award in a CIO suit filed against the employer. Editorial employes voted for CIO representation in an NLRB election held in the summer.

2. An NLRB decision against Texas Long Leaf Lumber Co. at Trinity and New Willard awarded $3900 in back pay to 18 employes and reinstatement of 14 discharged workers. CIO filed the suit following an election victory in the two lumber plants in the past summer.

3. An NLRB trial examiner recommended payment of approximately $10,000 in back pay and reinstatement of 12 discharged workers in an award against Cleveland Veneer Co. at Cleveland in a case filed by CIO following an election victory last winter.

The recommendation against the Cummer-Graham Co. also instructed the company to cease and desist from anti-union activities, to bargain upon request with the CIO Woodworkers and to award each discharged worker with 25 years of service a watch in line with company policy.

Company attorneys have indicated that they will fight the case through the full panel of NLRB and on to Federal Courts.

CIO Enters Calif. Picketing Case

THE CIO HAS filed an amicus brief with the U. S. Supreme Court in an effort to win the setting aside of a contempt of court decision handed down by a Contra Costa, Calif., court against two pickets, it was announced by CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg.

The two men — John Hughes and Louis Richardson—were arrested while picketing a California retail store in behalf of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. The men and the organization had charged that the store refused to employ Negroes in proportion to its Negro trade.

The California Superior Court had previously held that such picketing was intended for an "improper" purpose and had enjoined it. Hughes and Richardson were held in contempt for violating the injunction.

The case has been appealed to the U. S. Supreme Court, and is due for hearing on either Nov. 8 or 9.

Newest Board Member

Beirne Went To Work For Western Electric At 18

JOSEPH A. BEIRNE is not only president of CIO's newest affiliate, the 320,000-member Communications Workers of America, but he also is CIO's newest vice-president, elected to that post at the Cleveland convention.

Beirne has led the phone union since 1943. Before that he was its vice-president; one of its executive board members since it was formed in 1939. CWA was independent until it went into CIO after a nation-wide referendum in which the members voted two-to-one for affiliation.

Beirne came up from the ranks. He started work at the age of 16—as an office boy for the F. W. Woolworth Co. Two years later he went to work for the Western Electric Co. in its manufacturing division—as a utility boy. Later he went into the equipment department, where he worked as a repairman until he became a full-time union officer in 1939.

He's been in union office since that time.

BEIRNE left high school in the the second year, but finished his education through night school classes, completing high school and getting in two years of college.

He was born in Jersey City, Feb. 16, 1911. His father, now dead, was Irish, as is his mother. He is married, has three children, all girls.

His main activity is union work, which keeps him well occupied. He has been active in local New Jersey politics, where he was a councilman, a job he resigned in December, 1946, when he moved to Washington.

Beirne has been one of the prime movers in the evolution of the telephone labor movement out of its company union days before 1935, through the independent period, into formation of the National Federation of Telephone Workers in 1939, replacement of NFTW by CWA, still independent, and finally affiliation of CWA with the CIO last May.

Throughout all this period he has stood firmly for a closely-knit, adequately-financed international union with enough centralized authority over strikes, and centralized approval or disapproval of contracts so that efficient operation of the union is possible.

CWA has a good three-fifths of the telephone industry in America organized. The union holds contracts with 16 of the 21 operating telephone companies in the Bell System, and with the Long Lines Department of the parent company, AT&T. CWA also holds contracts for Western Electric installers and workers in the Distributing Department, and production workers in several Western Electric manufacturing plants. It represents Bell Laboratories workers.

About 15,000 of the 320,000 workers represented by CWA are employed by some 40-odd independent phone companies outside Bell control. These companies vary in size from those employing only a dozen or so to some which employ 1,000 or more.

JUST this week, CWA moved across the border into Canada, when 1500 workers in Saskatchewan voted to join the telephone union. CWA also has plans for the radio broadcasting industry. Negotiations also are under way to bring the 2000-member independent National Association of Broadcast Engineers and Technicians into the union. A membership referendum is soon to be held on the question.

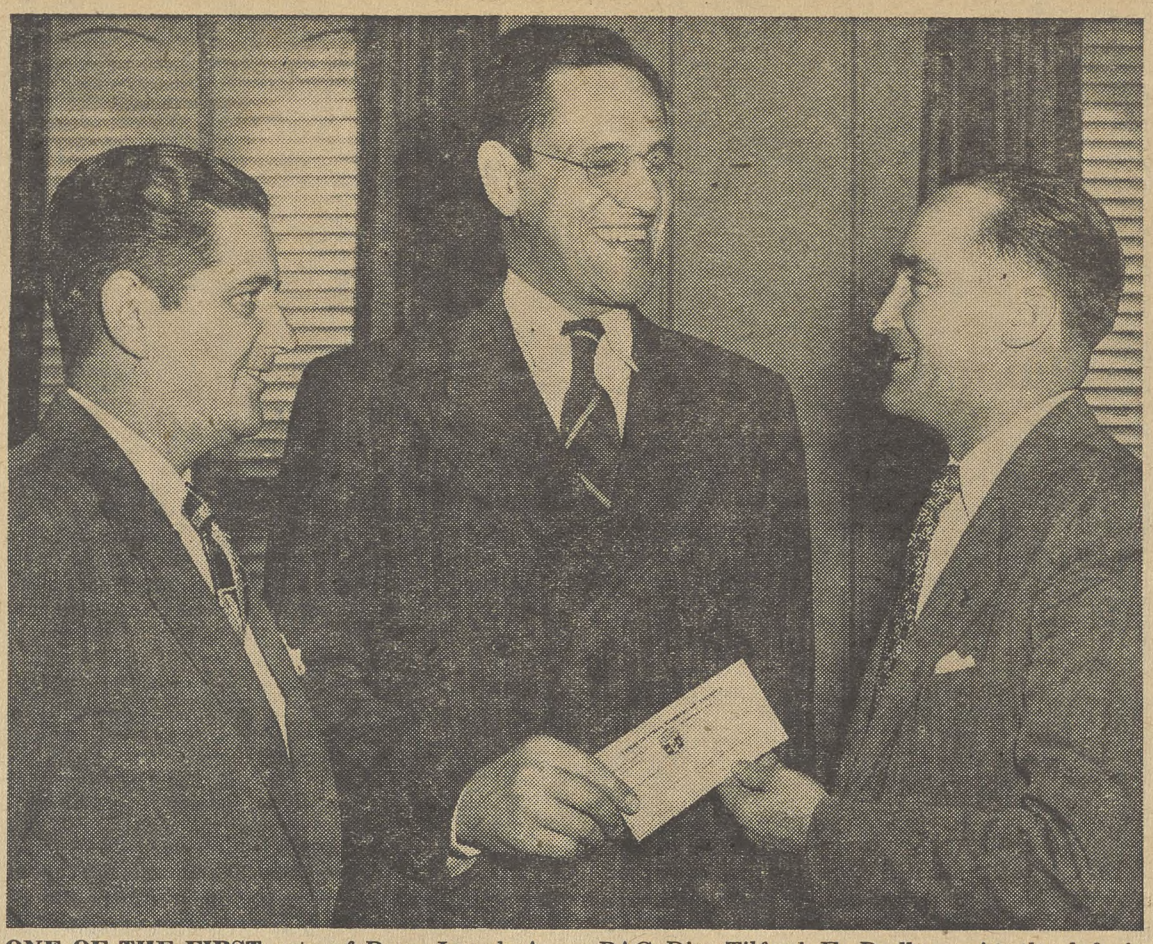
Thousands of towns in America never had CIO members until CWA went into the CIO.

The union attitude toward pro-Communists was demonstrated recently by President Beirne. He said:

"We are certainly anti-Communists. We don't believe in any totalitarian yoke. We will always work against those who will try to destroy the freedom of the individual. We detest Communism and all it stands for."

At the Cleveland convention, Beirne said:

"We don't come into the CIO to see what we can take out of it. We come into CIO of our own volition, to contribute what we can to the great things for which it stands."



ONE OF THE FIRST acts of Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the Communications Workers by America (r.) after his election as a CIO vice president by the Cleveland convention was to present a check for $5,000 to Assistant PAC Dir. Tilford E. Dudley. At the left is CWA Legislative Dir. William M. Dunn. The money was the gift of the union; CWA is conducting a drive among its members for individual PAC contributions.

Elect More Labor People, Gov. Scott Tells State PAC

GOV. W. KERR SCOTT of North Carolina, principal speaker at the second annual convention of the state PAC, in Winston-Salem, N. C., late in October, commended PAC for its untiring efforts and urged it to elect more labor representatives to the state legislature.

Scott cited the record of Howard Parker, international TWUA representative and director of the Durham, N. C., joint board, who was elected to the legislature last fall. "We need more men like Parker," Scott told the 200-odd delegates.

The convention was held in the Robert E. Lee Hotel, leading hostelry of Winston-Salem, and was the first non-segregated meeting ever to take place in the hotel. Willard Townsend, president of the CIO United Transport Service Employes, was the key-note speaker on the second day of the convention.

The convention adopted 11 resolutions, including:

Complete support of national CIO-PAC policy; 100% indorsement and support for Governor Scott's program; indorsement and support of the United Labor Political Committee of North Carolina (made up of CIO, AFL and Railway Brotherhoods); indorsement of the Brannan Plan; pledge to work for closer farmer-labor unity; and condemnation of the left-wing unions in the state.

The delegates refused admittance to the left-wingers, principally members of the Food & Tobacco workers. In recent weeks, FTA has lost two North Carolina locals to the Transport Service Employes.

There are no political contests in North Carolina this year; the meeting was held to get an early start on the important 1950 races.

E. L. Sandefur, CIO Field Representative, was reelected to the office of Executive Director-Secretary-Treasurer of the North Carolina PAC.

Working with PAC Representative Dave Burgess, and PAC Representative David Gilbert, Sandefur and his associates are expecting to add several thousands of new voters before the primary election day next May.

Officers elected at the convention included: H. E. Parker, Textile Workers, chairman; O. C. Lee, Communications Workers, vice chairman, and Raymond Jennings, Transport Service, recording secretary.

DELEGATES to the North Carolina PAC convention at Winston-Salem line up to get their credentials. Principal speaker was Gov. W. Kerr Scott. Left-wingers were barred from the meetings, which was held to get an early start on 1950 Congressional contests.

W. Reuther To Get Clendenin Award

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers will receive the Workers Defense League's eighth annual Clendenin Award for distinguished service to labor's rights, it was announced by Donald Harrington, chairman of the League.

The award will be made at a testimonial dinner at the Hotel Astor, New York City, Dec. 16. Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt has been invited to make the presentation. Secy. of Labor Maurice Tobin, Gov. Chester Bowles of Connecticut, and CIO Pres. Philip Murray will be among the speakers. The British Labor Government will be represented by UN Delegate Hector McNeil.

'Educate The Ignorant Reactionary' — Ewing

"OUR JOB now is to educate the ignorant reactionary," Oscar R. Ewing, Federal Security Administrator, told CIO conventioners at Cleveland, O.

Ewing cited the American Medical Association and Ohio's two Republican Senators—Robert A. Taft and John Bricker—as examples of the type of "reactionary" he meant.

"These are the people," he said, "who would kill the labor movement. These are the people who hated Roosevelt—and who hate Truman today. These are the people who opposed social security yesterday—and who today oppose its extension to persons not yet covered by social security. These are the people who fight national health insurance. These are the people who fight all progressive legislation that would assure our countrymen of the economic and social liberties to which they have a right."

In introducing the FSA head, Pres. Philip Murray described him as one who "has endeavored always to make the path smooth for the sons of working people throughout this broad land."

Son of a working family himself, Ewing had been a leader in the fight for increased social security coverage, national health insurance, more schools and better-paid teachers, Murray said.

"Above all he believes that the democratic way of life under our great charters of government must be extended and enlarged so that all people in America can share in the benefits regardless of their race, creed or color," asserted Murray.

The address which followed served to illustrate Murray's laudatory introduction.

EWING lambasted two groups in American political life—the Communists and the "ignorant reactionaries."

The Communist threat, he said, can be crushed by the application of economic, social and political liberty to all our people.

In dealing with the reactionary, the job is an educational one, he continued.

"We must open his mind and help him to understand that the destiny of America—the America I hope he cherishes as much as we do—depends upon our will to progress. It is not an easy job, as some of your embattled member organizations know only too well right now. But it must be done.

"The CIO needs no enlightenment on the value of full employment and full production. You need no encouragement to support the program of adequate social insurance. You know that this is good for the country—and that, as we advance along these lines, we make life hard for the Communist."

Among those Ewing listed as opponents of the health program was the Ohio State Medical Society, which, the speaker charged, is permitting its membership lists to be used in the mailing of campaign propaganda for Sen. Taft.

"Why not?" Ewing asked. "They approve of his proposal for 'charity medicine', which would serve the country about as well as that masterpiece of reactionary legislation, the Taft-Hartley Act."

EWING told two stories to illustrate the type of persons arrayed on each side of the national health insurance fight.

The first concerned Mrs. Anna Hilton of Camden, N. J., whom the CIO brought to Washington as a witness during the Senate committee hearings on health insurance.

"Mrs. Hilton's husband is a welder in a Camden shipyard—or was, until serious illness came to him. One day last year he was stricken by acute appendicitis; his appendix was ruptured; and after the operation peritonitis set in. He was in the hospital eight months.

"When he came out, he was bedridden, and unable to go back to work. The Hilton family wound up with a hospital bill amounting to $4,508.90, and doctors and prescriptions added another $770 to their expenses, or a total of $5,278.90. The voluntary health insurance they carried covered only $648.45 of this amount. The $1,000 they had saved up was quickly gone.

"Only because the union organization for Social Service in their city came to the help of the Hiltons was it possible to tide them over. Is it any wonder that this CIO family asked the Senate to adopt our plan for national health insurance?

"Now I ask you to balance this item against another item—a story that appeared in the New York Daily News of Sunday, October 23, 1949, hardly a week ago. Here is the headline: '800 BANKERS ON CRUISE PONDER WELFARE STATE.' And here is the story, in part:

"The luxury liner Nieuw Amsterdam was cruising off Nassau yesterday with a passenger list of 800 bankers, all delegates and guests of the 56th annual convention of the Savings Bank Association of the State of New York . . . According to advance reports of the cruise-convention, two important business matters were up for consideration. The first was how the 'welfare state' trend will ultimately affect bank deposits." The article goes on to say: "Depositors are becoming increasingly concerned with health insurance, old age security, unemployment insurance and other welfare state plans, the bankers feel. This is seen as lessening the potential depositor's interest in a savings account . . ."

"I would not wish a ruptured appendix or peritonitis on any of these gentlemen, but I suspect that if such misfortune were to strike them, their long and abiding interest in savings accounts would leave them far less worried and harried than was the Hilton family in Camden under such circumstances.

"We say that this country belongs to the Hiltons of America just as much as it does to the floating bankers on the Nieuw Amsterdam.

"I dare say as they floated on those balmy waters they gave due attention to their liquid assets."

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The vile campaign of slander, vilification and union-busting conducted by the Moscow-puppets who dominated the UE has met its just reward at the hands of the Eleventh Annual CIO Convention.

The reward was expulsion from the ranks of trade unionism for the false leaders and any who are deluded enough to follow them. In place of UE, which had built an abject record of subservience to the Communist philosophy, the convention established a new International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, CIO.

Founded on the sound principles of sound, American trade unionism, the new IUE-CIO is temporarily administered by a committee headed by James B. Carey, CIO Secretary-Treasurer.

IUE-CIO, despite every gangster tactic and strategy used by the commie-led union wreckers of the old UE, has won the immediate support of more than 100,000 UE members. Every CIO man is giving all possible assistance to the campaign to rebuild the electrical union in keeping with the principles of CIO.

In Sharon, Pa., Reg. Dir. Anthony J. Federoff participated in a meeting of more than 1,500 members of Local 617. A noisy minority attempted to disrupt the meeting and, when they were called upon to abide by democratic procedure, walked out. The 1,400 remaining loyal union members voted unanimously to stick with CIO and IUE-CIO.

Director Federoff also attended the meeting of Westinghouse Local 601 in Pittsburgh where Chairman Carey won unanimous support of 14,000 Westinghouse workers.

In the Buffalo area, Reg. Dir. Hugh Thompson reports the old UE crowd up to other tricky tactics as well as a continuation of their slanders against the CIO and President Philip Murray. At Local 303 the commie-stooges circulated leaflets at 3:45 p.m. calling for an 8 p.m. meeting to vote on remaining with UE. When the loyal CIO men brought in more union members than the lefties had mustered, the lefties tried to call off the meeting but the CIO men voted to stick with CIO and let the lefties walk out.

At Local 316, where Dir. Thompson addressed 117 employes of Pratt and Letchworth, the vote was 116 to 1 for IUE-CIO—but according to the leaflets distributed at the meeting it was a great victory for UE.

Thompson also met with 200 stewards and officers of Local 1581 who voted unanimously to recommend to the 4,500 members that they affiliate with IUE-CIO. Similar support was voted by a rank-and-file committee representing the 900 members of Local 306.

CIO Reg. Dir. John B. Easton was compelled to step in as impartial chairman when a disruptive group of approximately 30 tried to take over a meeting of 800 members of Local 627 at Fairmont, W. Va. The minority clique created a half hour of confusion before they walked out claiming the meeting of 770 remaining members was no longer "representative." The local then voted unanimously to affiliate with IUE-CIO.

These instances are typical of the reports coming in from other regions, Frank Bender in Baltimore, Ernest Pugh in Virginia, Michael Mann in Chicago and Del Garst in St. Louis among others. Almost every instance reveals that the commie-puppets represent only a fraction of the union membership and have held power only through intimidation, vilification and base fraud.

The job of the entire CIO staff is to make clear to all electrical workers the simple fact that the choice is clear cut between the sound trade union principles of the CIO and the IUE-CIO as against the Moscow line of the old UE leaders.

One of the great highlights of a great convention was the royal welcome given the CIO's new affiliate, the Communications Workers of America, whose president, Joseph Beirne, was elected a vice-president of CIO.

The largest representation election ever conducted under the Railway Labor Act has just been concluded with the CIO Railroad Workers, affiliated with IUMSWA, winning representation of 34,916 employes in the maintenance of equipment department of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Thomas J. Gallagher, IUMSWA Director of Organization, reports his union won five of the eight divisions. The three going AFL totalled 13,000 employes.

UAW Victories In Region Nine

Martin Gerber, Director of Region 9, UAW-CIO, reports the following results of NLRB elections conducted in Region 9. Kearfott Mfg. Co., Newark, N. J., UAW-CIO 126; no union 23. Edson Tool Co., Belleville, N. J., UAW-CIO 25; no union 17.

CIO Natl. Rep. Robert J. Davidson reports that in an NLRB election held at the GE Plant, Lockland, Ohio, the workers voted 258 to 128 in favor of UAW-CIO. UAW Reps. A. Busch and Edward Hellkamp were in charge of the campaign.

CIO Reg. Dir. W. A. Copeland reports that in an election held among the workers of the American Snuff Plant, Memphis, Tenn., these workers voted 267 to 21 in favor of USA-CIO over the AFL. This plant had been under contract with the AFL Tobacco Workers for 10 years. USA Reps. Earl Crowder and Lee Soresby were in charge of the campaign.

CIO Reg. Dir. Ewald Sandner reports that in an election held at the Ward Mfg. Co., North Arlington, N. J., the workers voted 20 to 13 in favor of the United Optical Workers-CIO. Brother Ribaldo, Manager of Local 208 UOIW-CIO was in charge, assisted by CIO Rep. Jack Rosen.

A. F. Hartung, Vice-President, IWA-CIO reports that in an election conducted at the Stevenson Plywood Plant, Stevenson, Wash., the workers voted: 61 IWA-CIO; 25 AFL; 11 no union. IWA Reps. in charge were Bob Cool and Steve Severson. The Ford & Ford Lumber Co., near Portland, Oregon, the workers voted 28 for IWA-CIO; 16 for no union; 1 vote was challenged. IWA Reps. Bob Dugger and Ron Roley were in charge.

Among the many local unions formerly UE and FE voting to stay loyal to CIO was Tractor Local 101, International Harvester Co., Chicago, Ill. The vote was UAW-CIO 1021; UE 57. The vote was conducted by an impartial committee of three, Messrs. Cantwell, Gibson, and Packard.

Harry Sayre, President, United Paperworkers of America-CIO, reports that in an election held at the Ed Roos Co., Chicago, Ill., the UPA-CIO was victorious by a vote of 91 UPA; 82 no union; 4 AFL. Burt Mason and John Gray directed the drive.

Unionists Sail Soon For Meet

A DELEGATION of nearly a dozen CIO union leaders will attend the founding convention of the new democratic world labor federation in London late this month.

The meeting, planned months ago, will open Nov. 28, with the British Trades Union Congress acting as host. Attending will be union delegations from scores of countries. Some of them were once affiliated with the now Communist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions, while other groups—including the AFL—have been unaffiliated in recent years.

Michael Ross, CIO international affairs director, who has represented the organization at meetings of the preparatory committee, is already in London to work on last-minute plans for the confab.

Scheduled to make the trip to London are four CIO vice-presidents and a number of other union leaders. They include Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood; Pres. Walter Reuther of the UAW-CIO; Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the Rubber Workers; Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers; Secy-Treas. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers; Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport union; Vice-Pres. Herbert Payne of Textile; Treas. Hedley Stone of the Natl Maritime Union; Vice-Pres. Martin Kyne of the Retail, Wholesale union; and Elmer Cope, CIO's European representative.

The convention is due to last about 10 days. A draft constitution has been distributed to the various member unions, and will be acted upon at the London meeting.

In addition to the CIO and AFL, unions from Britain, Canada, France, Italy, Scandinavia, the Low Countries and from all the other continents will be represented.

Agreement to form the new organization—no name has yet been selected for it—was made at a meeting in Geneva, Switzerland, last July. The democratic unions left the WFTU during April, May and June.

Pro-CIO M-M Slate Wins

RANK-AND-FILE members of Mine-Mill in British Columbia have beaten back a move to block election of pro-CIO officers in the western Canadian District.

Some months ago Mine-Mill members turned down the pro-Communist slate in the district election. The International disallowed the election on a technicality.

A second election was called with the International selecting a holiday for the vote, apparently in the hope that there would be a light vote. If so, they were disappointed.

Incomplete returns gave Clare Billingsley, pro-CIO candidate for president, 1,424 votes to 884 for Ken Smith, Mine-Mill administration candidate who was former district secretary. Billingsley's election was assured.

130,000 Join IUE-CIO In 1st Week

TO THE accompaniment of the expected mud-slinging, legal destruction, political shenanigans and fisticuffs from the left, the newly chartered IUE (International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, CIO) gathered in locals representing approximately 130,000 members in its first week.

The old UE, thrown out of the CIO by the Convention last week, saw local after local vote en masse to join the IUE in spite of the best-or worst—efforts of the red-tinged UE leadership. And as this issue goes to press, many other locals are voting on whether to follow suit.

Biggest single local to get on the bandwagon was UE 601, the huge Westinghouse local at Pittsburgh, with some 14,000 members. Nearly 10,000 members attended a mass meeting, held in a local high school football stadium, and voted unanimously to get out of UE and join IUE-CIO.

THE MEETING was addressed by CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, chairman of the administrative committee of IUE, and by local officers.

Next in line was UE 801, the big General Motors, Frigidaire local at Dayton, O., with 12,000 members; and soon after, two Philco locals in Philadelphia, with a combined membership of 8,000, followed suit.

On press-day, UE pulled its latest nifty. As part of its court suit to prevent IUE-CIO from using the IUE name, UE got the court to subpena all IUE-CIO mailing lists and all literature issued. Also subpenaed were Arthur Riordan, IUE publicity director, and Al Hartnett, assistant to James Carey.

These are just the "biggies." All over the country, other locals, large and small, are swarming into IUE.

The UE officers, with frantic ingenuity, have attempted to retain and renew contracts with employers, and to restrain their membership from joining CIO.

They have not been above using the injunction weapon against their own membership in this fight, in spite of the fact that they were loud in damning Philip Murray for allegedly not fighting the Taft-Hartley injunction hard enough.

So far, the results have favored IUE-CIO.

Two judges, in Dayton, O., and Syracuse, N. Y., issued the standard preliminary injunction against UE members who had voted to go CIO; but after formal hearing, both judges refused to enjoin the members permanently.

UE has sought nearly 60 such injunctions.

FOUR EMPLOYES signed contracts with IUE-CIO specifically recognizing it, and not UE, as the legal representative of their employes. Although the members involved had voted for CIO, UE wanted to keep the contracts. The employers are: Phelps-Dodge and American Gas Accumulator, at Elizabeth, N. J., and Otis Elevator and Stewart Electrical, both at Yonkers, N. Y.

IUE-CIO will hold an organizing convention at the Broadwood Hotel, in Philadelphia, starting Nov. 28.

IUE's headquarters are on the 10th floor of the Walker Bldg., 734 15th St., N. W., Washington 5, D. C. Its phone number is Executive 6096.

CIO Men In Many Contests

In many parts of the nation, CIO men and women ran for office Nov. 8, trying to bring labor's point of view to bear in every type of position from town clerkships to state senatorships.

Literally hundreds of CIO members were candidates. In most instances, the results are not yet known to CIO-PAC—proof enough that PAC does not maintain "iron control" from central headquarters. Many CIO members filed for office without notifying anyone beyond the confines of their own locals.

IN VIRGINIA, Temple Kessinger, president of CIO Paper Workers local 675, was elected to the House of Delegates by a slim majority of 205 votes out of 4,350 cast. The campaign was a violent one. Kessinger is the first CIO member elected to the Virginia House.

Frank Meloni, of Camden, N. J., member of the CIO Wholesale and Retail union was elected to the N. J. State Assembly.

In Waterbury, Conn., Armond Fiorelli, CIO metal worker, was elected alderman.

In Louisville, Kentucky, Clarence Lattis, CIO-UAW, was elected alderman.

Wilfred Walker, CIO-TWU, was elected to the city council of Freehold, N. J.

Rollin Everett, CIO-Newspaper Guild, ran for re-election to Cincinnati's city council—the results are not in yet, because the city follows the proportional representation system and the ballots take a week to count.

U. S. Suit Shows Oregon Doctors Fight Prepaid Plans

TESTIMONY in the U. S. anti-trust suit against the Oregon Medical Society, a number of county medical societies and others shows:

1. Some doctors refusing to treat subscribers to at least two prepaid plans.

2. Why the cost of the prepaid plans is high.

The Justice Department brought the anti-trust suit against 18 defendants, including the state and eight county medical societies, eight individual doctors, and the Oregon Physicians Service, a prepaid medical care plan operated by a group of doctors.

At the first half of the trial, just concluded, 49 government witnesses were present to testify, including doctors who told of being refused membership in medical societies because they treated patients and subscribers of outside prepaid medical care plans.

After the government witnesses were heard, the trial was recessed until Dec. 13, when defense witnesses will be heard.

First witness to be called by the government attorney in support of the charges of intimidation and coercion on the part of doctors with respect to prepaid medical and hospital plans was Dr. Chester C. Moore, one of the founders of the Industrial Hospital Association.

He testified that the IHA had been established in 1923 as a prepaid insurance plan for the lumber industry. Twelve years later his association was "investigated" by the Multnomah County Medical Society, he testified, and its Board of Censors informed him the "contract practice of the Industrial Hospital Association is conducted in violation of the principles and ethics of the American Medical Association."

THE BOARD recommended his expulsion from the Society and he subsequently submitted his resignation, he said. He was followed by a great many witnesses, many of them officers or members of CIO woodworkers who had personal experiences with the refusal of the doctors to accept tickets of the various contract associations in payment of medical care.

Cross examination of witnesses brought out a number of things of particular interest to woodworkers who in recent years have been trying to negotiate contracts providing better service from the associations than has been received in the past.

The associations, which are paid under a contract made with the employer through a check-off of the workers' hospital dues, have claimed inability to stand increased costs and have made rate increases year after year.

Ray Brunkow, general manager and secretary of the Industrial Hospital Association, on cross examination, said that he received a salary of $750 per month and that Dr. Moore, president of the Association, is paid $1800 per month. He also said that he understood that in the past the association had paid large dividends, some going as high as 100%.

A DENTIST testified that work from most hospital associations had been refused because of their "pinchpenny" methods and unwillingness to allow any latitude in professional judgment.

C. C. Bechtold, head of the National Hospital Association, said he owns 70% cent of the stock of NHA which has a $150,000 capitalization, and that he is paid $20,000 a year in salary.

He testified that seven of the eight doctors named as defendants had refused service to members of his association and that one Corvallis doctor had refused to continue treatment of a patient with a sliver in his finger after learning the patient was a member of NHA.

Defense Attorney Jaureguy questioned Bechtold regarding a letter written to a doctor concerning a case in which Bechtold had said that ". . . . however, before authorizing the G. I. study (gastrointestinal) we believe it would be well to await the results of the tonsil operation, infected tonsils may be causing his intestinal disorder. If you do not agree with us on this point we will be pleased to hear further from you."

JAUREGUY asked if Bechtold "as a layman without having seen the patient" felt that he was in a position to give suggestions to a doctor of medicine, Bechtold replied that his association was expected to pay the bills and that it had merely been a suggestion.

Typical of the testimony presented by the many witnesses for the government was that of Gus Anderson, business agent of Local 5-4 of the IWA at Seaside, Ore. He said the union had occasion to hear many complaints of their 950 members in Clatsop and Tillamook counties because of doctors who refused to accept tickets of the Industrial and National Hospital Associations.

Other testimony upheld the government contention that the various Medical Societies had conspired in a campaign of intimidation and coercion with respect to prepaid medical care organizations and had attempted to supplant such organizations with the doctor-sponsored Oregon Physicians Service.

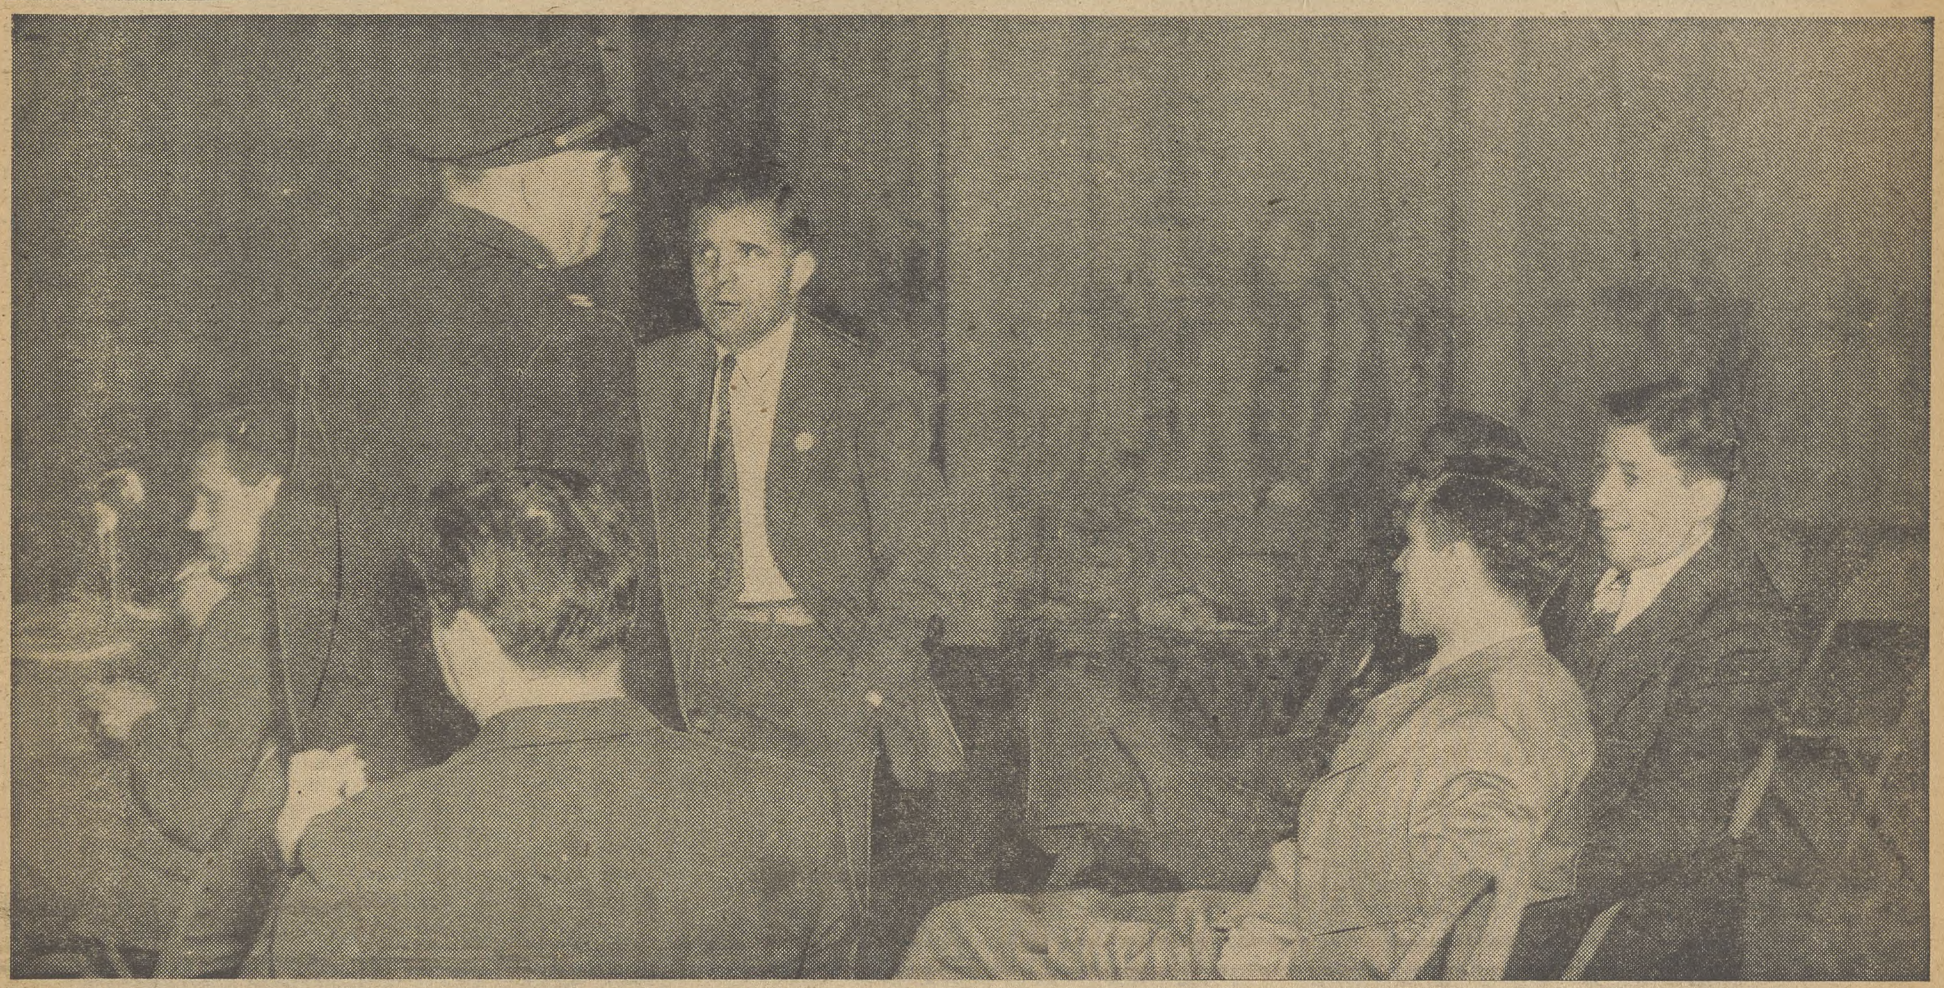
The CIO News

Vol. XII WASHINGTON, D. C., NOVEMBER 21, 1949 82 No. 46



Left-winger John Leto, president of Electrical Workers Local 103 in Camden, N. J., pleads in vain with cop to heave CIO Secy.-Treas. James Carey (center, seated) out of the union hall. Police captain refused to oblige, pointing out that Carey had every right to be present. Leto and his followers made a quick exit. Carey remained to call for a vote—overwhelmingly for the new IUE. Alex Barkan, Textile Workers PAC director, is at Carey's right. Election result was "unofficial"—the decision will be confirmed.

THIS VICTORY demonstration by CIO Steelworkers at Gary, Ind., was one of hundreds to dot the country as steel companies gave in on their refusal to grant non-contributory pensions. Here jubilant Steelworkers hoist Gary Mayor Eugene Swartz (left rear) and Orval J. Kincaid, Steelworkers District 1 Director, to their shoulders after giant U. S. Steel signed up. The 42-day strike was over. Its results would strengthen the hands of negotiators all over the country in the push for adequate pensions.

Crucible Steel, Alcoa Last Of Holdouts

WITH STEEL production getting back to normal after the signing of agreements with almost all struck companies, the CIO Steelworkers at the end of last week were faced with only two major holdouts.

Holding out to the bitter end against accepting the Bethlehem-type pension and insurance plans were Crucible Steel and the giant Mellon aluminum firm, Aluminum Co. of America—better known as Alcoa.

Crucible's 16,000 employes were still on strike after 49 days, as the company continued its refusal to cough up benefits granted by the rest of the industry. Pleading poverty, the company had stated before the strike that it would refuse to grant even 1c toward the union's demands.

In its appearance before the presidential fact-finding board Crucible sought—and was denied—special treatment on grounds that any additional wage costs would force it into the red.

IT WAS A familiar refrain to the union. To the fact-finding board the Steelworkers' Research Dir. Otis Brubaker retorted:

"During each of the negotiations of the last few years, it (Crucible) has come in wailing about its sad financial plight It has written us personal letters of woe each year predicting financial disaster if a wage increase of so much as 1c were granted. Yet it has met each of the industry's increases and is earning in 1949 at an annual rate of profit higher than in 1946, 1947 or 948. This is not the record of a financially insolvent company."

As if to bolster the union's argument, Crucible shortly thereafter, in September, paid its regular quarterly dividend of $1.25.

Hub of the stalemate at Alcoa was not a company claim of poverty—indeed, Alcoa maintains a near-monopoly on its field. Here there was the problem of an AFL union, organized in five of its 14 plants, which had accepted an agreement providing substantially less than the striking CIO unionists are holding out for.

History of CIO negotiations with Alcoa have followed this pattern since 1943. Each year, Steelworkers say, the AFL signs up for less than the CIO negotiators are demanding. The CIO plants then strike or come to the brink of one before Alcoa comes to terms. Benefits thus achieved by the CIO Steelworkers are then granted the AFL

"For years," one Steelworkers member said, "they've been undercutting us like that—and then riding on our coattails when we win our demands."

THIS YEAR the CIO Steelworkers had been on strike a month when the company and the non-striking AFL Aluminum Workers signed an agreement. Termed by CIO Steelworkers Vice Pres. James Thimmes a "cut-rate deal," this settlement was offered the CIO strikers.

"The company's proposal," said Thimmes, "is substantially inferior to any agreement made by the union in the basic steel industry."

"The company refused to provide pensions and payment to disabled employes which live up to the standards set by other large companies in the related steel industry.

"Instead, the company proposes a disability plan which is meaningless, a pension plan which is arbitrary and unworkable and an insurance plan which permits no union participation in its admintration."

At week's end, negotiations with Alcoa were recessed indefinitely and Alcoa's 16,000 CIO employes remained on strike.

"BIG STEEL" COMES ACROSS with non-contributory pensions, an insurance program and a handshake after CIO and Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray and U. S. Steel Vice Pres. John A. Stephens sign agreement ending the 42-day strike.

Court Fight Looms Over Ohio Ballot

THE OHIO big-money boys backing Sen. Robert A. Taft put over the "trick ballot" at the election Nov. 8, but they may be cheering too soon, because a court battle is almost certain.

The voters approved the "Massachusetts-type" ballot, which ends "straight ticket" voting. Under the change, each voter must mark the ballot for each individual candidate he favors.

The Democrats and organized labor bitterly opposed the change, claiming that it would mean 100,000 more votes for Taft in 1950, when he runs for re-election. That was confirmed by GOP county chairman George H. Bender, after the election. It was Bender who led the move for the ballot change. The funds came from the GOP machine and the Chamber of Commerce.

The change is in the form of an amendment to the state constitution. The amendment language requires that to be effective, the proposal needed a majority of all those voting. The total state vote was over 2,000,000. The total vote on the amendment was 1,650,000. Thus, nearly 400,000 did not vote either way on the issue. The amendment was carried by only 251,000 votes.

Herbert S. Duffy, Attorney General, has been asked by Charles F. Sweeney, Secretary of State, to rule whether legal requirements have been met, and whether the new ballot is now in effect.

Three Units Prepare To Investigate Leftist Members Of Board

PREPARATIONS for hearings on charges filed against nine left-wing members of the CIO Executive Board are being made by three investigating committees named by Pres. Murray.

No schedule of hearings has yet been posted by the three committees. The three groups were set up as the result of charges filed by Pres. William Steinberg of the CIO American Radio Association at the Nov. 5 Board meeting—a day after the CIO convention adjourned.

In two separate charges, Steinberg accused 10 CIO unions and nine members of the Executive Board of following policies and programs of the Communist party rather than of the CIO.

A COMMITTEE to investigate the Fur & Leather Workers Union and the leadership of the Office & Professional Workers, the Public Workers and the American Communications Association, is chairmaned by Pres. Emil Rieve of Textile. Other members are Joseph Beirne (Communications Workers) and Harry Sayre (Paperworkers).

A second group will probe leadership policies of the United Furniture Workers, Food & Tobacco Workers, and the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers. That committee is headed by Pres. Jacob Potofsky (Clothing Workers) and includes Emil Mazey (Auto Workers) and Joseph Curran (Maritime.)

The third committee is composed of O. A. Knight (Oil), James Fadling (Woodworkers) and Joseph Fisher (Utility). That committee will investigate the west coast Longshoremen's Union of Harry Bridges, the Marine Cooks & Stewards, and the Fishermen's Union.

ONE OF THE first reactions to the CIO's move came from the Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union, one of the groups to be investigated. The ILWU didn't like it.

Its executive board, whose policies have run counter to CIO policies for several years, rejected what it called "false statements and charges" by Pres. Murray. It also charged Murray with finding the rank-and-file of the union "guilty" before the hearings started.

The ILWU went on to charge Murray and other national CIO officers with seeking to "establish the CIO as a political dictatorship" and with seeking to split or wreck any union that disagrees.

The ILWU went so far as to predict that "the chances of a fair trial" by the "hand-picked" investigating committee are "nil." It set forth a series of eight practices which the ILWU board said the CIO investigating committee must follow in its probe of the union.

SIMILAR cries of anguish from other unions which have flouted CIO policy in the post-war period were heard in other sections of the country.

In New York, the state CIO Council's executive board adjusted its constitution to match changes in that of the national CIO, by voting to bar Communists from holding office in the Council. Four left-wing union spokesmen dissented. The constitutional changes must be approved either by a special convention or by membership referendum.

Council Pres. Louis Hollander said that left-wing unions in the Empire State have no more than 10% of the council's entire membership.

Two persons were hospitalized and 60 were kept virtual prisoners for 10 hours when a rowdy band of approximately 700 left-wing seamen barricaded the international headquarters to "protest" anti-Communist resolutions passed at the union's convention three months ago.

A special detail of 55 police swooped down on the scene to prevent fisticuffs, but made no move to disperse the mob.

NMU Vice Pres. Adrian Duffy and Joseph Moutal, a union patrolman—kicked and beaten by the left-wingers—were the only ones to suffer bodily harm at the hands of the booing demonstrators. Both were hospitalized.

The blockade halted all union and dispatching business for the day. The hiring hall is on the first floor of the six-story building.

Unwilling to give up the fight after suffering a decisive licking at the union's September convention, the lefties charged right-wing NMU Pres. Joseph Curran with violating six articles of the union constitution.

It was what Herman Cooper, NMU attorney who was among those imprisoned for 10 hours, called "the dying gasp" of the left-wing in the union.

Detroit Co-op Savings

Members of the Detroit Co-op who have been buying gasoline for the last three months at three stations on the east side have received a refund of 5% on their purchases. Fuel oil at a 3% saving is also available, as is a saving at the Consumer Clothing Center, retail store sponsored by unions.

UE Officer Tries Fisticuffs, But Falls Off Platform

When Schenectady 301, the second largest of UE's "big four," voted CIO on Nov. 17, the move was accompanied by the wildest pandemonium.

With Frank Kris, local president, in the chair, the 9,000 members present ruled that no "outside agitators" could address the meeting. They also decided that Fitzgerald and Emspak were "outside agitators." The two were refused a chance to speak—a move which must have infuriated Emspak, since 301 is his home local.

Then the meeting turned around and wouldn't let a CIO spokesman talk, either. The members wanted to make their own decision in their own way.

The only non-member of the local who was even allowed on the platform was Leo Jandreau, president of UE District 3, which includes Schenectady.

Jandreau was so enraged by the turn of events that he took a punch at Kris, missed, and fell off the platform. That left Kris in complete command of the rostrum.

The meeting then voted, 7,000 to 2,000, to go CIO.

We're Sorry, But . . .

Many union groups which placed special orders for the convention issue of the CIO News received the paper late. Here's why:

Orders poured in for two weeks before the convention—and during convention week—and during the period which has passed since. They came from all over the U. S.

A high speed press at Mercury Press, which prints the CIO News, ran a total of 93 hours to turn out the convention issue.

Up to Nov. 18 special orders for approximately 550,000 copies of the convention issue had been shipped from Washington.

These were in addition to the regular run of the National Edition.

(And the delays in shipment would have been much greater had not Mercury Press been able to obtain a carload of newsprint from Canada by special freight in the middle of the run!)

IUE Files For 220,000 As UE's "Big 4" Go CIO

THE newly chartered IUE-CIO filed representation petitions covering approximately 220,000 electrical workers in the past week, as thousands of additional members deserted the left-wing UE and flocked to the CIO standard.

At the end of the week, with membership increasing so fast that organizers literally could not keep track of it, IUE had taken over the UE's four largest locals and its administrative committee, headed by CIO Sec'y-Treas. James B. Carey, was so busy issuing charters it had little time for anything else.

Latest big UE locals to come into the CIO fold were 201 at Lynn, Mass., with 16,000 to 18,000 members, and 301 at Schenectady N. Y., with approximately 15,000.

Lynn 201, whose members are employed by General Electric, is the home local of UE President Albert J. Fitzgerald. It expelled him just before the CIO convention for refusing to follow local instructions, and followed this up last Sunday by voting five-to-one to join CIO. This was a signal victory for 201 business agent Fred Kelley, who has long opposed the commie-liners and who ran unsuccessfully against Fitzgerald at the UE convention early in October.

SCHENECTADY 301 is the home local of UE Sec'y-Treas. Julius Emspak. It voted CIO by better than five-to-one, on Thursday night, after a stormy meeting described at the bottom of page 2. Its members are employed by General Electric.

Adopting the policy of trying to get a series of quick NLRB elections, IUE attorney Benjamin Sigal filed petitions covering:

- General Electric—85 plants, over 100,000 workers.
- General Motors—6 plants, more than 40,000 workers.
- Westinghouse—75 plants, 60,000 workers or more.
- RCA—4 plants, approximately 11,000 workers.

TO UE PRES. FITZGERALD'S Home Local 201, at Lynn, Mass., goes a charter of affiliation in CIO's new union, the Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers. About 17,000 members turned out to vote IUE in, UE out. L. to r.: President Emery of Local 201; Frederick Kelley, local business agent and member of the IUE administrative committee; and CIO Secy.-Treas. James Carey, chairman of the IUE administrative committee.

- Kueffel & Esser, Hoboken, N. J., 500 workers.
- Conmar Products, Newark, N. J., upwards of 800 workers.
- Robert Reiner, Inc., Weehawken, N. J., 400 workers.
- Sperry Gyroscope, Great Neck, L. I., 5,000 workers or more.

In all the instances where more than one plant is involved, IUE has asked the NLRB to establish a single bargaining unit covering all plants mentioned in the petition.

WESTINGHOUSE, objecting to the company-wide approach, next day filed its own petition for election, asking NLRB to set up 75 separate bargaining units. So far, Westinghouse is the only employer in the group named to file a counter-petition; there have been no indications from the rest as to the attitude they will take.

Allis-Chalmers, for whose employes IUE had not yet sought recognition through NLRB, filed a petition asking the Board to find out who represented the workers at one Boston plant and, at press time, was reported preparing another petition covering its small plant at Norwood, Ohio.

UE has not filed any representation petitions whatsoever, as this goes to press. The UE hierarchy prefers to seek injunctions in the courts.

One more employer, meanwhile has withdrawn recognition from UE and turned the existing contract over to IUE. (The CIO News reported last week on four such instances.)

THIS WAS Emerson Electric Manufacturing Co., of St. Louis. UE local 1102 voted 2656-1 to join IUE, whereupon IUE asked the employer to transfer the contract. The employer agreed, signing with IUE a joint memorandum stating in part:

"The said collective bargaining agreement, dated as of August 1, 1948, shall be and is hereby amended by striking out the words 'United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America,' as the name appears in the preamble thereof, and in the signature of the union thereto, and substituting in lieu thereof the words 'International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, CIO.'"

UE's tactics of obstruction in the court continued throughout the week. In Philadelphia, Judge Guy Bard of the Federal District Court, after a series of complicated skirmishes which started when UE tried to enjoin IUE from using its own name, finally ruled that IUE could not use the name UE and that UE could not use the IUE-CIO moniker, and dismissed UE's contention that IUE was causing confusion.

UE obtained a sweeping temporary injunction against IUE in the Federal Court in Fort Wayne, Ind., where Judge Luther Swygert enjoined UE 901 from holding meeting or using funds if the purpose was disaffiliation. The Judge will hand down his final decision next Wednesday.

AMONG THE many colorful incidents of the past week, the informal meeting of the big UE local at Camden, N. J. ranks high.

When Carey appeared on the platform of a Camden meeting and attempted to address the gathering, the left-wing local leadership indignantly summoned the Camden chief of police and asked him to remove Carey, on the grounds that Carey was not a member of the union.

The chief refused to remove Carey, whereupon the left-wingers waltzed out.

This left Carey to chair the meeting, which he had never intended to do. He picked up the gavel and called for a vote.

The meeting then voted 1800 to 100 to join CIO, but the results were not deemed official, because the leadership was absent.

The IUE will hold its organizing convention at Philadelphia's Broadwood Hotel, starting Nov. 28.

Big 4 Who Went CIO

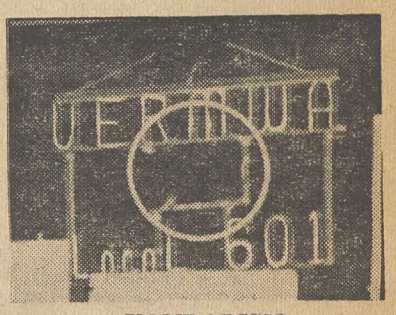
Here is a list of UE's "big four" all of whom have voted to join CIO within the past two weeks:

Lynn, Mass., 201—16,000 to 18,000 members.

Schenectady, N. Y., 301—15,000 members.

Pittsburgh, Pa., 601—14,000 members.

Dayton, Ohio, 801—12,000 to 13,000 members.



VANDALISM

A half dozen of the left-wing members of the big Westinghouse Local 601, which voted to leave UE and join the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, removed the CIO from sign of the local's office at Turtle Creek, Pa.

Writer Injured In Little Steel Strike Revisits Youngstown

By MARY HEATON VORSE

ON ELECTION Day Republic signed on the dotted line. Nothing could give anyone who saw the Little Steel Strike more satisfaction than to stand on the Center Street bridge at Youngstown, Ohio, and watch the victorious steel strikers stream back to work.

I came back to Youngstown for the personal satisfaction of seeing Republic open; for in 1937 I stood on that same bridge and counted the men seep back to work. When I had counted 300 I knew the strike was broken.

Most of the men crossing the bridge walked as if they wished they were somewhere else; some were defiant. There were machine guns on top of the Republic Administration Building and the militia was encamped in town.

During the present strike I drove around the many picket points with Clarence Irwin, an old friend from the 1919 strike. He is Steelworkers international representative at Youngstown Sheet & Tube. The first of the 16 points we visited was at the Brier Hill picket station with the flag flying in the center of its ornamental oval. We passed Republic gates.

"This is about where you got shot," said Irwin. "Remember the place? This is stop 5, where the fracas began in 1937." We ended up in the union hall in Campbell, Local 1418, where I met another old friend, Francis Gillen, now vice president of the local.

We got to talking about 1937 and about Eperjesi, who was killed during the evening shooting. "Eperjesi's family was left in a bad way," Gillen explained. "He had a wife and four children. They lost their house and the union got them a new one completely furnished." Over the coffee, soup and sandwiches always ready for the pickets, we recalled the details of the Little Steel Strike in 1937.

TWO WEEKS after the Chicago massacre everything seemed quiet in Youngstown. Negotiations were under way in Cleveland. No one was looking for trouble. There were women on the picket line; some had even brought their children along.

One was sitting on a box with her baby on her knees. Lieutenant Richmond yelled at her, "Get off that company property!" She didn't move fast enough to suit him, and he hurled a tear gas bomb at her.

Gassing babies was more than the strikers could stand. The men meeting in the yard behind the nearby saloon rushed out. A call was put in to the flying picket squadrons. That afternoon many were shot and gassed and there was a call for the militia.

One single policeman received a shot through his wrist. Meantime word of the outrage sped throughout the steel towns. The Rubber Workers of Akron mobilized a motorcade of protest and were joined by cars from Pittsburgh and other steel centers.

I didn't see the trouble in the afternoon. I had been to a high school picnic in one of the lovely parks which surround Youngstown. It was dark when I got back. Scotty O'Hara, an old miner, and SWOC organizer, was just going to the scene of the fracas to see how things were going. We walked through dim, empty streets past the firehouse towards Stop 5. A few people stood in front of the saloon. There was only an occasional pedestrian. There were still pockets of tear gas that made my eyes water.

WHAT happened then was so unbelievable that none of the papers carried the story. An armored truck drove up and the uniformed deputies began shooting at the unsuspecting pedestrians. I saw the flash, I heard the shots. I saw a man run toward us, I saw Scotty duck.

I thought I'd better duck myself, when something hit me. The running man fell and lay motionless and I fell on top of him. I heard Scotty say, "Mary, are you hurt? You're bleeding like a stuck pig."

I tell my part in this because I am one of the few eyewitnesses of this extraordinary outrage of those bloody days. Sending armed deputies around to shoot quiet pedestrians was unique even in the annals of the Little Steel strike.

Many people were shot that night. When I got to the hospital a nurse was bending over an unconscious woman. A little boy shot in the leg was crying. As I left more wounded were being brought in. The armored car had gone through the workers' districts and the deputies had shot people indiscriminately. Apparently this was ordered as a reprisal for the policeman who was shot in the wrist.

Francis Gillen took up the story from here. "I was arrested as the motorcade came in along with about 500 others. There were so many of us we couldn't sit or lie down, and we had no water. We were kept incommunicado, too. Even the judge said these arrests and the conditions of the jail were inexcusable."

THERE IS a far cry from 1937 to 1949, an era of change with gains for the workers and a change of public sentiment as well, though Sheriff Elser was replaced only last year by a former CIO member, Paul Langley.

On election day, interest in the election equaled or surpassed the strike, in spite of the settlement with Republic and discussions with Sheet & Tube. Hundreds of union members were on the streets distributing literature. The workers would soon be streaming through the mill gates and over the Center Bridge leading to Republic Steel, but in the union halls the old timers don't forget the days of Little Steel and the people who were shot down on the streets.

CIO Program Is, Frankly, Left of Center And Leadership Is Not Heading In Direction Of Reaction

By ALLAN L. SWIM

GOOD-NATURED George Morris of the Communist Daily Worker sat at the CIO convention press table and outdid the original sad sacks as Phil Murray and colleagues poured it on the backs of the Reds.

After it was all over, Morris concluded in his column that the CIO was all shot to hell and was heading lickety-split down the road to reaction.

"The employers are wild with joy" over what the convention did, Morris wrote. "They expect the early consequences of the convention to register in billions of extra profits and belly-crawling unionism such as they have long wanted."

And furthermore, Morris said, a 'lust for dictatorial power" caused the convention to put the skids under the Commies.

Well, now, let's see——

AT ABOUT THE time Sad Sack Morris wrote his blistering column, Philip Murray and the Steelworkers union were winding up one of the most successful and important strikes in recent labor history.

If there was any "belly-crawling" in connection with that struggle it was done by the giant steel corporation—not by Murray and the union.

If "lust for dictatorial power" resulted in the Commies getting booted in the seat of their pants, then it was a "lust" shared by about 90% of the convention delegates.

'Lust" shared that widely isn't dictatorial; it's democratic! And Morris obviously can't — or won't — distinguish between "lust" and "disgust."

MORRIS' CONTORTED observations are important because they reveal the line that party hacks will try to peddle throughout the nation.

Here's the line:

1. The CIO has turned its back on progressivism and has embraced reaction
2. CIO's leadership is substituting dictatorship for democratic action.
3. The new CIO electrical workers' union —and other unions which may be established by CIO—are nothing more than "company unions."
4. Philip Murray and his colleagues are going to play the role of "bosses' boy."

ANY WORKER or employer who falls for that twisted line will be in for a rude awakening.

The Commies, as I have pointed out in this column several times, are phony liberals who frequently serve the cause of reaction.

Their political party operates strictly on company union lines, and none of the comrades ever acts contrary to the boss at Moscow.

If the Reds hadn't been blocked by the CIO leadership early in 1948 Tom Dewey would be in the White House today.

If they had had their way, all of Europe probably would be suffering the type of hunger and privation which the Commies exploit before establishing dictatorial rule.

And when it comes to collective bargaining the Commies usually talk a better game of pool than they shoot.

NOBODY SHOULD let that "right-wing" tag on the CIO leadership confuse them merely because it's been used so frequently by the newspapers.

To get the real pitch about what's going on and what's in the works for the future all you have to do is look at the CIO program.

Right now the emphasis is on non-contributory pensions—part of our major campaign for increased economic security.

There will be a day when the guaranteed annual wage will come to the forefront.

The battle against discrimination and for improved civil rights is an important part of the CIO program.

So is the campaign to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act.

Go on down the line and you'll find that the "right wing" isn't at the right at all, but is over to the left of center.

And it has a real program which liberal Americans support.

Little Lord Fauntleroys

McGraw-Hill, "headquarters for business information," is attacking the unions again.

In an ad run in six of the nation's largest daily papers, McGraw-Hill says that "we have labor monopoly with us" and that the size of this monopoly "makes alleged business monopolies seem positively piddling."

"While your representatives in Congress are at home," the ad urged, "talk to them about the special privileges now granted to labor union monopoly."

We have a hunch that this won't come as welcome advice to members of the CIO who have just ended a long battle with that "piddling" U. S. Steel or have clashed with other "teeny" outfits such as AT&T.

And we feel strongly it won't be welcomed by those CIO "monopolists" in the South who have been beaten, enjoined and generally pushed around by the Little Lord Fauntleroys who operate Dixie's anti-union plants.

A GREAT VICTORY

We doubt that there is anybody capable of visualizing fully the far-reaching consequences of the outstanding victory won by the CIO Steelworkers union at the end of its strike against the nation's steel industry.

We say this with due respect to the president of the steel union, to the men who went on strike and to the "experts" who try to figure where trends lead us.

Now, for the first time, the country's basic industry has been forced to shoulder a real measure of responsibility for the welfare of those it employs. This is of major importance to labor.

What is to follow—what is bound to follow if the labor movement is on its toes—may well lead to that type of security-for-old-age for which workers have been striving since the birth of mass production.

British Unionists Sure John Bull Will Find Answer

By CUSHMAN REYNOLDS

THE MARSHALL Plan is working well and the British people deeply appreciate American aid, but Britain's economic recovery is a far bigger problem than can be solved by the Marshall Plan or any other external program.

What's more, in the end Britain must and can find the answer within herself through her own efforts, while the Marshall Plan keeps things going for a while.

That, in effect, is what W. Ernest Jones, general secretary for the Yorkshire area of the Natl. Union of Mine Workers, and Leonard Green, assistant general secretary of the Heating, Domestic & Ventilating Engineers & General Metal Workers, told this reporter over the breakfast bacon and eggs the other morning.

The two are members of a team of 13 labor leaders who have been touring U. S. industrial centers since mid-October to see what aspects of American industrial savvy can be applied in Britain's mines, mills and factories. At the same time there is a good chance that the visitors can hand out a few pointers themselves, notably on the making of quality goods, for which British industry is justly famous.

SPLITTING into groups, the men are having a look at the garment industry under the guidance of the AFL Ladies Garment Union and the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers; at foundries and machine shops with the Intl. Assn. of Machinists; at various construction projects with AFL building trades representatives; at the steel and auto industries with the CIO Steelworkers and the CIO Auto Workers and at whatever else they have a chance to see.

What they are seeking are ways and means to increase the productivity of British workers. Greater productivity is the key to Britain's economic future, Jones and Green agreed, but they were reluctant to discuss their conclusions about what they have observed here.

They want to wait until their team can consolidate its views and report as a whole. However, one thing that seems to impress this and other British groups which have visited the U. S. is the abundance of electric power on this side of the Atlantic. Electric power, Europeans apparently feel, is a basic factor in America's mammoth production statistics.

Jones and Green were less loath to talk about what is going on in Britain under the Labor government, with which they seemed well satisfied. Americans should understand that Britain is living under an outright "planned economy," Jones declared, and he didn't seem to care whether Senator Bob Taft was in earshot or not when he said it.

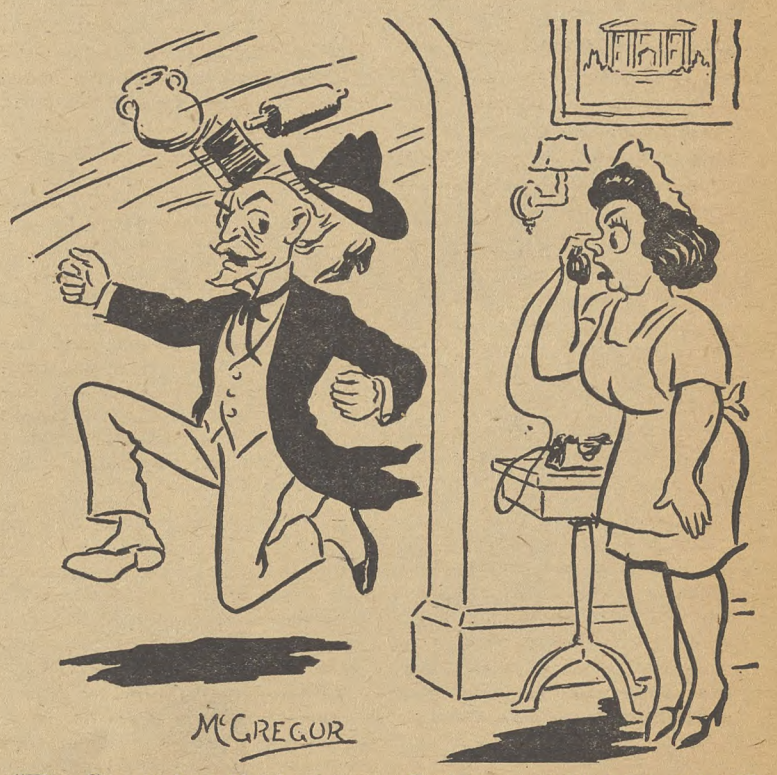
The whole nation, including the unions, are giving "every possible assistance toward production." The admonition "Boost production" is practically a watchword.

EVERY industry sets target figures, Jones went on, and the unions help set them. As an example, Jones cited his own industry, coal mining. He said the 1949 target is 207 million tons and that the miners would just about make it. However, to do so the individual coal digger must work an extra shift every two weeks.

Jones, who is heartily British in mold and manner, pointed out that one reason for the extra shift is that there are a lot fewer coal miners in Britain than there used to be. What has saved coal mining is nationalization, he said, which has "enabled industry to be revitalized." The introduction of new machinery, much of it American in origin, and new underground patterns in the mines themselves have come with nationalization and have greatly increased mining efficiency, he observed.

Green, whose soft British accent was decidedly different from the American talk at nearby tables, said the members of his union were not actually production workers as that term is understood. They are steamfitters, and they are in the installation business. Nevertheless, the union makes every effort to encourage greater efficiency as a contribution to Britain's national economy.

GREEN ALSO said his union, in partnership with management, had established an advanced technical college in London where 48 selected students are enrolled every six months. This institution was set up in line with a national education program proposed in 1944.



"The Senator's wife is busy. Could you call back later?"

Attempt To Steal The Election Failed

FOLLOWING a PAC meeting one night a group of CIO members went to a restaurant for a round of coffee and a "bull" session.

The conversation, naturally, centered on politics and in a short time one of the men declared:

"Even if our people cast the most votes at the next election we'll still lose. This local political machine will steal the election—as they have in the past."

Discussion immediately switched to crooked elections— and one veteran trade unionist told this story:

YEARS AGO—before the CIO was born—some small-time racketeers tried to move in on a union in the hope of gaining control of its treasury.

They knew it would be necessary to defeat both the incumbent president and secretary-treasurer before their scheme had a chance of succeeding.

They worked hard but made little headway. Then they resorted to threats and finally to bribery.

Then, as the night of the election drew near, they hatched a plot for stealing the election.

Unfortunately for them, one of the men they thought they had bribed made regular reports to the president about what was going on.

THE UNION MEETING at which the election was to be held opened at about 8 p.m. in a school house at the edge of town.

The usual order of business was followed and then the president announced it was time to conduct the election.

"Old Joe," who was working with the racketeers, rose to his feet and asked:

"Mr. President, do you want me to gather up the ballots like I always do?"

"Yes, Joe," the president replied.

After the voting was completed, "Old Joe" moved around the room, gathering up the ballots in his plug hat.

THERE WAS tenseness in the room as "Old Joe" headed for the platform—for most of the unionists knew an attempt was being made to steal the election.

Instead of walking up the front steps to the stage, "Old Joe" headed for the ante-room at the side.

And in the second or two he was out of sight of the "audience" and the officers on the stage he handed his hatful of ballots to a crony and received another hatful.

The crony slipped out a back door and "Old Joe" ambled out to the table at which the tellers sat.

The president then told the old fellow to take his seat as the ballots were tallied.

THE THREE TELLERS, all friends of the president, begun their count, calling out the votes to the meeting as they were marked on a tally sheet.

A majority of the "stuffed" ballots were for the candidates of the racketeers but the tellers steadily built up a lead for the incumbents.

The head teller finally announced that the president and secretary-treasurer had been re-elected. Then he calmly lit his pipe and "carelessly" dropped the burning match in the pile of ballots.

After the fire—which consumed most of the ballots—had been put out, the president asked if anybody wanted a recount.

There was a strong chorus of "no" from the members—and the election was declared "official." A.L.S.

Book Review

'The Labor Story' Competent, Brief History Of U. S. Unionism

ALEINE AUSTIN'S new book, "The Labor Story," is a competent, brief history of main developments in trade unionism in the United States from 1786 to 1949, based on reliable and fair authorities.

Several years ago, Miss Austin worked in the National CIO's Education and Research Dept., as a student aide from Antioch College. She now has a master's degree from Columbia University, where she specialized in American labor history. Her background also includes factory work during the war, picketing, close association with trade unionists and teaching workers' classes.

Miss Austin draws on these experiences for her point of view, which is warmly friendly to unions and shows an understanding of their real meaning and importance in American life, too often missing in "ivory tower" academic studies

ALEINE AUSTIN

Social progress, she believes, lies in a strong, democratic labor movement.

History books seldom mention the strivings of workers to better their lot, she says, preferring rather to tell of the deeds of statesmen, politicians, military leaders and industrialists, while neglecting the "labor story" part of our American heritage.

In Miss Austin's book, the important dramatic upheavals that highlight American labor history are briefed from fair and reliable sources, and their significance plainly brought out.

ESPECIALLY worth noting is a chapter on the so-called "Molly Maguires," one of the most distorted stories in labor history. Prejudice and error of fact and judgment, carried over from biased anti-labor sources from the beginning, have been picked up and repeated widely by labor historians throughout the years.

Miss Austin draws from a recent and still little known book by Marvin W. Schlegel, assistant state historian of Pennsylvania, published in 1947, to clear up some of the injustice done to the memory of the Irish anthracite miners of the 1870's

In her account of the current labor story, Miss Austin sidesteps political controversies and refrains from criticizing living labor leaders. An exception is a brief comment about the "dictatorial personality" and "lust for power" of John L. Lewis.

There is no inside dope or "low-down" in Miss Austin's book, but in little more than 200 pages, she has successfully boiled down a century and a half of labor history into a readable book that will be useful to college and high school students and others interested in getting a quick review of labor's big part in American history.

Lively Imagination

Speaking of the "big decrease" in the cost of living in the past year—as most businessmen are—did you know—

. . . that a dollar buys about three and a half-cents more food this year than it did in 1948?

. . . that if your weekly grocery bill is around $15 you get only 50 cents more food for your money than a year ago?

. . . that if you spend $20 a week for food you are receiving only 70 cents more in food than last year?

. . . and that therefore, according to these Commerce Department figures, the "big" drop in the high cost of living is only a figment of the Chamber of Commerce's imagination?

Rubber Workers Get Paid-For Pensions

The CIO Rubber Workers union has signed an agreement with the Lovell Manufacturing Co., Erie, Pa., providing for a pension and insurance plan paid for by the employer.

The program, which covers 500 employes, calls for 6c an hour per worker for pensions, and 4c for social insurance.

Truman Pledges Continued Civil Rights Fight

TWICE within a week President Truman said that he would continue his efforts to obtain civil rights legislation.

Newspapermen interpreted his statements to mean that he would fight for his program when Congress reconvenes in January.

The stronger statement of his intention to do battle for civil rights was made at the annual meeting of the Natl. Council of Negro Women when he declared:

"All of us here tonight have a deep interest in a great enterprise—the extension of freedom and opportunity to all our citizens without racial or religious discrimination. The people of this country have made much progress in this cause. We are awakened as never before to the true meaning of equality.

"We are going to continue to advance our program of bringing equal rights and equal opportunity to all our citizens. In that great cause there is no retreat and no retirement, and I know Mrs. Bethune (Mrs. Mary McLeod Bethune, retiring founder-president of the council) is going to stand by me as she has from the beginning.

"Mrs. Bethune, as you retire from the presidency of this organization, I join with your members in thanking you for your leadership, which will forever be an inspiration to those who seek to carry forward the noble purposes to which your life has been devoted."

President Truman also paid tribute to Dr. Ralph Bunche, United Nations Director of Trusteeship, who attended the meeting, and said that he was "delighted" to see Madame Pandit, Ambassador of India.

Truman said that the presence of Dr. Bunche symbolized "the great movement toward self-government, which is now going forward in many territories under United Nations auspices."

The President said that it has been the traditional policy of the United States that "such territories as came into our possession were held by us as trustees, and that is was our duty to develop their economies and their political institutions to the point where their people, if they so desired, would be able to enter the family of nations on a basis of equal partnership."

The United Nations was praised by Truman for carrying out this principle in its treatment of dependent areas.

He said that he was gratified that the Declaration of Human Rights had been evolved, for the guidance of the world, by the United Nations Commission charged with studying that question.

Dr. Bunche and Madame Pandit were among 15 persons receiving awards from the council for their "services to humanity."

The first indication that the passage of civil rights measures is still close to his heart, came on Armistice Day when he departed from his prepared text at a meeting of the executive board of the Natl. Conference of Catholics and Jews.

He said that suppression of human rights and freedom in various parts of the world represents "a new barbarism, more terrible than that of ancient times. These are the acts of men who conceive of other men as slaves."

Here he departed from his prepared text and looked at his audience as he said:

"My friends, I am doing everything of which I am capable to organize the moral forces of the world to meet this situation. I am trying to get all those people who look up, and those who know there is a greater power in the universe, to meet the challenge of those who look down and see only the materialistic side of life."

WHEN THE first session of the 81st Congress adjourned in October, the House had passed an anti-poll tax bill, but the Senate had not acted on it. However, the Senate had passed the D. C. Home Rule Bill, but the House had not taken action on it.

The FEPC bill was reported favorably by the House Labor Committee, but awaits action before the Rules Committee, and was sent to the Senate by its Labor Committee without recommendation.

The anti-lynching bill was reported favorably by the Senate Judiciary Committee, but no action was taken by the House Judiciary Committee, which held hearings.

The Senate and House Judiciary Committees have not acted on the omnibus civil rights bill, which would eliminate segregation in interstate commerce, strengthen the civil rights section of the U. S. Code, expand the civil rights division of the Justice Dept., create a joint Senate and House Committee on Civil Rights and a permanent Civil Rights Commission.

A PRESIDENTIAL tribute and an award for outstanding humanitarian work went to Mrs. Mary McCleod Bethune upon her retirement last week from the presidency of the Natl. Council of Negro Women, which she founded. Madame Pandit, Ambassador from India, and Dr. Ralph Bunche, United Nations Director of Trusteeship, (at right) received similar awards.

Awards Offered For Study Abroad

Workers and students in the fields of labor and adult education may now apply for special awards for study or research in Great Britain, the State Dept. has announced. The awards are made possible under the program for study abroad provided by the Fulbright Act.

To be eligible for a U. S. Government award candidates must be American citizens and have a B. A. degree or its equivalent and must know the language of the country for which they have applied well enough to carry on their studies abroad.

"Since certain of the applicants in these fields may not have completed their college education, the 'equivalent' of a B. A. is determined, not only by the academic record but also by professional or occupational achievement," states the announcement.

Closing date for the filing of applications is Nov. 30, 1949. Further information may be obtained from the Institute of International Education, 2 W. 45th St., New York 19, N. Y.

CIO LEADERS PROTEST: Pres. Willard Townsend, CIO Transport Service Employes, and CIO Regional Dir. Michael Mann protested to Mayor Martin Kennelly police handling of a near-race disturbance in Chicago. In separate meetings with the mayor, they charged that police failed to disperse early enough a mob of 1000 which gathered outside the home of Aaron Bindman, CIO Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union official. The mob appeared when rumors circulated that Negroes were moving into the area following an interracial meeting at Bindman's home.

Murray Indorses Christmas Seals

"I hope that every CIO member, indeed every American, will give full and warmhearted support to the annual Christmas Seal Sale of the National Tuberculosis Association," Pres. Philip Murray said.

"From the pennies of the American people at the holiday season we can finance the research and the preventive medicine to banish this dread disease from our land. Tuberculosis is a disease that can be wiped out entirely—and the Christmas Seal campaign helps each year to check its inroads on the health of all our people."

According to the National Tuberculosis Association, the disease killed 43,529 Americans last year. That is nearly a thousand a week —125 a day, or one person every 11 minutes. It causes more deaths than any other infectious disease, the Association says.

Woodworkers Map Their 1950 Demands

The CIO Woodworkers have announced that their 1950 contract demands will center on a health and welfare plan and substantial wage increases for its 40,000 members. They said they would limit demands to these two points and strike for them if necessary.

Civil Rights Campaign Planned For January

LAYING the groundwork for an intensive drive to enact civil rights legislation next January, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People conducted a conference in New York, attended by representatives of 22 organizations. Ten more organizations, including CIO and AFL, indicated support for the move but were unable to send representatives.

The conference pledged "systematic check-up on congressmen and senators" between now and January, and an all-out effort when the 81st Congress reconvenes.

Another conference will be held in Washington Jan. 15-17, NAACP announced, to which the organizations will send delegates for a mass meeting and further approaches to the lawmakers.

The battle centers in the Senate, where lack of an effective rule limiting debate has made it virtually impossible for proponents of civil rights legislation—who actually are in the majority—to break through the Dixiecrat filibusters touched off automatically by mention of civil rights.

Last session, the Democrats made a sincere attempt to change the rules. However, a majority of GOP Senators, working with the Dixiecrats, blocked action by using a technicality, and substituted a slight amendment which, in the opinion of Roy Wilkins, acting NAACP Secretary, makes it "more difficult" to invoke cloture than the previous wide-open rule.

Majority leader Scott Lucas (D., Ill.) has stated that among the first business on the Senate agenda in January will be civil rights legislation, agreeing with NAACP that the issue must be brought to a definitive test.

The lobbying effort for the next two months will put its main emphasis on the pivotal marginal states in which Senate races will be held next year, Wilkins said.

If Labor Gets Out Vote

Negative Policy Assures Defeat Of GOP In 1950

By NATHAN ROBERTSON

REPUBLICAN leaders, by deciding to continue their blind opposition to the Fair Deal program, have virtually assured a big Democratic victory in next year's Congressional elections—provided labor does its part in getting out the vote.

Making predictions is not my forte. Too much of the modern forecasting game is hocus-pocus. But post-election statements by Republican leaders make it safe to forecast that next year—unless something unforeseen develops—the Republicans will take their worst off-year beating since 1934, when the late President Roosevelt was at the height of his popularity.

These statements from their responsible leaders indicate the Republicans will continue to roll up a voting record in Congress of almost solid opposition to the most important Fair Deal proposals.

A Prediction

Nathan Robertson, columnist for Labor Press Association and one of Washington's better known reporters, tries his hand at political forecasting in the accompanying article.

This voting record has spelled defeat for the Republicans in almost every election for a generation—regardless of the candidates they put up or the tactics they use during election campaigns.

That the Republicans plan to continue the same obstructionist policy in Congress was made clear by Sen. Robert A. Taft, Republican boss of the Senate, and by former Gov. Harold Stassen of Minnesota, once the "white hope" of liberal Republicans.

TAFT TOLD THE New York Herald Tribune that he did not regard the New York election as a setback for the Republican party nationally—and said the Republicans in Congress would go ahead with plans to oppose most of the Truman plan in Congress.

Stassen said almost the same thing. Although he admitted the Republican party was in a bad way and needed reorganization, he said it should oppose the Truman Administration's "gravy train" approach to domestic issues.

These statements show the party has not learned anything from the defeat of Sen. John Foster Dulles and the other Democratic triumphs in the recent elections. The Republicans seem to believe they can continue to vote against the people's interests from one election to the next and still win.

To most Washington observers their persistence seems suicidal. Perhaps it is induced by the fact that the Republicans get their big campaign funds from duPonts and others like them who would not support any more liberal program. Partly it results from the fact that the Republicans still in office, after 20 years of Democratic victories, come from the most conservative areas of the country and no longer represent the viewpoint of the rank and file even within the Republican party.

There once were many liberals in the Republican party—men like LaFollette, Norris and Borah. They are gone. Few liberals are left. The conservatives are in control.

REGARDLESS OF causes, the determination of the Republicans to remain ultra-conservative assures continued Democratic victories. The voters this year showed again that they favor the Truman reforms and cannot be scared by such catchwords as "welfare state" and "statism." They want social progress regardless of what it is called.

So long as the Republicans continue to vote against measures that are obviously needed and wanted by the people, and to denounce such measures as "gravy," the people will vote for someone else.

The people obviously believe, with President Truman, that this nation is wealthy enough to afford a better standard of living for many of its people—that only by raising the living standards of the ill-fed and ill-housed can the nation reach its objective of sustained full employment.

THE ONLY "IF" in all of this is whether the people generally are kept sufficiently informed of what goes on to get out and vote on election day. That is where organized labor plays a big part in the future of the country.

Republicans like Taft and Stassen represent a well-organized minority who have a vested interest in maintaining conditions as they are—in high profits, in monopoly powers, and in weak government. These people have money for political organization and propaganda. They are always on the job.

Labor unions are composed of millions of people who have only begun to realize how political decisions affect them and their lives. They know the kind of a country they want—but they have had little experience in organizing politically. The last two elections have shown they are learning. If they continue, the political future of the country is assured.

Eric Johnston Says

Small Manufacturers Often More Efficient Than Big Ones

ERIC JOHNSTON, president of the Motion Picture Association and the former head of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, appeared before the House monopoly investigating committee as a defender of big business, but ended up admitting the public would suffer no harm if duPont control of GM were severed.

Johnston also agreed that small manufacturers often were more efficient than the big ones—listing a long number of products from washing machines to toasters of which the leading producers are small companies.

The motion picture spokesman was an engaging and far franker witness than were Crawford H. Greenwalt, president of duPont, and Earl Bunting, managing director of the Nalt. Association of Manufacturers, the day before. Both denied there was any need to do anything about monopoly or concentration and completely whitewashed industry as it stands.

Both Greenwalt and Bunting tried to tell the committee that any limitation of big business as to size would hurt the consumer. Bunting did admit, however, that small business was as efficient as big business.

ERIC JOHNSTON
Not Always for Bigness

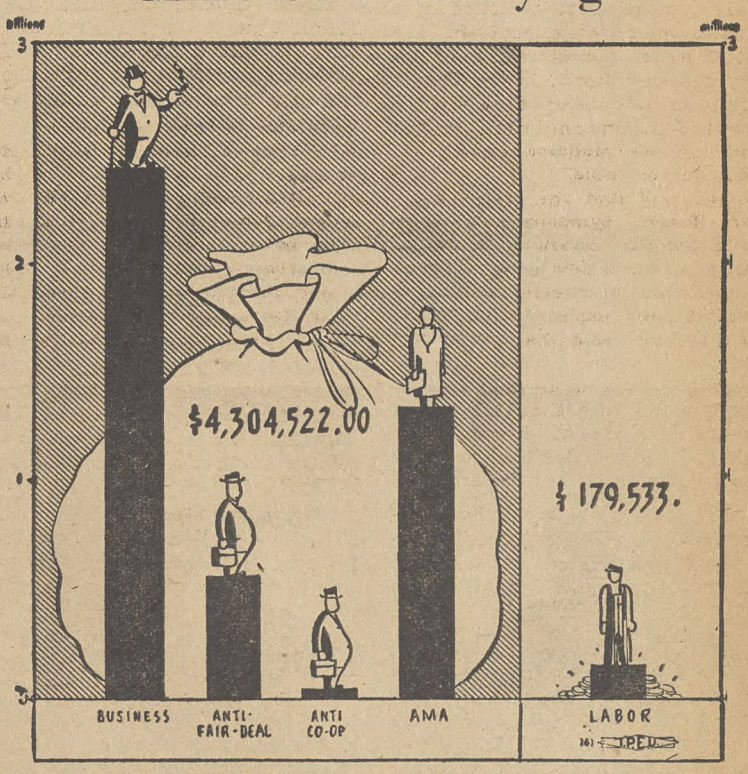
Both Greenwalt and Bunting tatlked as if full competition prevailed in industry today and denied that even when two or three companies control an industry there was undue concentration. The committee obviously was unimpressed—but most of the daily newspapers gave their statements full play.

Johnston showed real concern for continuation of competition in business, although he tried to argue that price leadership in an industry constituted competition. When he started to attack those who want to break up big industries as socialists, because such action would interfere with production, Chairman Celler (D., N. Y.) asked:

"If duPont gives up control of GM and members of the duPont family give up control of US Rubber, would that deprive the public of any products?" Johnston admitted it would not. Celler then asked if breaking up GM into companies dealing with autos, frigidaries, etc., would hurt the consumer. Johnston hedged.

He denied the motion picture association had anything to do with anti-trust matters, asserting it was concerned only with morals and ethics in the industry.

Millions For Lobbying



DURING THE FIRST SESSION of the 81st Congress, anti-Fair Deal forces spent $4,304,522 while labor and other employe groups spent only $179,533 for lobbying. Business outfits directly spent $2,444,637. Special anti-Fair Deal groups spent $570,-484. Special anti-co-op groups spent $44,373, and the American Medical Association spent $1,225,028—largely for fighting health insurance. (Not all lobby groups are listed in this chart; expenditures of miscellaneous groups brought the total to nearly $6,300,000 as reported in the Nov. 14 CIO NEWS.)

Convention Was Dictatorship, Scream Left-Wing Union Papers

THE overwhelming votes by which the recent CIO convention ordered a "housecleaning" represented dictatorship —not democracy.

That's the line taken by the Commie-loving newspapers which prior to the convention damned the CIO leadership for nearly everything under the sun.

"Mask Hiding Dictatorship Comes Off At Cleveland—ILWU Faces Expulsion Because Of Its Rank and File Control," says a headline in the Dispatcher, publication of the Longshoremen and Warehousemen's Union.

Yammered the Dispatcher:

"In one of the most hysterical and desperate performances ever seen at a labor convention, the National CIO top brass last week steamrollered through a be-ruled-or-be-wrecked program against its national and international affiliates and industrial union councils."

The Union, newspaper of the Mine-Mill union, declared the convention was "marked by unbelievable hysteria" and was suffering from "ouster fever."

"CIO Sets Up Carey In Company Scheme," says the headline in the UE News. Another headline says, "Convention Sickens UE Members."

All of which caused a seasoned observer who attended the convention and then read left-wing newspaper reports about it to comment:

"Gee, this is the first time I knew the CIO held two conventions in Cleveland this year—the one over 200 of us reported for our papers and the one the Commie lads wrote about."

Colorado CIO Backs Denver Walkout

The Colorado CIO Council's executive board is backing the strike of Local 154, CIO Rubber Workers, against the Gates Rubber Co., Denver, where 2200 workers have been on strike since Oct. 15.

The strike occured after six months of negotiations during which the company persisted in saying "no" to the requests for a pension plan, merit increases, paid sick leave and a union shop, according to Council Secy-Treas. Eugene Rosati.

The council called on all affiliated unions "to give all-out support in every way possible to the striking rubber workers, by financial donations, food donations and by doing picket duty."

Prefabs Grow Up

Prefabricated housing is growing out of the "infant" industry class, a report by the U.S. Labor Dept. shows. Employment rose in the industry this summer but will go down again this winter because of seasonal factors, the study predicted.

FE Local Votes 1021 For CIO, 57 For UE

The executive board of Local 101, Farm Equipment Workers, has announced that their members voted overwhelmingly for the CIO in preference to United Electrical Workers, with which the FE international executive board recently decided to merge.

The vote was announced as follows: For affiliation with CIO, 1021; against affiliation, or for UE, 57; void, 10; challenged, 3. Members of the local are employed at the Chicago Tractor Works of the International Harvester Co.

"The election," the local's executive board said, "was conducted successfully in spite of a planned program of disruption and confusion effectively preventing many workers from voting. This disruptive program, directed by outsiders who do not work at the Tractor Works and owe their allegiance to the United Electrical Workers recently expelled from the CIO for Communist activity, coerced and intimidated our fellow workers. (FE also was expelled for ignoring a CIO executive board order to merge with the CIO Auto Workers.)

"We bitterly condemn the deliberate sabotage of our traditionally American secret ballot system," the board said. "We are convinced that if only UE had been on the ballot, with no other choice, the election would have met with the approval of the disrupting elements. "

The board asked the CIO Auto Workers to enter the picture "because it is the CIO affiliate with jurisdiction in the farm implement field."

The election was conducted by Father Daniel M. Cantwell, Russell Packard, attorney, and Truman K. Gibson, businessman.

Fla. Governor Buys Ad To Tell Why He's For Strikers

TWICE WITHIN six days, Gov. Fuller Warren of Florida, went to bat for the striking Tampa CIO Transport Workers bus drivers.

His latest effort consisted of a half-page advertisement in the local newspaper in which he answered an editorial in the Tampa Tribune criticizing the position he had taken on behalf of the union.

The ad, which appeared over the Governor's signature, said:

"Since the Tribune is owned largely by New York, Chicago and Richmond capitalists and pursues a policy of opposition to the welfare of the average man and of almost outright hostility to the working man, it is not hard to understand why the Tribune resents the comments I made about the refusal of the bus company to be fair to its bus drivers."

Previously, Warren had described the Tampa Transit companys' offer of a three cents an hour raise to TWU members as reminding him, "of the penny tip I was offered many years ago when I was a bellboy." He added that the offer was, "almost insulting."

"I am very much disappointed," Warren continued, "that the Tampa Transit Lines has rejected the bus drivers' generous and public spirited offer to drive the busses free of charge in order to transport school children . . .

"If Tampa Transit has been that obstinate and unreasonable in negotiating with the bus drivers, it is not hard to understand an agreement has not been reached.

"The bus drivers' request for an eight-hour day instead of a nine-hour day seems fair and reasonable. . . . Eight hours a day is the standard accepted work day in nearly all lines of business. To my way of thinking, eight hours a day of hard work is as much as a human being can stand without injury."

Warren was elected in 1948 with CIO support after a strenuous primary fight. His record since election has been consistently liberal.

Bridges Trial Opens In S. F.

"HERE WE GO again," remarked CIO Longshoremen's Pres. Harry Bridges, as the latest in a series of attempts to deport him to his native Australia got under way at the trial which opened last week in San Francisco.

Bridges and two fellow officers of his union—James R. Robertson and Henry Schmidt—are being tried on charges of perjury and conspiracy in connection with their denial at his naturalization hearing four years ago that Bridges was a Communist.

Attempts to deport Bridges date back 10 years. Long deportation hearings against him were held in 1939 and again in 1941. In 1945, the Supreme Court ruled that no conclusive evidence to prove that Bridges was a Communist had been submitted, and Bridges later received his citizenship.

The prosecution claims that it now has new evidence. Among the witnesses the prosecution plans to present is Mervyn Rathborne, former secretary-treasurer of the California CIO Council, who some months ago made a statement against his former union associate.

The trial is expected to last about two months. If convicted, Bridges stands to lose his citizenship and to be deported.

N.Y. Post Pays $117 Top Minimum

The New York Newspaper Guild, CIO, has signed a contract with the New York Post Home News, providing for a top weekly minimum of $117 in key classifications after six years' employment.

Negotiations had been in progress since December 1948 and the settlement came only a few hours before a Nov. 7 strike deadline. The agreement was the first containing a raise in minimums on a New York City daily paper since July 1948, when the N. Y. Times contract was signed.

Other gains included a five-day, 35-hour week, improved vacation and severance pay schedules and a better job security clause. The Guild shop clause was continued.

"If it's pro-labor, I'll go! But if it's anti-labor—nix!"

Slums Called Breeders Of Disease

THIS generation, as well as those to come, can be saved the scourge of tuberculosis through the knowledge the scientists now have at their control, "but the ultimate victory will be retarded by housing conditions that do nothing but favor the spread and perpetuation of this age-old disease."

That is what the surgeon-general of the United States, Dr. Leonard A. Scheele, told the Natl. Association of Housing Officials, meeting at Boston.

The head of the Public Health Service singled out the slums of six of the nation's biggest cities, where disease-breeding conditions should be cause for "real indignation."

Besides Washington, the nation's capital, Scheele charged that Hartford, Conn.; Birmingham, Ala.; Cleveland, Denver and Los Angeles show the "supreme tragedy" of the the fact that, despite scientific knowledge, the medical men are powerless to prevent the slum-created diseases from killing thousands of people.

He hailed the public housing bill passed by the 81st Congress as a triumph of the "deep desire of the American people for safe, healthful, decent homes" over "selfish interests." The measure will allow 810,000 units of low-rent public housing to be built over the next six years.

Going into detail, Scheele listed the "cold facts" about the six cities he singled out:

Washington, D. C.—TB death rate 99% higher in slums than for the rest of the population. Pneumonia rate in slums more than 25% higher.

Birmingham, Ala.—Rate of communicable diseases per 1000 population 65% higher in the blighted areas than elsewhere in the city.

Hartford, Conn.—One-fourth of the population, which lives in poor housing, produces more than half the TB cases each year and sends nearly 40% of the city's mentally ill to state institutions.

Cleveland—One small slum area, occupied by less than 3% of the population, needed 8% of the city's total public health budget.

Denver—Five times as many infants per 1000 died in low-quality housing districts as did in the best districts; juvenile delinquency was more than twice as high.

Los Angeles—Its slums breed TB rates nearly eight times higher than in the better districts, and venereal disease rates 13 times as high.

Pensions, Hospital Care Won In Dravo Strike

BETTER SENIORITY provisions and a new insurance program were among improvements won by the CIO shipbuilding workers in their 110-day strike against Dravo Co. of Pittsburgh, Pa.

A pension plan between Bethlehem Steel Corp., owners of the company, and the Bethlehem Atlantic Coast Committee of the union, which represents workers at the seven East coast Bethlehem yards (including Dravo), will be negotiated.

The company agreed to pay 4 cents per hour toward an insurance program with each participating employee contributing 3 cents. A hospitalization policy, entirely company-financed, pays up to $7 a day for a period of 31 days for members and their families. There is no limit to the number of visits a policy holder and his family may make in a year to accredited medical institution.

A significant decision regarding application of the Traft-Hartley Act was rendered by a Pittsburgh district judge when the company sought a temporary injunction shortly after the strike began.

In refusing to grant the company's petition, the judge ruled that if the number of pickets was limited to 10, the company in turn would have to agree not to attempt operation of the plant while the strike was in progress.

On the first day of the strike more than 1000 pickets massed about the gates of the company.

Improper Electioneering Causes NLRB To Void Vote

CONDUCT of the Department Store Employes Union at the polls went "far beyond the limits of legitimate electioneering," the NLRB declared, in setting aside a vote held at the Stern Brothers store in New York.

This leftist-led union, now independent, left the CIO some months ago, when the CIO first began cracking down on unions charged with being Communist-dominated.

In the election, held last March, Local 5 of the independent union received 763 votes to 612 for an AFL union.

The unanimous decision of the NLRB reversed an earlier recommendation of a trial examiner who found the union's conduct at the polls "very close to the extreme limits of permissive conduct," but overruled objections filed by the AFL union "in view of the fact that the election was among sophisticated employes accustomed to the practices in the New York labor movement."

In setting aside the election, the NLRB found that the independent union had used "threats of bodily harm, assaults, and threats of individual economic disaster, coupled with an attempt, by misrepresenting the hour at which the polls would close, to deprive a number of employes of the opportunity of casting their ballots."

Publishers To Fight Anti-Trust Suit

The American Newspaper Publishers Association has filed a motion to appear as "friend of the court" in the Federal Government's anti-trust suit at Cleveland against the Lorain, Ohio Journal. The Justice Dept. accuses the paper of violating the Sherman anti-trust law by refusing to publish ads of businesses that advertise in rival newspapers or on rival radio stations.

WHEN THE CANTON, OHIO, PAC learned that T. J. Mullane, 78, who has been bedfast four years, wanted to register, an ambulance was obtained to take him to a registration station. Registrars are Mrs. Dolores Kuhn (left) and Mrs. Vera Elliott.

Expediter Woods Fights N. Y. C. Rent Curb Law

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

HOUSING Expediter Tighe Woods, the man who is supposed to keep your rents down, has intervened on the side of the real estate lobby in New York City and is putting the full power of his legal staff behind the landlords' efforts to get around a city law freezing rents at the March 1, 1949, level.

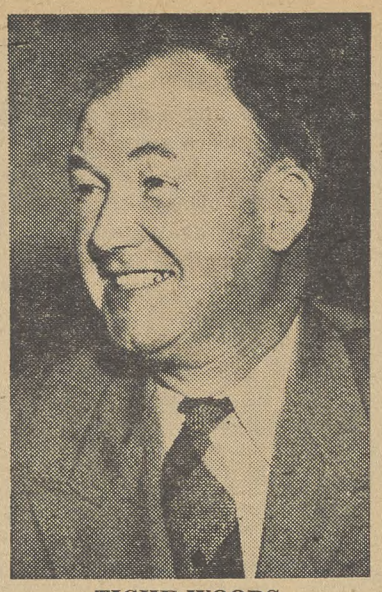
Woods' counsel appeared in a court case and said the landlords were right, the city was wrong, and the tenants who wanted to abide by the law were wrong.

Woods' office claims that he was forced to this position by the language of the Federal law, which allows a city to do away with rent control, with the governor's consent, but is silent on the question of whether a city can pass a law which is tougher than the Federal statute.

The Housing Expediter says that because the Federal law is silent on this point, the city may not act. The city law, Woods says, conflicts with several provisions of the Federal law, and therefore the language of the Federal law must prevail.

Attorneys for the city contend that the Federal law sets up maximum rents, while the city law sets up minimum rents, and that nothing in the Federal law prevents a municipality from going beyond the terms of the Federal statute in order to make the Federal statute more effective.

THE New York City Council was very active in pressing for adoption of the City law, which went into effect last month. Known as the Sharkey law, it freezes rents as of March 1, 1949, sets up a City Rent Commission, and states that no increase approved by Woods' regional office in New York City can go into effect unless the City Commission also has approved it. It further sets a limit of 15% on allowable increases above the March level.



TIGHE WOODS

Housing Expediter, whose intervention on the landlords' side comes as no surprise.

Woods' intervention on the side of the landlords in this case was not unexpected. Not only is he a landlord himself (he is part owner of Housing, Inc., and is busily marketing $6450 "dreamhouses" in Virginia), but he was in the real estate business in Chicago before he came to Washington, and his first appearance in the capital was as head of a delegation seeking relief from the wartime rent law.

"If the real estate lobby is planning to choose its man of the year," comments the N. Y. Post, "Housing Expediter Tighe Woods has richly earned the reward. The citation could be long and affectionate . . . Fundamentally he is accusing New York City of attempting to perpetuate rent control . . . We need a Housing Expediter who believes in rent control."

THE SHARKEY law went on the books because Woods' regional office had granted rent increases averaging 45% since the new Federal law went into effect, using the "fair net operating income" criterion set up by Congress in the most reckless manner.

On a nation-wide basis, Woods has decontrolled 2,268,046 rental units in the past six months. There are now approximately 12,000,000 left under control. Apparently he would rather remove controls entirely than grant rent increase, because the number of units granted increases is relatively small—about 350,000. The average increase granted is 19%. These are Woods' own figures.

But that doesn't tell the whole story, because it's only what Woods' office has done. A total of 173 cities have lifted controls on their own hook, with the approval of their state governors. Three state legislatures—Nebraska, Texas and Alabama—have passed bills decontrolling whole states. The Florida legislature decontrolled part of the state.

And one state, Wisconsin, has substituted its own rent control law for the Federal statute—a move that Woods seems to think is all right, although in the New York case he thinks it's all wrong. The Wisconsin law, needless to say, is less restrictive on landlords than the Federal statute.

THE CIO Housing Committee has moved in on the Wisconsin situation with all guns blazing. Contending that either it's a Federal law or it isn't, the Committee has sued Woods in the District Court in D. C. for unconstitutional delegation of power to the state.

The Committee's argument is that the Federal rent control law is a defense measure and that Congress may not delegate defense powers to subdivisions of government.

No decision has been handed down as yet, but the constitutional question is an extremely important one. A ruling in CIO's and the tenant's favor in the Wisconsin case would ultimately have the effect of restoring controls in those areas which have removed them on their own hooks.

The Wisconsin law was passed July 30 and Woods formally relinquished Federal control on Aug. 5. The state law permits increases of up to 30% and is without effective enforcement provisions, or safeguards against gouging practices.

The plaintiff in the court case is a member of the Auto Workers, Edith Shimek of Milwaukee, who was required to sign a five-year lease and pay the fifth year's rent in advance in order to get a place for herself and her two sons to live. The case came to light through the operation of the state CIO rent clinic, set up immediately after the state law passed.

THERE ARE many thousands of cases just like Mrs. Shimek's," commented UAW Pres. Walter Reuther, head of the CIO Housing Committee.

In Chicago, CIO regional director Michael Mann, who also is a member of the Cook County Rent Advisory Commission, has just rung up a significant victory over the real estate groups after a long and hectic fight.

Mann, with the close cooperation of all CIO groups in the county, has put through the rent advisory board, by an 8 to 5 vote, its second disapproval of a general rent increase in Chicago.

The first disapproval, won by the close vote of 8 to 7, was contested in the U. S. Appeals Court by the Apartment Building and Owners' Association of Chicago after Woods' office had approved the board's refusal to hike rents. The court found that Woods and the Board did not have enough facts to go on, and ordered them to find supporting evidence.

The amount of the general increase sought in Cook County has varied from 11%, approved by a rent advisory board sub-committee, to 45%, demanded by the so-called Cook County Fair Rent Committee.

Woods' office has not yet acted upon the second turndown. (Under the law, recommendations of local advisory boards go into effect unless disapproved by Woods within 30 days.)

The whole subject of rent control will come under Congressional review early next session, since by January it is estimated that Woods will have exhausted the inadequate appropriation voted him by Congress to enforce the present statute.

He will be forced to ask for a deficiency appropriation; i.e., some more money to carry on till the end of the fiscal year. Whether he gets it or not depends on how Congress is feeling about rent control at the time—and how Congress is feeling depends to a large extent on what the unions do between now and January.

Reds Agin' It

New York City's Communists lined up on the landlords' side, too, in the struggle which preceded adoption of the Sharkey law.

Benjamin Davis Jr., admitted Communist who was defeated for re-election to the City Council Nov. 8, fought the measure bitterly in the Council, on the alleged grounds that it did not go far enough.

Pro-Communist members of the city CIO Council did likewise.

Apparently nothing is better than something, according to the party line.

Keyserling Says Housing For All Is 'Practical Objective'

"THE GOAL OF a decent home for every American family within 10 years is not just a slogan. It is a practical objective that can be achieved."

So said Leon Keyserling, acting chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, in addressing the annual conference of the Natl. Association of Housing Officials last week.

While private builders were crowing about the 843,100 nonfarm housing starts made the first 10 months of this year, Keyserling pointed out that the present building rate would have to be increased to 2 million by 1959 if every American family is to have a decent home by then. The present "record" rate is slightly higher than the 1925 all-time high.

One factor which will lend impetus to the building rate in the next six years is the Federal public housing program approved last June after a bitter five-year struggle.

So far 108 communities in 27 states, the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico have begun laying the groundwork for setting up public housing projects under the federal act.

Government loans totaling more than $20 million have been approved to finance the costly planning work involved. Loans for actual construction will not begin until detailed plans and cost estimates are completed.

None of the more than 200,000 units so far authorized has reached the construction stage yet, but public housing officials hope that 50,000 units will be under way by the middle of next year.

There are 103 local housing authorities in the country which have not requested loans or have not received approval of their city councils.

CIO officials have been urging their membership to press local authorities to take advantage of the federal program.

In addition to concentrating on slum clearance and slum redevelopment, the Housing Officials, whom Keyserling addressed, gave some serious attention to the problem of discrimination and segregation in housing.

The Association authorized its board of directors to appoint a committee to study the "problem of tenant selection and displacement of minority groups" in public housing and redevelopment projects.

Unanimously adopted, the resolution called for "particular emphasis on Northern communities."

Author of the resolution, Charles Abrams of New York, said the situation is "deteriorating" in the North and specifically charged the Boston Housing Authority with promoting "Jim Crowism."

Abrams praised San Francisco for its recent passage of a statute outlawing segregation in public housing.

Railroads Found Favoring GM, Ford

Examiners for the Interstate Commerce Commission have ordered the railroads to stop giving "unduly" low special rates to General Motors and Ford Motor Co. on shipment of autos. The case came up when Chrysler, Packard, Hudson, Studebaker, Nash and Willys complained they had to pay higher rates.

Should CP Paper Have More Frequent Staff Meetings?

ON THE editorial page of the People's World, West Coast Communist daily, there was comment recently on "a docile, anti-Communist organization as against a militant, aggressive labor union."

On another page, under the headline "Press Ignores Praise of UE by Boss," there appeared this account of a meeting of the bitterly anti-labor Los Angeles Merchants & Manufacturers Association:

"Did you read in the big dailies about the retiring official of the General Electric Co., who spoke at a recent conference at Palm Springs in high praise of the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Worker of America?

"Yep, that's the same union which was expelled from the CIO . . . at the national CIO convention as 'Communist-ridden,' 'hotbed of radicals,' etc. You know the old phony guff.

"Five reporters for Los Angeles papers were at the Palm Springs conference on employer-employe relations sponsored by the Merchants & Manufacturers Assn. and they all heard the words of praise for UE.

"But nary a word crept into their reports on what H. L. R. Emmet, retiring manager of the big Erie, Pa., plant of GE, had to say about the UE and particularly about its president, Albert J. Fitzgerald, and its director of organization, James J. Matles. The plant employes 15,000, all UE members.

"Eyes of 200 big wig industrialists present popped out when they heard those kind words from Emmet. Emmet told the closing session of the conference that 'unions are indispensible to achieve individual justice for the worker.' . . .

"He said he had worked successfully with Pres. Fitzgerald and Dir. Matles 'for years' and 'I consider them friends of mine . . . We have always gotten along well together.'"

Hold in Cellophane Released By DuPont

E. I. DuPont de Nemours & Co., the giant concern that holds exclusive patent on cellophane, has licensed Olin Industries, Inc. to produce it. The freeing of DuPont's hold on the patents, the giant corporation acknowledged, came after the Justice Dept. filed a suit charging it with monopoly practices.

Senate Committee Reports

10 Million U. S. Families Live On Less Than $2000 A Year

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

NEARLY 13 years ago, Franklin D. Roosevelt told the American people in his famous inaugural address —"I see one-third of a nation ill-housed, ill-clad and ill-nourished."

A report on America's low income families today, just issued by a Congressional committee indicates little improvement in the economic situation of the group mentioned by the President in his speech of Jan. 20, 1937. This current report states that nearly 10 million families, or about one quarter of the total 38.5 million families in the U. S., received less than $2000 cash income last year.

Issued by the Subcommittee on Low-Income Families, headed by Sen. John Sparkman (D., Ala.), the report was prepared for the Joint Committee on the Economic Report by the subcommittee's staff.

The facts and figures packed in the report show why the problems of low-income families are holding back the economic stability of the country and offer powerful and persuasive arguments for labor's program of higher wages, and increased production.

"TO MAINTAIN maximum employment of the nation's material and human resources," states the report, "the economy must consume and invest the total quantity of goods and services produced.

"Demand for consumer goods, backed up by wartime accumulations of liquid funds, has kept investment and employment at high levels since the end of hostilities in 1945. High investment has increased industrial capacity, which has considerably increased the total flow of consumer goods.

"If there are to be ample employment opportunities, this flow of consumer goods must be steadily consumed. Old markets must be expanded and new markets developed.

"The unfilled wants of American families now living on inadequate incomes constitute a great underdeveloped economic frontier—a new and expansible market for the products of American industry. In an economic system geared to mass production there must be mass consumption if severe economic dislocations are to be avoided.

"The low-income families have been left behind in the economic progress of America. They do not have many of the products considered symbolic of the American standard of living. For example, in 1946 there were about 2 million non-farm families living in houses without running water.

"Some low-income families live at levels below even the most conservative estimate of the minimum necessary for health and decency. These families would buy a larger quantity of the goods produced by the economic capacity of the nation, if their needs were backed by ability to buy."

Concentrating its attention on the numbers and circumstances of urban families with less than $2000 cash income and of farm families with less than $1000, the report describes the varied composition of the nearly 10 million families in this low-income group. It notes that most of these are urban or non-farm families, with only about 3.3 million living on farms.

AMONG THE DISTINCT groups in the low-income class are impoverished old people; unskilled and semi-skilled service workers and laborers, whose low income "may be partially explained as the result of their poor bargaining strength"; non-white families; broken families and disabled persons in need of vocational rehabilitation who number about 1.5 million.

A section of living conditions notes that food costs take about half the income of city families with incomes under $2000, and 74% of the income of those receiving below $1000. The proportion decreases as the income rises, amounting to only 17% for those above $7500.

The per person costs of food averaged only $6 a week for families in the under-$2000 income group and $17 for families in the higher income bracket.

Discussing the relation between low income and lack of education, the report finds a vicious circle: "Lack of education is an important cause of low earning power, but low incomes are also a factor helping to explain lack of education. Educational opportunities in the U. S., at least above the grammar school level, still depend upon income status in marked degree. The result is a process which may tend to stratify the population."

SOME OF THE industries paying wages of less than $1 an hour, or less than $2000 per year of full employment are given in the report:

- Over three-fourths of the workers engaged in the manufacture of men's and boys, dress shirts and nightwear.
- Over 90% of those engaged in making work shirts and pants.
- Over 72% of the plant workers in men's seamless hosiery mills.
- About 69% of all fertilizer plant workers.
- Almost 60% of the 90,000 plant workers in wood furniture factories.
- More than 45% of the plant workers in men's shoe factories.
- A large proportion of the total proportion of the total work force in department and women's ready-to-wear stores.

In addition to family groups in the low-income class, the report also gives facts and figures on "individuals not in families." There are about 8 million individuals not in families, 6 million of whom received income under $2000 a year in 1948, 4 million of these made less than $1000.

Only 1 million individuals not in families have incomes of $3000 or more.

One-fourth of the males with incomes under $1000 were engaged as farmers or farm laborers; 19% were service workers; and 17% were professional or semi-professional workers.

A larger proportion of the women at the lowest-income level were employed as service workers than all other occupations combined.

Union Shop At GM Sought

THE CIO Auto Workers will demand a union shop in its 1950 bargaining demands from General Motors, UAW-GM Dir. T. A. Johnstone announced.

Representatives of the 265,000 workers covered by UAW contracts made the decision at a two-day meeting.

The GM contract expires May 29. Negotiations may start March 29. Before negotiations start, the NLRB will hold a union-shop poll among GM workers. At a similar election at Ford last spring the union shop won, 88,943 to 1241.

Final demands on other aspects of the GM contract have not yet been decided.

GM made the headlines Nov. 9 with its announcement of an $8 dividend, almost double the 1948 figure. The giant corporation had a net profit of over half a billion dollars for the first nine months of this year.

"The boss was so mad he ate the union contract, but he still found it binding!"

Tobin To Speak

Secretary of Labor Maurice Tobin will be the keynote speaker at an institute at Atlanta Dec. 3 and 4, on "Report From the 81st Congress," sponsored by the Georgia Workers Education Service.

Injunction Sparks Violence Against TWUA In N. Carolina

ROVING bands of scabs have turned the peaceful little town of Tarboro, N. C., into a center of almost daily violence, reports the CIO Textile Workers Union.

Some 530 workers of the Hart Cotton Mill in Tarboro have been on strike since May 12 because of the company's refusal to renew a contract with the union.

For five months the workers continued peacefully to picket the mill, then the company obtained an anti-strike injunction and trouble started.

Latest violence, states the union, includes the dynamiting of a striker's home in nearby Fountain mill village, and the beating of R. H. Harris, TWUA representative.

The home of A. C. Hughes, member of the union strike committee, was the target of the explosion. None of the Hughes family was at home when the dynamiting occurred. As yet police report they have failed to turn up a single clue.

HARRIS SAID he was set upon by a group of scabs as he sat in his car one morning on Tarboro's main street. Police were nowhere to be found during the fray and failed even to investigate after the attack took place, the union reported.

Four men dragged Harris out of his car and beat him about the head until fellow union members and merchants rushed out of nearby stores to drive them off. The union swore out warrants for the attackers, one of whom, Melvin Smith, was involved in an earlier assault on a union member.

Smith was released an hour after his arrest, on bail furnished by the Hart Cotton Mill, the TWUA says. Later he was given a four months suspended sentence, placed on two years' probation and fined $100 and costs, Another scab, Roy Brock, was given 60 days suspended sentence, two years' probation and fined $50. The other two were found not guilty.

An investigation of anti-union activities in Southern mills is being conducted by a subcommittee of the House Committee on Labor and Education. Hearings on the Hart Mill strike, first scheduled for Oct. 20, were postponed to Nov. 23, in Atlanta, Ga. The union has arranged to have a group of mill workers and union representatives tell their story to the Congressional committee.

Lewis M. Conn, TWUA director for North Carolina, will tell of the union's unsuccessful attempts to negotiate a contract, and of the injunction, beatings, and threats used by the company to break the strike.

TROUBLE started at the Hart Mill on May 11,—one day before the contract expired—when the mill manager suddenly suggested the elimination of a 5c hourly third shift differential, two paid holidays, and the union dues check-off. TWUA had had three previous contracts with the Hart Mill and only two cases had gone as far as arbitration in three years.

When the union asked for renewal of the old contract to avert a strike, the company countered with a proposal to cut out the second week's vacation for employes with the company over five years, and demanded complete control over base rates.

The workers voted to strike after an offer either to arbitrate or renew the old contract was turned down. The company started a back-to-work movement after the workers had been out eight weeks. It failed, and in September an injunction limiting the number of pickets to 25 at each of the five plant gates was obtained.

More than a thousand townspeople joined the striker's ranks on the first day of the injunction. This was only one of a number of displays of backing the community gave the strikers. Storekeepers donated food and clothing and free movie tickets.

Even the mill cat moved out the day of the strike, and settled down at strike headquarters, the union stated.

The Hart Cotton Co. is one of the six mills owned by Ely & Walker Dry Goods Co., a $40 million corporation which earned $16 million last year. Its main product is print cloth, the major portion of which goes to the parent company.

Frank Leslie, president of Hart Cotton, is also well known as a detective story writer. He has disclaimed authority to settle the strike, saying that he is merely a figurehead.

Tribute Paid To Hapgood

POWERS HAPGOOD, a valiant pioneer in the CIO who died last February, was commemorated in a resolution passed by the CIO convention.

"Powers was a trouble shooter —one of those always chosen for the toughest jobs, the most dangerous assignments," the resolution read. His organizing work among rubber workers of Akron, auto workers in Flint, shoe workers in New England, mine workers in Illinois, and his defense of the underdog from the time of Sacco and Vanzetti, were cited to illustrate his untiring fight for freedom and his crusade against injustice.

U. S. Cancer Research

An improved cancer case-finding aid may be evolved from a technique used in the instantaneous processing of radar photographs. An Army invention, the process has potential value in the rapid examination of individuals for cancer of the stomach. Funds for development of the process were included in 10 new grants for cancer control announced by Federal Security Administrator Oscar R. Ewing.

Sweets Firm Sour On Safety Practices

"Certain sweets should leave a very sour taste in the mouth of any union member."

So says the strike committee at Pangburn's Candy Co., Fort Worth, Tex., a firm that sells candy in 46 states.

Company officials have refused to meet with representatives of the CIO Packinghouse Workers to discuss health and safety measures, seniority, wage adjustments, grievances and vacations.

The union, asking fellow unionists not to buy Pangburn's candy, says:

"Employes have been hurt on a moving belt, which carries candy from one floor to another. There's no safety switch on the lower floor. The union offered to pay $2 for installing a switch . . . The company refused with this comment, 'Another accident might not happen for 10 years.'

"Incidentally, the company president is also president of the Fort Worth Safety Council."

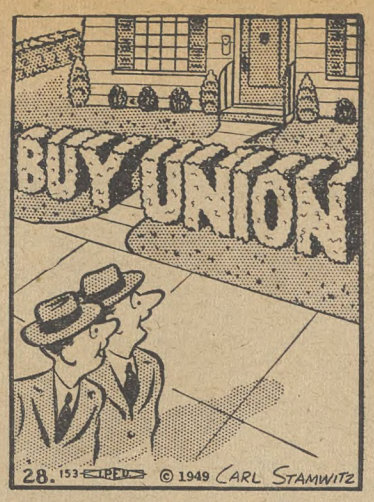
NAM To Shout Loudly 'Unions Are Monopoly'

IT'S DOLLARS to doughnuts that your local paper will be heavy with stories about "labor monopoly" during the first part of December.

For on Dec. 8 the gentlemen of the powerful Natl. Association of Manufacturers tramp into the swank Waldorf-Astoria Hotel on New York's Park Avenue for their annual convention—the "54th Congress of American Industry."

Charges of monopoly against labor, and demands for an end to "industry-wide collective bargaining," have been the NAM's most popular theme during the past 12 months, and the convention is likely to give them new momentum. On hand from the 81st Congress to address the assembled businessmen will be Sen. John Bricker of Ohio, one of the most reactionary legislators in Washington. Bricker, who regards the Fair Deal program as straight "socialism," is going to talk on "Will We Spend Our Way to Socialism?"

His answer probably will be "yes."



"Keeps his hedge trimmed nicely doesn't he?"

GM's Wilson Wants Higher U. S. Pensions

Detroit.—Another big industry executive has called for higher Federal pensions as a result of the recent contracts won in the auto and steel industries.

Addressing a convention of Carbonated Beverage Bottlers, Pres. C. E. Wilson of General Motors declared the pension plans recently negotiated at Ford and U. S. Steel have the effect of "freezing the working population in their jobs" because they require employes to work for one company 25 years. The solution, he said, would seem to be "adequate Federal pensions operated on a sound basis."

The CIO Auto Workers union has said that as result of the Ford pension plan, the law would be revised to pay higher pensions.

He labelled the Ford and steel plans "forced savings plans" rather than "free pensions." Federal pensions, he asserted, "should be increased to reflect the change in the purchasing power of the dollar."

'Jimmie' Seeks Governorship

JAMES ROOSEVELT, 42, has announced his candidacy for governor of California in 1950, on the Truman Fair Deal platform.

The oldest son of the former president has lived in California 11 years, was state Democratic chairman from 1946 to 1948, and led a state group to the 1948 Democratic convention backing Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower for the presidential nomination.

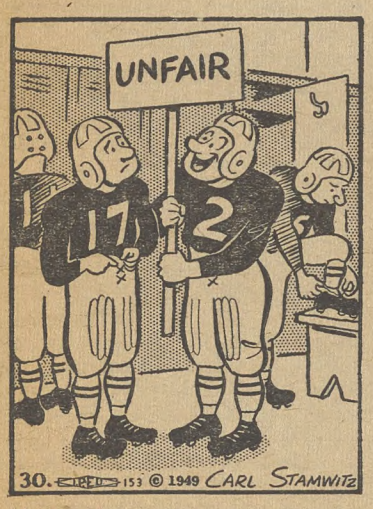
Under California's cross-filing system, his name will probably appear on both the Democratic and Republican ballots in the primary. GOP Gov. Earl Warren is expected to seek re-election, and other likely candidates are E. George Luckey, Democratic state chairman, and GOP Lieut. Gov. Goodwin J. Knight.

Roosevelt will support a compulsory health insurance program, paid for by a payroll tax as is contemplated in the federal plan supported by President Truman and organized labor, he told the press conference at which he announced his candidacy.

Two Firms Indicted In Anti-Trust Case

A federal grand jury at Philadelphia has returned an anti-trust indictment charging the Philadelphia Gas Works Co. and Motor Parts Co., of Philadelphia, with conspiring to fix prices and eliminate competition in the distribution and sale of gas refrigerators in the Philadelphia area.

Also named as defendants were Frank H. Trembly Jr., sales manager of Gas Works, and Erich E. Brehme, vice president of Motor Parts Co. The indictment charged that, since March 1946, the defendants have agreed to fix prices on gas refrigerators sold by them to dealers and to fix the prices at which such refrigerators are sold to consumers.



"We're playing that union team today, so I'm going to picket our goal line."

New Dealer Chapman Succeeds Krug

OSCAR CHAPMAN, one of the of the original New Dealers, and consistent supporter of liberal government policies, will be the next Secretary of the Interior, replacing Julius A. Krug, who resigned effective Dec. 1. Chapman has served as Under-Secretary of Interior.

Krug's resignation, announced suddenly, was the result of a long and gradual deterioration of relations between him and President Truman. Ever since the 1948 elections, when some of the leaders of the Democratic Natl. Committe felt that Krug did not do his share to re-elect the Fair Deal ticket, relations between Krug and the White House have been strained.

A marked improvement in administration of the Interior Dept., whose duties include administration of power and resources programs for the Federal government, is expected now that Chapman takes over. Krug is understood to have been in poor health for some time, and many important policy decisions have been postponed.

Krug in his letter of resignation, and President Truman in acknowledging it with regret, agreed that the 1949 elections showed the administration is doing "a pretty good job of accomplishing our objectives." Truman reiterated his adherence to a program of development, in the public interest, of our "incalculable resources." Krug pledged Truman his support in the 1950 and 1952 election contests.

Chapman is 52 years old, a veteran of World War I who settled in Denver, Colo., after his discharge from the Navy,

High Court Spurns Potash's Request

Irving Potash of the CIO Fur and Leather Workers received a setback in his fight against deportation when the Supreme Court turned down a request to bypass the Court of Appeals.

Counsel for Potash sought to jump the appellate court by taking the case to the Supreme Court at once for a decision.

Bowles Names CIOer To Post

CONNECTICUT GOV. Chester Bowles has named another state CIO official to a responsible post in his administration.

Latest in a sizeable list of CIO appointees is John A. Banks, secretary-treasurer of the Greater Hartford CIO Council, who was named housing advisor for the State Housing Administration. Banks is a member of the CIO Auto Workers.

Among the recent appointments by Bowles was the naming of Thomas E. Shackley, president of CIO Textile Workers Local 110 at Stonington as unemployment compensation commissioner for the 2nd Congressional District. Shackleys' appointment broke the solid ranks of Republican unemployment compensation commissioners in the state. He will take office Jan. 1 for a five-year term.

Other recent CIO appointments by Bowles include that of Attorney William Zeman, Hartford, CIO counsel, to the State Interracial Commission and Daniel J. Gallagher, TWUA state director, to the Rocky Hill Veterans Home Commission.

Canada To Relax Its Rent Control

Rents for Canadian tenants will jump 20 to 25% when the government relaxes its rent control program Dec. 15, Finance Minister Douglas C. Abbott has announced. In order to raise the rents, however, landlords must give tenants a one-year lease.

Landlords vs. Vets

Office of the Housing Expediter announced Nov. 7 that more than $2 million in adjustments has been obtained under the Veterans Emergency Housing Program for veterans who complained that homes they purchased were overpriced or were not in accordance with specifications.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The discredited and disintegrating ousted UE continues to display the typical tactics of dictatorship in its fight against CIO and the new IUE-CIO, according to all reports from the field.

Ousted UE leaders, shouting their love for "democracy" and "autonomy," continue to hold closed-door meetings of selected members. They refuse, to the point of physical violence, to permit the honest rank-and-file members to be told a true story of the situation regarding the ouster of UE by the CIO Convention.

Despite their tactics, the UE leaders are meeting increasing defeat in their attempts to hold together a Union organization.

Reg. Dir. Joseph M. Walsh volunteered to meet UE representatives in debate after UE members in Scranton asked for full information. The commissars not only refused to allow discussion but "expelled" the officers who had suggested it. They then declared "illegal" another meeting which had, by majority vote, decided to stick with CIO.

In Connecticut Reg. Dir. Edward McCrone has started a letter campaign addressed to the 20,000 UE members informing them of UE's expulsion by CIO and the establishment of the New IUE-CIO.

In St. Louis, Reg. Dir. Delmond Garst has mobilized the cooperation of all CIO representatives in the area to carry the message directly to the rank-and-file.

Sub.-Reg. Dir. Ralph W. Tillotson reports that one of the five Erie, Pa., UE locals has already acted to remain with CIO and that strong moves are underway in the others.

Throughout the country the response of the Union members to the new IUE-CIO, headed by Chairman James B. Carey, has been enthusiastic.

Election Results

CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Mann reports the following NLRB elections: Robert Hall Clothes, Inc., Chicago, Ill., eligible 17; ACWA-CIO 15; AFL Retail Clerks 2. American Can Co., Chicago, Ill., eligible 5; USA-CIO 5. Armour & Co. (Armour Hotel Supply Co.) Chicago, Ill., eligible 8; UPWA-CIO 5; against 2. King & Hamilton Co., Ottawa, Ill., eligible 88; UAW-CIO 71; Int'l. Association of Machinists 9; no union 1. Precision Scientific Co., Chicago, Ill., eligible 251; MM&SW-CIO 133; District 8, Machinists 88; no union 13.

Thos. J. Gallagher, Director of Organization, IUMSWA-CIO, reports that in an NLRB election held at the Bethlehem Yard, Local 9, San Pedro, Calif., the workers voted as follows: eligible 406; Local 9, IUMSWA-CIO 295; Metal Trades Council, Southern Calif., AFL 41; no union 3; challenged ballots 23.

CIO Reg. Dir. George De Nucci reports that the Columbus, Ohio, Newspaper Guild won a Union Shop election at the Columbus Dispatch among the circulation department by a vote of 50 to 29. Intl. Rep. Bill Blatz was in charge.

CIO Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that in an NLRB election held at the Armour & Co., the workers voted in favor of the UPWA-CIO over the AFL Teamsters by a vote of 151 to 127. UPWA-CIO Rep. Marco Devany was in charge.

CIO Reg. Dir. John J. Maurillo reports that in an NLRB representation election held at the Lennox Furnace Co., Syracuse, N. Y., the workers voted 73 to 60 in favor of the CIO Steelworkers. In a union shop election held at the Wickwire Brothers Co., Cortland, N. Y., the USA-CIO was victorious by a vote of 716 to 124. These campaigns were conducted by USA-CIO Reps. Bert Danquer, John Kowalski, and Michael Mazuka.

CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda reports that in an NLRB election held at the Loveland Packing Co., Loveland, Colo., the workers voted 16 to 3 in favor of the UPWA-CIO. The campaign was conducted by David Martinez and Oscar Pearson, President and Secretary respectively of UPWA Joint Council of Denver, Colorado.

CIO Reg. Dir. James J. Leary reports that in an NLRB election held at the Koch Brothers Bag Co., Kansas City, Mo., the CIO Textile Workers got 15 votes, no union 6. The organizational work was done by Howard Berge, Business Agent for the Kansas City Joint Board, TWUA.

CIO Reg. Dir. Chester C. Dusten reports the winning of a new plant, the B&W Logging Co., Idanha, Ore. There were about 40-50 employes involved. The union was ready for an election when the company recognized the union and the company and union are at the present time negotiating a contract. The organizational work in this plant was conducted by Ronald Roley of District No. 5, IWA-CIO.

Bottle-Up TB!

CIO Candidates Win Many Local Posts

NEWS OF HOW CIO candidates for public office fared in the Nov. 8 elections is still drifting in to CIO-PAC, and the results, by and large, look good.

In New Jersey, the Steelworkers apparently went to town. Three members of the Executive Board of Local 2040, Florence township, ran for office, along with a 2040 shop steward, six members of USA 2110 and a handful of members of other locals.

The result: 7 out of the 11 members of the new City Council of Florence township are CIO Steelworkers, and one Steelworker now sits on the City Council of Burlington, N. J.

The 7 Steelworkers who now run Florence township are:

John Durham, Pres., Local 2040.

John Hodson, recording secy. of Local 3477.

Edward Trainor, welfare committee chairman of Local 2110.

Frank Nagy, of Local 3477.

Bertram Barta, of Local 2110.

Tom Dickerson, of Local 2110.

Edward Monahan, of Local 2110.

(Dickerson and Monahan ran on the Republican ticket; the rest ran as Democrats.)

AN INTERESTING sidelight developed when Durham, Pres. of 2040, filed for office; he discovered that he was running against the financial secretary of 2040, Lawrence McCusker, who had filed on the Republican ticket. McCusker was defeated.

Anthony Greski, recording secretary of 2040, ran for City Councilman in nearby Burlington, and was elected.

Five more Steelworkers were narrowly defeated for elective office. Closest was George Ballard, also of 2040, who came within nine votes of being elected to the City Council in Burlington.

(The CIO News reported last week on other election results in New Jersey and elsewhere.)

IN CONNECTICUT, 13 CIO members were elected to various municipal or county jobs. They are:

Margaret C. Driscoll, wife of Connecticut CIO Council President John J. Driscoll, elected prosecutor for the Bridgeport City Court. She previously was legislative agent for the Connecticut IUC.

John Gamble, Auto Workers, elected justice of the peace in Hartford.

Louis Trocci, Textile Workers, elected grand juror in Simsbury.

Joseph Ciesinski, Shipbuilding Workers, elected judge of Seymour Town Court.

James Di Deo, Textile, elected city alderman in Ansonia.

Clarence Pollard, Textile, elected selectman of the Stonington school board.

Leonard Hamel, Textile, elected to the tax board of North Grosvenorville.

John Rogowicz, Textile, elected to the Grosvenorville tax board.

Louis Capitoli, Textile, elected to Grosvenorville school board.

GOP HORROR tactics did not win out in Pittsburgh. This is a campaign poster put up by the Allegheny County Republican Committee in its attempts to defeat Democratic Mayor David Lawrence. The poster was so gruesome that the outdoor advertising agency, with which the order was placed, refused to put it up, and the GOP had to go to court and get the judge to order the company to do so. The judge issued the order but said the poster was in "shocking taste." (Lawrence was swept into office by a big majority.)

Ray Barrett, Textile, elected to board of burgesses in Danielson.

Richard Hiller, Textile, elected to Rockville board of tax review.

John Kramer, Textile, elected to Rockville Board of Education.

Fred Gutmann, Textile, elected clerk of town court in Shelton.

Reports from Massachusetts, still incomplete, show that CIO members were elected to 6 city councils. Lawrence Fitton, Playthings, Novelty & Jewelry Workers is now on the Attleboro Council; David Crowley, Ship, is on the Quincy Council; Frank Lemos, Textile, is on the New Bedford Council; Martin D. Moynihan, Textile, and James Farrell, Textile, both are on the Holyoke Council.

Oil Case To Go To Supreme Court

The Supreme Court has agreed to review an appeal by Standard Oil Co. on violation of the Clayton anti-trust act. Standard was barred by a U.S. Circuit Court in Chicago from selling gasoline to jobbers at lower prices than it sold to retail service stations.

HAT IN RING for the California governorship, James Roosevelt, 42-year-old son of the late president, discusses plans for the primary election race with Atty. J. Ray Files and Democratic Rep. Chet Holifield. Roosevelt will probably get labor support. (See story, Page 11.)

Elections Get No 'Air' Editorials

RADIO STATION owners, who waged a long, successful campaign to win the right to editorialize in their broadcasts, kept mum during the recent local elections.

For their silence they've received a rap on the knuckles from Variety, trade organ of the entertainment world. Variety complains that the broadcasters "deliberately muffed the opportunity."

"In the weeks of campaigning . . . all the major outlets maintained a strict neutrality between the local candidates, selling political air on a cash basis or donating time in equal portions to the various parties. Radio, in short, had no effect in weighing the political balance one way or another."

The CIO—which opposed the radio industry's successful effort to win editorial rights from the Federal Communications Commission—argued that complete neutrality is just the role for radio.

CIO and other groups also argued that the radio broadcast industry, being tied in with big business, would undoubtedly reflect to a strong degree the slants and bias of industry. And the CIO questioned whether radio—being primarily an entertainment medium—really was interested in expressing opinions anyway.

ALTHOUGH THE Mayflower decision—which banned editorializing by station owners—has been repealed for nearly six months, the right isn't being used. Variety comments that station owners are "showing reluctance to emulate the newspaper practice of open plumping for political parties and specific candidates.

"Explaining their strategy of voluntary fence-sitting, radio execs unanimously contended that the Mayflower rhubarb stemmed only from the industry's wish to establish the principle of the right to editorialize. Whether, or when, radio exercises the right is another question."

But, Variety predicts, radio station editorials are on the way. The industry will cut its baby teeth on "safe" issues like better housing and more schools, before going on to big-league stuff like political campaigns, the paper predicts.

Pizer Slaps Lefties; Backs CIO Policy

PRES. MORRIS Pizer of the CIO Furniture Workers, who for years has gone along with the leftist majority on the UFW Executive Board, has broken sharply with the party-liners.

Pizer issued a statement on Nov. 21 repudiating their position and stating that the UFW "can best achieve its trade union objectives within the framework of CIO."

He said he was sure the vast majority of UFW members would go along with him, and added bluntly:

"We will fight against anyone who advocates a program of continued defiance of CIO and its officers and thereby cause the expulsion of our union from CIO."

UFW is one of the 10 unions ordered tried by the CIO Executive Board on charges of consistently following the Communist Party line, and Pizer is one of the 9 international union presidents to face the same charges, No date for the UFW trial has been set: the trial board consists of Jacob Potofsky (ACW), Emil Mazey (UAW) and Joe Curran (NMU).

MORRIS PIZER

Pizer, who is president of the CIO Furniture Workers, has served notice that he will fight those within his union who oppose CIO policy, claims huge support.

FULL TEXT of Pizer's statement is as follows:

"In response to numerous inquiries from members and officers of our local unions on the charges preferred against our union, and its President, at the CIO Executive Board meeting held immediately after the CIO Convention, I am issuing the following statement:

"As international president of the United Furniture Workers of America, CIO, I hereby state that the overwhelming majority of our members will fully back my position that we support the program and policies of the CIO and will remain within the family of CIO.

"Our union is primarily and basically interested in the economic well-being of our members and the organization of the unorganized workers in our industry.

"We will fight against anyone who advocates a program of continued defiance of CIO and its officers and thereby cause the expulsion of our union from CIO.

"It is my belief and conviction that the United Furniture Workers of America can best achieve its trade union objectives within the framework of CIO."

PIZER ordered a copy of his statement sent to all UFW officers and members, and urged local officers to read it to local meetings. In his letter to officers and members, Pizer said that the trial had raised "an important issue which means the life or death of our organization as an international union within the CIO," and said he was confident that the membership "will support me in this sound and sensible stand which I have taken to save our international union at this critical point."

As was expected, UFW Sec-Treas. Max Perlow and Organization Director Ernest Marsh immediately issued a statement "clarifying the real situation within our union" and calling for unity.

"Resist rumor-mongers and disruptionists," they asked the membership, "until the General Executive Board acts in behalf of the entire union at its forthcoming meeting," Dec. 6 and 7 in New York.

Pizer's statement, they said, 'has not been authorized by the General Executive Board of our international union and is not in conformity with stated policies. The final determination of policy will be made through regular union procedure and in accordance with the provisions of the UFWA constitution. . . .

"It is unfortunate that our president rushed to the press . . . without giving the General Executive Board the opportunity to analyze fully the entire question and reach a decision."

Perlow recently resigned from the Communist Party, of which he was an admitted member, in order to sign a non-communist affidavit.

Taft, 'Statism' Foe, Thinks Pensions Low

THE STEELWORKERS' victory in the drive for decent pensions has even had its effect on—of all people—Sen. Robert A. Taft of Ohio.

Taft, a frequent critic of Fair Deal measures and of what he describes as "statism," reached the point of admitting that federal old age pensions are far from satisfactory, in terms of benefits or coverage.

In a weekly column written for Ohio papers, Taft shuddered at his estimates of the cost of a uniform pension program—and then went on to admit that if steel workers and miners have decent provisions for old age, the government had better do some thinking about other groups in the population, too.

Note: Taft runs for election in 1950, and is not believed to be throwing votes away.

Crucible, Armco Sign; Alcoa, Timken Balking

THE STRIKE in the nation's basic steel industry was all cleaned up last week, and fabricating firms were signing contracts almost hourly.

Last of the steel firms to sign on the dotted line with the United Steelworkers were Armco Steel and Crucible Steel—both of which accepted the general provisions worked out by the union in its contract with Bethlehem Steel on Oct. 31. Like Bethlehem, the two firms agreed to $100-a-month minimum pensions for workers over 65 who retire after 25 years of service with the company.

Largest of the fabricating firms still on strike last week were the Aluminum Company of America (Alcoa), with about 17,000 workers; and the Timken Roller Bearing Co., whose contract expired during the first week in November.

Many of the fabricating companies—whose employes make up about half the steel union's membership—had signed agreements to accept the provisions worked out by the unions with the basic steel producers. Pension and welfare provisions will be written into scores of these contracts in coming weeks.

It was the biggest and longest strike in the history of the steel industry—yet was accompanied by little violence and by no efforts on the part of management to start back-to-work movements in the solidly organized industry.

Foundry Group Hits Industry Bargaining

Amendment of the Taft-Hartley act to bar industry-wide bargaining was urged in a resolution adopted at the annual meeting of the National Foundry Association at New York City. Another resolution said it was the group's policy to "enlighten employes in every detail" of the Taft-Hartley act. Harry E. Ladwig, of the Allis-Chalmers Co., Milwaukee, was elected president.

Steel Strikers Help Refill Blood Bank

SOME 2200 members of the CIO Steelworkers, on strike at the Timken Roller Bearing Corporation plant in Columbus, Ohio, are giving more than their time and effort during the walkout.

They also are giving their blood.

When officials of the Columbus Red Cross Blood Bank discovered that their supply on hand was low, they contacted Harry E. Mayfield, president of Steelworkers Local 2173.

Mayfield immediately made arrangements for the mobile blood bank unit to use a newly-constructed Quonset hut, built by their pickets as their strike headquarters, to house the Red Cross unit and the blood donors.

The women running the strike kitchen made arrangements to supply the donors with the special diet of food the Red Cross recommends.

A telephone brigade contacted all the members of the union, and some 50 pints of blood were donated by the strikers, to the Red Cross, with many other volunteers being rejected because they had given blood in the too-near past.

Along with fellow Steelworkers, who work at the Timken Roller Bearing's five plants in Ohio, these strikers have been on the picket line since Nov. 4, fighting for the Steelworkers' pension plan already adopted by Big Steel.

Timken management, noted for its anti-union attitude, has made only one counter proposal—that the union accept the same pension plan already in effect for supervisory employees.

The union spurned this contributory plan when it discovered that (1) while the company president would receive a pension of $25,000, foremen already retired under the plan get $17 a month in pensions; (2) that it compels retirement at 65 except in those cases where the company grants special permission, and (3) it reserves to the company the right to alter, suspend, or discard the pension plan at any time without notice.

TWO MEMBERS of Local 2173, CIO Steelworkers, on strike against the Timken Roller Bearing Corp. at Columbus, Ohio, give their blood in answer to a plea of the Red Cross to replenish its blood bank. The strikers donated some 50 pints of blood.

N. Y. State CIO Council Bars Communists As Officers

THE EXECUTIVE board of the New York State CIO Council, in line with action taken at the recent national CIO convention, has approved a constitutional amendment barring Communists from holding office.

Under the ruling, Irving Potash, a vice-president of the Fur and Leather Workers, was thus automatically barred from the board. Potash was one of 11 Communist leaders recently convicted in New York of conspiracy to advocate or teach overthrow of the government by force.

Voting against the constitutional change were representatives of the Fur and Leather Workers, United Public Workers, United Office and Professional Workers, and American Communications Association. All are left-wing unions.

The board praised the national CIO for expelling the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers and the Farm Equipment Workers, and pledged full support to the newly-chartered International Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

IUE Survey Shows

Electrical Wages Trail Durable Industry Average

WITH ITS membership increased to 202,000, the new CIO International Union of Electrical Workers convened Nov. 28 in Philadelphia and heard CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, chairman of the union's administration committee, push company-paid pensions of $100 a month, adequate social insurance, and "a wage increase to at least partly compensate for existing inequities," at the head of IUE's bargaining program.

"The IUE-CIO will concentrate all its strength and all its energy in doing an honest-to-God, militant, forward-looking, trade-union, down-to-earth job of improving the pay, security, and welfare conditions of the men and women in the electrical industry," Carey told the delegates.

"The IUE-CIO will not dissipate its strength," Carey promised the delegates, "in suicidal political ventures. The IUE-CIO will not be concerned with non trade-union or non-democratic affairs and objectives to the detriment of the interests and welfare of its members. The IUE-CIO will not deceive its membership or the public . . . This is a historic moment. It is '1776' in the lives of hundreds of thousands of workers."

Backing up the IUE bargaining program, Carey unveiled an exhaustive economic report setting forth the actual pay status of workers in the electrical industry as compared to those in other industries.

HERE ARE highlights of the report:

The electrical industry has "enjoyed a decade of unparalleled expansion and profitability" and "so far as outlook is concerned, the industry stands in a unique and favorable position."

On the other hand, "wage increases during the last 10 years have been more apparent than real. The advance in real average hourly earnings in the last 10 years has been minor, and for the period since 1944 there has been practically no gain at all. Real average weekly wages likewise have advanced relatively little in the last ten years.

"Since 1944 there has been a substantial drop in real average weekly wages when changes in consumer price levels are taken into account. Electrical workers have not received a fair share of the industry's huge earnings, nor have they been rewarded for substantial increases in their productivity in recent years.

"Further, their wages are at levels below those achieved by workers in other durable goods industries."

Real weekly wages in terms of 1939 dollars declined from $37.81 in 1944 to $33.19 in the first nine months of 1949, the report stated. Real hourly wages remained almost constant in the years 1943-47, although in the same period productivity per production worker went up 31 percent.

Again in terms of 1939 dollars, the average electrical worker has received an hourly increase of 15.5% in the years 1939-48, as compared to 17.3% for all durable goods and 23.9% for all manufacturing.

In the same period, sales went up over 500%, profits after taxes up 280%, dividends up 110%, and undistributed profits up 600%. In terms of 1939 dollars, the increase in real profits was 125.7%, as compared to the average increase in hourly earnings of 15.5%.

DURING THE 1944-48 period, when average real weekly wages actually fell, total sales jumped 23% and employment of production workers declined 27%. Sales per production employe in 1948 were $17,013—highest in the entire durable goods industry. Profits per production worker, after taxes, were $1,030, compared to $562 in 1944.

This is the situation, Carey said, that IUE finds itself confronting as it shapes its bargaining goals and completes the organization of a new union against the fanatical opposition of the "small group of ideologically-enslaved men who had gained control of the apparatus of our great union."

"The CIO did not purge itself of a union," Carey commented; "its action revoking the charter of UE was designed to remove the cloak of legality and respectability under which this small group of men had operated."

The convention also will be addressed by Richardson Dilworth, newly elected city Treasurer of Philadelphia; U. S. Senator J. Myers (D., Pa.), William H. Davis, former chairman of the War Labor Board; Navy Secy. Francis Matthews; Air Secy. Stuart Symington; Pres. Emil Rieve of CIO Textile Workers; and Pres. Willard Townsend of CIO Transport Service.

THE CONVENTION will draw up a constitution and a bargaining program. IUE is expected to bar communists and fascists from membership. Election of permanent officers will be deferred until Spring because, according to Carey, "our main task now is organizing and bargaining, not electioneering."

The convention is taking place at Philadelphia's Broadwood Hotel.

Meanwhile the jurisdictional battle with UE continued on all fronts.

UE asked the NLRB, in a formal petition, to delay the holding of elections at General Electric and Westinghouse, where IUE has filed petitions for immediate balloting, until March 15. The UE contracts expire April 1.

Albert J. Fitzgerald, UE president, said the contracts were legal and binding and that negotiations were now being conducted. To this IUE spokesmen replied that immediate elections were necessary to protect the workers at those plants from the effects of hastily signed, sub-standard contracts which might result. UE made it evident that it would use every Taft-Hartley road-block to prevent IUE from getting recognition.

IUE announced it had gained 202,000 members in one month, and said more were on their way. In many instances, affiliation of former UE locals with IUE has been prevented only by the issuance of temporary court injunctions at UE's request. There were four of these outstanding as CIO News went to press; one had just been dissolved.

In Philadelphia, the Proctor Electric Co., employing approximately 200 workers, signed a contract with IUE four hours after a strike deadline. The contract, according to local Pres. Joseph Wirtz, removes wage inequities, establishes a guaranteed vacation plan, grants the union shop for the first time in 10 years of effort, adds an additional holiday making 7 paid holidays in all, and sets up a joint committee to work on pension and insurance plans.

UAW Predicts FE Disintegration

UAW-CIO LEADERS predicted the collapse of the former Farm Equipment Workers organization Nov. 23 as workers in plants represented by former FE locals all over the country took action to affiliate with the UAW.

FE was dissolved by the CIO convention, and jurisdiction given to UAW, after the former union had refused to obey an Executive Board mandate ordering it to merge with UAW. FE chose, instead, to merge with UE, which also was de-chartered by the convention.

In Chicago, the Tractor Workers of International Harvester Corp., formerly represented by FE Local 101, voted by 20 to 1 to affiliate with UAW. Tractor employs more than 4,000 people.

At the West Pullman Works of International Harvester, a membership meeting voted to direct its executive board to seek an NLRB election. NLRB hearings were held this week at both Chicago plants. The UAW and the company agreed to hold consent elections, but FE refused.

The center of FE's remaining strength was in the International Harvester chain, where it had more than 75 percent of its total membership. UAW already represented 19,000 Harvester employes before FE was formally dissolved. FE had represented approximately 25,000.

So far, reports received by UAW Vice President John W. Livingston, director of the Agricultural Implement Workers department, show that about 80 percent of the FE's estimated 35,000 members already have acted to leave FE and affiliate with UAW.

Public Workers Hearing Dec. 12, UOPWA Dec. 15

HEARINGS on charges of Communist domination filed against two left-wing unions will open in Washington in mid-December.

Emil Rieve, textile union president and chairman of one of three committees set up to conduct the investigations, announced that charges against the United Public Workers will be heard on Monday, Dec. 12.

On Thursday, Dec. 15, similar charges will be heard by the same CIO committee in connection with the United Office & Professional Workers.

Both hearings will be conducted in the Board Room of CIO headquarters in Washington.

Joseph Beirne, head of the Communications Workers of America, and Harry Sayre, head of the United Paper workers of America are the other members of the hearing committee.

In letters to both unions and to their officers, Rieve outlined the procedures that will be followed:

"1. The committee's hearings will not be formal. The committee has been appointed by order of the Executive Board, to report certain factual matters to the Board. In order that that function can be performed with maximum efficiency, the committee's proceedings will be informal.

"2. For similar reasons, no legal counsel will be permitted to attend the hearings, either in support of or in opposition to" the union concerned.

"3. "A complete record will be made of the proceedings, which will be available to the interested parties. To avoid any possibility of interruption or disturbance and to insure a fair and expeditious hearing, admission to the hearing room will be limited to the designated representatives of the union involved and to those, equal in number, who have been invited to appear in support of the charges against it.

"No other persons will be admitted to the hearing room.

"4. All international officers (of the two unions) will be invited to attend the hearings as representatives (of their union) and to present testimony, if they so desire.

"A similar number of persons will be invited to offer testimony in support of the claim that the union has consistently pursued policies and activities directed toward the achievement of the program or the purposes of the Communist Party.

"If you believe that it would materially aid the committee in the performance of its functions to have additional witnesses appear, the committee will consider any requests for such additional appearances, but only if made one week prior to the hearing.

"Unless such requests are granted by the committee, however, no witnesses other than those set forth above will be permitted to appear."

COPIES OF the Rieve letter were sent to Pres. Abram Flaxer of the United Public Workers; to Pres. James Durkin of the United Office & Professional Workers; and to other national officers of the two organizations.

Rieve said the committee's function is "a simple one." The CIO convention has determined that unions "which consistently pursue policies and activities directed toward the achievement of the purposes of the Communist Party," rather than those of the CIO, should no longer be affiliated to the CIO.

The Executive Board of CIO, he said, has been given power to expel such unions. The committee's function is simply to investigate whether the Public Workers and the Office & Professional Workers "have consistently pursued policies and activities directed toward the achievement of the purposes of the Communist Party, and to make appropriate report to the Executive Board."

Rieve's committee is the first of three named by Pres. Murray to schedule hearings. In addition to the two unions for which hearings have been set, the committee will also investigate the Fur & Leather Workers and the American Communciations Association.

A second committee will hold hearings on the United Furniture Workers, Food & Tobacco Workers and Mine Mill & Smelter Workers. Members of that committee are Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Clothing Workers, Pres. Joseph Curran of the Natl. Maritime Union, and Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the United Auto Workers.

A third committee is headed by Pres. O. A. Knight and includes Pres. James Fadling of the Woodworkers and Pres. Joseph Fisher of the Utility Workers. The committee will investigate three unions primarily centered on the west coast—the Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's, the Fishermen, and the Marine Cooks and Stewards.

CHARGES against the 10 unions, and against nine representatives on the CIO Board (Pres. Ben Gold of the Fur & Leather Workers, a Communist party official, was barred from membership on the Executive Board) were filed by Pres. William Steinberg of the American Radio Association at a Board meeting in Cleveland on Nov. 5.

The Board's investigation power is contained in new Constitutional amendments barring Communists or other totalitarians, or their consistent followers, from holding Board membership, and giving the Board power to expel Communist-dominated unions. In addition, the Convention passed a resolution specifically authorizing the Board to act against the left wing unions at its discretion.

The right of representatives of the allegedly Communist-dominated unions to serve on the Board was challenged when their nominations were made during the final session of the convention.

Thus, when the Office Workers nominated Durkin as their representative on the CIO Board, Secy-Treas. David McDonald of the United Steelworkers arose and said:

"I have a firm conviction that James Durkin of the United Office & Professional Workers is ineligible under the constitution to serve on the Executive Board of the CIO. However, the time of this convention cannot be taken up with a discussion on his eligibility.

"I assumed that the Executive Board will, under the constitution, take appropriate and timely action. Therefore the United Steelworkers of America will abstain from voting on this nomination, and we hope other likeminded unions will also abstain from voting on the nomination of James Durkin."

Similar challenges were voiced in the case of nominees of eight other unions—and the plan for committee investigations followed when the Executive Board met next day.

Battle For Civil Rights Is Your Fight

Anti-Poll Tax, Anti-Lynching And FEPC Legislation Needed — But So Is Campaign In Your Own Back Yard

By ALLAN L. SWIM

IT WAS ONE of those sizzling hot summer afternoons which make you dream about mountain breezes or the cool water at the beach.

An elderly, grey-haired Negro woman carrying a small white child in her arms entered the railroad station, puffing.

"Nannie, I'm thirsty," said the child. "So am I," said the woman. "Let's go get a drink."

She carried the child to a fountain over which there was a sign which said "Whites Only." The youngster, held carefully in the strong arms of the woman, sipped her fill of the ice water.

Then Nannie walked 25 or 30 feet to another drinking fountain —this one marked "Colored Only."

There probably weren't more than two or three persons in the waiting room who paid the slightest attention to the little episode.

And only one of these saw anything incongruous about a black woman being permitted to carry a white child in her arms and at the same time being required to drink at a Jim Crow fountain.

SCENES LIKE the one described here, or similar to it, are enacted every day without drawing more than feeble protests from a few persons who are ever conscious of the need for wiping out foolish discrimination.

Unconscious discrimination has become a deep-seated bad habit of many of our people—people who witness discrimination without paying the slightest attention to it.

Negroes aren't the only victims of such discrimination. In some sections Mexicans are treated badly merely because they're Mexicans, and the bad treatment they receive is generally ignored. In other sections Jews or Catholics or Filipinos are the victims.

Conscious, deliberate discrimination may be even worse, of course, but until the former disappears there will be little chance of wiping out the latter.

Here's another way of saying almost the same thing:

We're going to have abrogation of civil rights as long as we're willing to tolerate it.

YOU DON'T have to be an expert campaigner for civil rights or serve on a Committee to Abolish Discrimination to get in some good, strong licks for real democracy.

First, you ought to do a bit of checking up on yourself to find out just where you stand.

Do you practice discrimination based on race, creed, color or national origin? You don't? That's fine.

Do you raise your voice in protest when you see such discrimination practiced? Be careful now!

How many times have you challenged the fellow who works next to you when he makes a slurring remark about some minority group?

How many times have you complained about the second-class educational facilities of Negroes?

Go on down the line. Ask searching—even embarrassing—questions of yourself.

MOST OF THE civil rights violations in this country are based on race and religious prejudice, some of which are deep-seated and some of which are only surface deep.

It's OK to fight for poll tax repeal, for anti-lynching laws, for FEPC legislation. They are badly needed.

But it's just as important that we fight the perjudices and fears which make possible the restrictions on voting, the lynchings, the job discriminations.

The CIO can take much pride in the job it has done in the field of civil rights. Much progress has been made—but we've got a long way to go before we reach our goal.

President Truman indicated strongly recently that he intends to push his civil rights program.

That's fine. We need national legislation.

But we need some good work in your city, your town, your plant, your neighborhood and—yes—right in your block.

Why not take the matter up at your next union meeting?

Subservient To None

An important chapter in labor and political history is being written this week in London—and a delegation from the CIO is helping write it.

It is important because determined men who are fed up with Communism have gathered together to create a worldwide federation of free and democratic trade unions.

Its program will be dedicated to working peoples everywhere but it will not be dedicated to the specific political ideology of any of its member groups.

In this respect it will differ greaty from the World Federation of Trade Unions, from which the CIO resigned in disgust.

When the CIO entered the WFTU and for some time afterward CIO leaders believed the organization could tackle and perhaps help solve the problems of workers throughout the world despite the political differences of member groups.

The Communists, however, were determined to make the organization into a propaganda outfit which followed only the line reeled out by the big shots in Moscow.

The CIO and a number of other trade union groups left WFTU and announced they would help set up a new federation subservient to no government but tuned to the hopes and desires of free workers everywhere.

An organization such as is being formed this week is badly needed. A large portion of the world's ideological warfare is being waged on trade union fronts.

The new group will speak for freedom and democracy—and against totalitarianism. At first it is not likely to function with the smoothness and efficiency of a well-oiled machine. Unlike the WFTU, its task will not consist merely of following a party line.

There undoubtedly will be disagreements and, perhaps, heated debate—but such are the elements of democratic action.

And such action is needed throughout the world.

'Pilot' Denounces Attack On NMU Headquarters

Pres. Joseph Curran of the CIO Natl. Maritime Union took prompt steps to deal with the leftists who on November 16 besieged the union's headquarters in New York City. Curran, who was visiting NMU locals in Texas, flew back to take charge of the fight against the leftists.

The Pilot, NMU's weekly paper, was equally prompt in finding words to fight the insurgents. The following editorial from the Pilot is entitled "Killing the Tree of Life":

"Fighting the Communists and what they stand for is not a game for the timid and soft-hearted—it was proved yesterday (November 16) when the Lawrenson-Keith-Drummond army of malcontents and Commie imported characters piled into the Union headquarters building on West Seventeenth Street from dawn until dusk, set on pillage and rapine, spoils and loot.

"It is not enough to say that the vast majority of the raiders were bewildered old men at the end of their rope and a crowd of young dandies playing at insurrection. Not enough because this gang was led by the Coalition, an ambitious set of selfish, prejudiced, biased and conniving conspirators intent on taking over the NMU for the Russian Soviets.

"That was a power-drunk mob of malcontents that rushed the headquarters building Wednesday —and they hit out straight for the fifth floor where Keith knew that the books and money were kept. Yes, Charlie Keith was on hand to command the mob.

"Lawrenson was in last weekend to lay down instructions, but in keeping with the Lawrenson tradition, he was miles away when the rough stuff started. Old Jack never gets close to the fighting—he keeps his face for the Parlor-pink parties where he holds forth as a great labor poet and thinker. Jack never gets dumped.

"And so Keith sent the mob to the fifth floor to terrorize the help. It was here that they threatened to pitch Al Aranoff out of the office window. The mob was stopping business people on their way in, and were set to grab the man who came to change the combination on the office safe! These revolutionaries wanted to raid and pillage and the safe was important.

"The street mob included as many Furriers as NMU malcontents, and the dainty little raucous-voiced Communist-captured women workers who lent their support to the howling mob—the complete set of confused young people, fresh from their heroic adventures in Westchester County where they had been a chorus for the Communist songs of Paul Robeson.

"The hoodlums from the hideouts were there, recruited to fight for the 'high principled' Lawrenson - Keith - Drummond outfit! There were also Commie cadres from the Bronx and Brooklyn, led by the Benjamin J. Davis-Marcantonio political haranguers who went down to defeat last week. It was a day of achievement for New York's crack-pots.

"Why all this show of strength by the Lawrenson-Keith-Drummond outfit? The reasons were clear and in the following order:

"1) The decisions of the Seventh Biennial Convention of the NMU which exposed the Communists in every phase of their diabolical activities—this is why the mob was in action. They wanted to take over the NMU and the decisions of the Convention.

"2) The decisions of the Eleventh CIO Convention in Cleveland which threw out the Communist-infested UE and the whining calf, the Communist-wracked Farm Equipment Union —the mob wanted to discredit the CIO.

"3) The decisions coming up in the Referendum vote on the Constitutional Amendments which will outlaw Communists and keep them out of the NMU—the mob was trying to make political capital about there being a "persecuted" group of minority race people.

"This is the story. The Communist 'show of strength', the loud-mouthed, filth-spewing mobs of Wednesday, were the last gasps of the dying Lawrenson-Keith-Drummond Coalition."

Shipyard Is Urged To Take Other Work

Local 5 of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers at Quincy, Mass., is urging Bethlehem's Fore River shipyard to "plan and secure work other than shipbuilding" in order to maintain full employment at the yards.

Donald Edmonston, president, said the local had done everything within its power to help secure shipbuilding contracts for the yard. The Fore River management recently lost a contract to a nearby non-union yard, an event which caused a furore in the local press. Edmonston answered the newspaper attack by citing the union's long record of activity on behalf of the shipbuilding industry and said the union would continue to serve the best interests of the workers in the yards.

They Decided To Hang The CIO Organizer

TODAY—somewhere in the U. S. there's a CIO organizer who might have died by hanging had his mother not given him a watch for Christmas!

He had a close call and he knew it. The mob was gathered around him and there was a rope over a tree limb.

He was scared. He talked hard and fast. He argued fluently. The mob displayed no disposition to let him go.

Then he got into an argument which saved his life.

Here's how it all came about:

JOE, A BIG steel worker, joined the CIO organizing staff in the South and was assigned to a textile town.

The plant at which he sought to establish a union was strongly anti-labor. Management didn't intend to deal with a union unless forced to do so.

When word reached company officials that Joe and other organizers were in town they went into action.

One of their first moves was to recruit about 75 men—including some "town bums"—to fix up the mill village, which had long been neglected.

The theory was that the mill workers would refuse to join the union when they learned the company has taken a "real interest" in their living quarters.

AS THE CREW of 75 swung their paint brushes, Joe and his companions signed up mill workers.

Some of the workers who gave strong support to the union were fired. This slowed but did not halt the membership drive.

Finally the organizers signed up enough workers to justify their filing a petition for certification with the NLRB.

When the company learned about the petition it immediately discharged the 75 men it had employed to paint the mill village.

Within a few hours the company had two angry groups on its hands. One was composed of mill workers who resented the order to halt work in the village. The other was composed of the 75 who got fired.

THE MILL employes directed their anger at the company—but the other group directed its anger at Joe.

Anger sometimes boils high in a textile town and in this case it got a bit out of hand.

A group of the painters who had been fired got together and decided to hang Joe. They figured he was directly responsible for their losing their jobs.

They went on a search for Joe, found him, took him to the edge of town and told him they were going to "string him up."

He was convinced his days on earth were over when somebody tossed a rope across a tree limb and prepared to fashion a noose.

IT WAS AT THIS point that one of the painters got a bit too greedy. He reached over and grabbed at Joe's wrist watch.

"You won't need this where you're going," he said.

Joe jerked his arm out of the man's reach and then began giving him a tongue lashing.

"My mother gave that watch for Christmas and I don't intend to part with it," Joe said.

"If you break my watch you'd better make a good job of this hanging—'cause if you don't I'm coming over with some of the boys from my steel local and there will be hell to pay."

The argument over the watch became so heated the mob lost interest in hanging Joe.

To this day, friends kid him about being more interested in his timepiece than his neck.

LABOR'S GUIDING LIGHT

New World Group To Strengthen Free Unions

A NEW DEMOCRATIC labor organization this week makes its bow on the international stage.

It will be an organization devoted to strengthening free trade unionism throughout the world, and to buttressing the forces of democracy in every nation. It will be dominated by no political party, and it will be prepared to work militantly for the cause of workers everywhere.

More than 200 delegates—from 37 national trade union centers and from 28 international trade secretariats — gather in London this week to adopt a constitution for the new group and to chart its initial course.

A delegation representing the CIO has already arrived in London for the meeting. The American Federation of Labor is also represented at the conference. It marks the first close cooperation between CIO and AFL in the realm of international labor affairs in many years.

Many of the organizations which are represented at the London session were at one time members of the World Federation of Trade Unions—but few non-Communist unions still remain in that organization, which leaders of important democratic unions have denounced as Communist-dominated.

In addition to the CIO and AFL, the new organization has the allegiance of the powerful British Trades Union Congress and unions in most of the British Commonwealth, in Scandinavia and the Low Countries, the Middle East, Africa and Latin America. Non-Communist unions in France and Italy—where Communist-led labor groups still have a majority voice—also sent delegates.

The new federation also bids fair to receive the support of the international trade secretariats—the organizations of unions for each industry, like metal, transport, food, etc.—which play an important role in European labor activities. The secretariats held back from joining the WFTU, in large part because of stiff entry conditions on which the Communist-led national union centers insisted.

'Free To Reach Decisions'

The tone of the new world labor organization's outlook was described by Robert Bratschi of the Swiss Trade Union Federation. Speaking to a "preparatory conference" at Geneva, Switzerland, last June, Bratschi said:

"The new organization will be an organization of trade unions which are independent of the employers, but which, on the other hand, in their relations with the state, are equally free to reach their own decisions."

PLANS FOR THIS week's London conference followed discussions among the British, American and other unions last spring, and a "preparatory conference" last June 25 at Geneva, Switzerland. That meeting in the Swiss capital was attended by more than 125 representatives of unions in over a score of nations.

When the WFTU was established in October 1945, the Soviet union leaders showed every evidence of seeking genuine fraternity with the American, British and other union groups.

The late Sidney Hillman, CIO's first vice-president of the WFTU, and Vassily Kuznetsov of the Soviet trade unions, voiced hope that the WFTU would be successful in its mission. And Kuznetsov appeared to agree when Hillman warned that once the WFTU slipped from its trade union role into the field of international politics, its difficulties would multiply a thousand-fold.

But in the next two years, Communist policies underwent drastic changes. When, in 1947, CIO Secy.-Treas. James Carey and Frank Rosenblum of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers sought to tell the WFTU Executive Bureau about CIO's ideas in support of the Marshall Plan, there was vigorous opposition from the Communist group to even the presentation of that viewpoint.

In the months that followed, the WFTU bulletin and the actions of many of its officials appeared to be directly in line with the policies of the Cominform. There was increasing resentment on the part of the democratic unionists over the attacks made against them in WFTU publications and in the speeches of its officials.

BY THE END OF 1948, any basis for cooperation within the WFTU had been destroyed. As the CIO's 1948 convention pointed out, WFTU affiliates had taken "directly opposed attitudes toward the ERP which the CIO supported as a step in the fulfillment of the Post-War Declaration unanimously adopted at the 1945 WFTU Conference. The Soviet trade unions and other trade union centers have conducted a campaign against this effort to restore Europe's economic life."

When the WFTU bureau met last January, the British, Dutch and CIO delegates sought to remedy the situation by putting the WFTU in a "deep-freeze" for a year—in the hope that passage of time might ease the relationships in that organization. Rebuffed, the democratic union spokesmen withdrew—a step which the CIO endorsed in an Executive Board resolution last May and again through convention action at Cleveland.

Real Estate Lobby Set To Kill Controls In January

THE NATL. Association of Real Estate Boards, which fights rent control and public housing, has decided to kill rent control in January, if it can, instead of waiting till June, when the law expires.

Kendall Cady, past president of the Institute of Real Estate Management, told an NAREB convention in Chicago that the way to "get" rent control is to persuade Congress to refuse Housing Expediter Tighe Woods the $7,000,000 or $8,000,000 extra he is going to have to request in January to carry on his work for the rest of the fiscal year.

Last year, Wood's office sought $26,000,000 to administer the law, but Congress gave him only $17,000,000, and in effect told him to come back in January and ask for the balance in the form of a deficiency appropriation.

"If we can get Congress to tell Tighe Woods that he has had all the money he is going to get, and give him no more," Cady said, "that's where we can get him. That's where we can do the job."

CADY ADMITTED that rent increases were possible under the present law, and cited the example of a Chicago apartment building where the total "take" had been increased from $11,000 in 1942 to $17,000 in 1949.

But, he said, there still was the overall problem.

"I could talk about the little schemes and tricks to get rent increases approved, or about getting a few houses out from under rent control, but that's just a couple of bucks," he said. "What we've got to do is end rent control completely."

(Woods' office has decontrolled over 2,000,000 rental units in the past six months and has granted rent increases averaging 19% in some 350,000 other cases.)

The NAREB was among the 10 leading spenders on lobbying during the first six months of the 81st Congress. It parted with $111,172 in its efforts to lick rent control.

A REAL ESTATE spokesman at the NAREB sessions told reporters that the organization has decided that its proposals for a federally-sponsored cooperative home-building program—to avoid low-costing housing—is "a dead duck."

The NAREB has distinguished itself in the past year by its successful lobbying against any strong federal rent controls, and its successful fight for generous federal underwriting of real estate loans. But it hasn't done so well in its fight against public housing and middle-income housing fostered by the federal government.

Reporting from all over the country, speakers addressed the brokers in the week-long sessions. Highlights included:

Builders of homes at $6000 or $7000 sales price cannot keep pace with sales, and the same is virtually true up to $9000 in Michigan, Ohio and Indiana, reported W. L. Cooper of Port Huron, Mich.

The Supreme Court's ruling against pricing goods from one "basing point" regardless of where it originates may result in industry "branching out into the smaller places" nearer to sources of supply and markets, increasing the dispersal of population, said Philip Sproat, industrial property specialist of Decatur, Ill.

Modern families either want—or can't afford any more than—"the log-cabin, one-room type of living, where nearly all the family functions are performed in one space around a fireplace and in front of a picture window. The dining room has dwindled into a small dining alcove; the basement is a concrete slab; the kitchen has shrunk to a kitchenette, and the average bedroom has been squeezed down to about the size of a train compartment." That's the observation of Albert Lockyer, appraiser and real estate man of White Plains, N. Y.

The public low-rent housing program (810,000 units in six years) was deplored by Sen. John Bricker (R., Ohio), often accused of being the leader of the building and loan association supporters in Congress. "The stake held by private financial institutions," which Bricker put at $10 billion, "is seriously jeopardized."

Freedom Highway?

Nebraska was commended at the Chicago Convention of the Natl. Association of Real Estate Boards by its GOP Senator, Kenneth Wherry, for being the first state to vote to lift rent controls. Wherry further complimented NAREB Pres. Theodore Maenner who spearheaded the fight to abolish rent curbs in the state. He warned the real estate men that "the grand jury of the people will decide whether America is to go further down the road of spendthrift socialism and national bankruptcy, or call a halt and get onto freedom highway."

'Taxpayers' Group Fight Housing

AN ALLIANCE of real estate interests and home owners is trying to lick public housing for Pontiac, Mich. But, to date, their attempts have been defeated by the collective efforts of public minded groups including the Pontiac CIO Council.

The organizations representing public interests were in back of a drive last year to get the Pontiac Commission to adopt a Housing Authority for the Oakland County community.

The Authority was established, conducted a survey and reported a need for 1,200 housing units. Pontiac then placed a bid for these units with the Federal Housing Commission.

Paring the request to 600 houses, the federal group authorized the building of 300 units during the first year and a similar number during the second year. The Pontiac Housing Authority submitted a second application for the additional 600 units but was refused.

Until the commission asked for 1,200 units, no opposition to public housing was registered. But as soon as the application was made, the Pontiac Taypayers Association, composed of real estate interests and home owners controlled by the realtors, tried to obtain an injunction stopping the bid from being submitted.

The Association's request was rejected when three circuit judges ruled that there was no evidence presented which would justify such an injunction. Now the so-called taxpayer's group is asking a poll among the electorate to determine whether the voters want public housing.

Officers of the Pontiac CIO Council believe this gimmick will be repudiated and this auto manufacturing center will finally get needed public housing.

78 to 0

The Sugar & Allied Products Division of the CIO Packinghouse Workers defeated the Food and Tobacco Workers' in a NLRB election at the Penick & Ford Co. plant in Harvey, La., by a vote of 78 to 0.

Truman Approves $20 Million In Loans For Home Planning

AUTHORIZING the first loans under the public housing act of 1949, President Truman has okayed $20,375,400 for low-rent homes for low income families.

The loans will provide for planning work that must be done before construction can begin. Local housing authorities throughout the country will own and operate the houses, which will be rented to families whose incomes are too low to afford private-owned housing.

During the next two years 134,500 homes will be built in the following communities:

Alabama: Dothan, Montgomery, Selma; Arkansas: Blytheville, Little Rock; California: Kern, Los Angeles, Merced, Needles, San Bernadino, Barstow, Colton, Redlands; Colorado: Denver; Connecticut: Bridgeport, New Britain, New Haven.

Building PAC To Be No. 1 Job In Texas

WITH ITS membership increased by 21,000, the Texas CIO Council last week mapped plans for intensive political action throughout the Lone Star State.

Meeting in Austin for its 13th annual convention Nov. 19-20, the Council made PAC organization work its prime job for the coming year. After hearing a speech by PAC Director Jack Kroll, the Council voted to set up PAC groups at every level—plants, local unions, industrial areas, and legislative and Congressional districts.

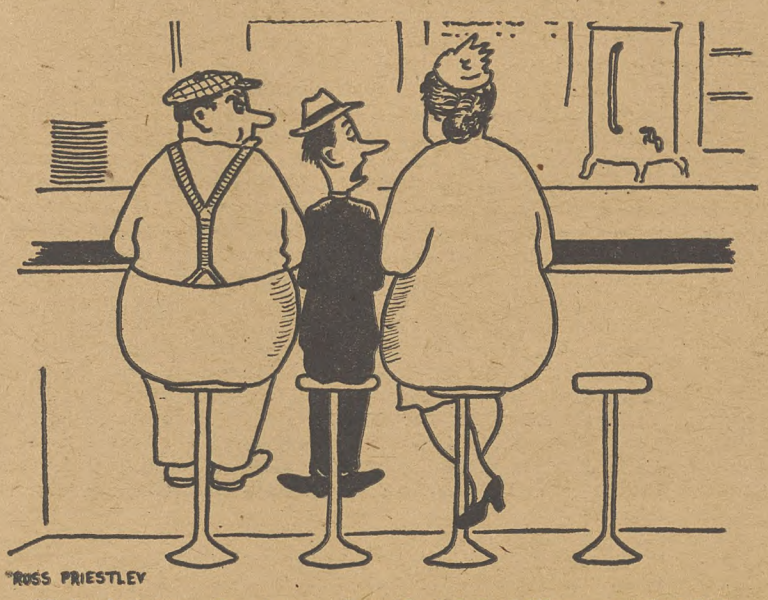
A second resolution called for cooperation with other groups—particularly farmers—to campaign for overhauling of the state's tax burden. The Council urged adoption of the ability-to-pay taxation theory, called for higher taxes on exploitation of natural resources, and opposition to the sales tax.

Represented at the convention for the first time were locals of the Communications Workers of America with 18,000 members; and auto, textile and rubber union locals with a membership of about 3,500 workers.

The convention called for adoption of industrial safety legislation, and creation of a safety commission with rule-making powers, along the lines of set-ups in California, Rhode Island and Ohio; publication of a state CIO paper; establishment of state CIO religion-and-labor fellowships; improved workmen's compensation; and a big-scale natural resources conservation program.

A state Latin-American Affairs Committee, similar to the national CIO committee, was created to deal with problems of migratory Mexican workers in Texas.

Walter Gray of the Auto Workers was elected council president after incumbent Don Ellinger, who had been unanimously nominated, declined to run for another term. Arthur Rister, Packinghouse union, and J. J. Hickman, Oil Workers, were re-elected first vice-president and secretary-treasurer.



"I don't know about you, dear, but I feel like a sandwich."

Co-op Homes To Rent For $38 a Month

WOULD YOU like to live in four-and five-room housing units with utilities included for $38 and $40.50 a month, respectively?

Members of the newly formed Kramer Homes Co-operative, Inc., are going to pay just that much when they move into units of a former government housing project located on Ten Mile Road near Van Dyke in Centerline, Mich.

The project is being purchased by the Kramer Co-op association in order to give its members housing at cost. The Co-op group is a non-profit organization incorporated under the Michigan laws. Ed McCarthy, member of CIO Auto Workers Local 250, is chairman of the Housing Committee, Pioneer Sector, Motor City Co-op.

THE PROJECT, to cost $1,200,000, will be financed by contributions from members and a bank loan. Membership in the group is $370. This sum is refunded when a member leaves the Co-op.

A two-bedroom unit in the Kramer Homes also includes a kitchen, pantry, living room, built-in linen closets, medicine cabinet, automatic hot water heater, closets and storage space. Most of the units have a gas range and refrigerator. Garbage is collected twice a week.

The homes are located away from vehicular traffic and include service drives at the rear, large playgrounds, parking lots, schools on the project with stores, churches and other facilities within walking distance.

N. Y. Ferry Workers Win 40-Hour Week

The American Civic Employes won a reduction in the work week from 48 to 40 hours without a decrease in pay in contract negotiations with New York City's Budget Bureau.

The agreement covers employes of the Ferry Division which includes captains, quartermasters, mates, deckhands, chief marine engineers, marine engineers, stokers, oilers and watertenders.

In addition, ACEU's Pres. Patrick J. Brady stated that stokers, oilers and watertenders will receive an increase in per annum pay to $3400.

Formal Charges Filed Against San Francisco CIO

FILING OF formal charges against the San Francisco CIO Council has been announced by officers of the San Francisco Committee for National CIO, representing a dozen local unions which support National CIO policy.

The charges, sent to CIO Pres. Philip Murray in Washington, asked that the certificate of affiliation of the present Council "be revoked forthwith because that Council has become a pure and simple instrument of the Communist Party and a total opponent of the CIO.

The action against the Council was the first step since the recent CIO convention toward cleaning up of party-line Councils.

Signing the charges against the San Francisco CIO Council were:

Leonard Pollard, acting chairman of the San Francisco Committee for National CIO; William A. Millis, secretary, San Francisco Committee for National CIO; H. Pendola, financial secretary, Local 1684, Steelworkers; Otto L. Schwarz, president, Local 133, Utility Workers; Joseph Janacek, manager, Local 42, Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

Also Robert D. Brown, executive secretary, San Francisco-Oakland Newspaper Guild; Philip O'Rourke, vice president, American Radio Association; D. W. Anderson, president, Local 71, Installation Division 6, Communications Workers of America; Marie A. DeMartini, president, Communications Workers Division 35 (telephone operators); Charles Abar, San Francisco port agent, National Maritime Union.

Pollard said the charges were filed under long-standing provisions of CIO Rules Governing Councils which require Councils and officers "to bear true allegiance" to the CIO and "at all times to advance the principles and policies of the CIO."

The charges also recall the Council's support and financial backing of the Wallace Third Party in opposition to decisions of National CIO.

In addition, they declare the Council now is in violation of CIO rules, as revised at the recent Cleveland convention, which declare no "member of the Communist Party, any fascist organization, or other totalitarian movement" or supporter of such groups may serve as a CIO Council officer.

THE LETTER TO Murray charged:

"1. That officers of the Council over the past several years repeatedly have violated the long-standing oath of office requiring them 'to bear true allegiance' to the CIO, as set forth in Sec. 22 of CIO Rules Governing Councils.

"2. That the Council and its officers repeatedly have violated Sec. 2 of the same CIO Rules Governing Councils, which declare Councils 'shall endeavor at all times to advance the principles and policies of the CIO . . . They shall take no action in conflict with such principles or policies.'

"3. That the Council and its officers have given aid and comfort to a party-line AFL secessionist group which attempted to destroy the organization of CIO Utility Workers Union of America in San Francisco, in violation of Sec. 16 of CIO Rules Governing Councils.

"4. That the Council gave the privilages of delegate to a representative of this party-line AFL secessionist group, in violation of Sec. 6 of CIO Rules Governing Councils.

"5. That the Council and its officers have interfered in the independent, autonomous, internal affairs, including elections, of CIO local unions in San Francisco, in violation of Sec. 17 of CIO Rules Governing Councils, which declares: 'No Council shall interfere in the internal affairs of any local union or its parent organization . . .'

"6. That the Council and its officers have opposed the political action decisions of CIO national conventions and recognized CIO-PAC organizations in California, by helping to raise funds in 1948 for the Third Party, which is opposed by CIO, and by maneuvering to aid a Third Party candidate for Congress from San Francisco in 1949.

"7. That the Council now is in violation of Sec. 21 of CIO Rules Governing Councils, which declares:

"'No individual shall be eligible to serve as an officer, member of the Executive Board or Committee, or any other committee, of any Industrial Union Council who is a member of the Communist Party, any fascist organization, or other totalitarian movement, or who consistently pursues policies or activities directed toward the achievement of the program or the purposes of the Communist Party, any fascist organization, or other totalitarian movement, rather than the objectives and policies set forth in the Constitution of the CIO.'"

Cal. CIO 'Goes On Carpet' Dec. 19

CIO PRES. Philip Murray has ordered hearings to be held in Washington on Dec. 19 on demands filed by 17 union leaders in California that the charter of the California CIO Council should be revoked on grounds that its present leaders have opposed CIO policies and have "publicly identified" the Council "as a notorious front organization of the Communist Party."

The notice of hearing was sent by Pres. Murray to Pres. James L. Daugherty and Sec-Treas. Bjorne Halling of the California Council.

He said the hearings on the charges will be conducted by CIO Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood; John Brophy, CIO director of industrial union councils; and Vice-Pres. John J. Moran of the Communications Workers of America.

Invitations to attend the hearings were sent to Daugherty, Halling, members of the California CIO Council's Executive Board, and to the 17 CIO union officials who filed the charges against the Council on Oct. 4.

Five specific charges were listed by the complainants in support of their demand for revocation of the Council's charter:

1. "Officers of the State Council were close allies of the Communist Party in its efforts to defeat labor-indorsed liberal candidates in the election of November, 1948."

2. "The State Council encouraged oppostition to the European Recovery Program."

3. "Officers of the State Council publicly indorsed the Communist daily newspaper 'People's World' and urged CIO members to support and subscribe to this union-busting, strike-breaking paper."

4. The State Council has caused to be distributed literature attacking the officers and the policies of the CIO and has caused the printing of anti-CIO material in the State Council's newspaper, the 'Labor Herald.'"

5. "The present officers of the State Council and various employes of the State Council have on numerous occasions injected themselves into the affairs of local unions for the purpose of encouraging such local unions to oppose the policies of their respective international unions. Officers of the State Council have interfered in the internal affairs of CIO-affiliated unions when such unions were engaged in strike action against employers.

The hearings will be held in the Board Room of CIO headquarters, Washington, D. C., at 10 A.M., EST, on Dec. 19.

The hearings will mark the second time that formal demands for revocation of charter of a state or city CIO Council have been investigated by a national CIO body. Similar charges of Communist domination were lodged against the Council in New York City in the autumn of 1948, and that body's charter was revoked by the CIO Executive Board meeting in Portland, Oregon, in November, 1948. A new New York City Council, was then established which has gained widespread support among CIO unions in that city.

COFFEE AND SANDWICHES for the employes of the CIO Natl. Maritime Union besieged by the dissident members in the union's headquarters in New York City are thrust violently to the street. The "malcontents" were protesting the suspension of New York Port Agent Donald Drumond and 14 other union officials in that metropolis' port.

Tempest In NMU Subsides; Ousted 15 Face Charges

THE TEMPESTUOUS three-day attack on the NMU's international offices in New York, which started Nov. 17, has subsided—but the melody lingers on.

Tension within the union reached the breaking point when the NMU National Council ordered the removal of 15 New York port officers for violation of the NMU constitution. Chief target of the Council's attack was David Drummond, agent of the Port of New York, who was told by NMU Vice President H. B. Warner to consider himself "resigned." Warner on Sept. 30 had been placed in charge of the Port of New York on orders of the National Council.

What happened next, in the words of the NMU Pilot, was that "a power-drunk mob of malcontents . . . rushed the headquarters building" and three days of violence ensued.

The Pilot blamed the outburst on "the coalition—an ambitious set of selfish, prejudiced, biased and conniving conspirators intent on taking over NMU for the Russian Soviets." It further stated that the "Communist show of strength—the loud-mouthed, filth-spilling mobs of Wednesday—were the last gasp of the dying coalition."

"The vast majority of the raiders," the Pilot contjnued, "were bewildered old men at the end of their rope and a crowd of young dandies playing at insurrection."

THE 15 DISCIPLINED officers are supposed to come to trial Nov. 29. Meanwhile the coalition which is attempting to oust Joe Curran as NMU President, has secured a temporary court injunction restraining the NMU from removing the 15 New York officers, and tying up all NMU funds. The NMU succeeded in getting this modified so that it continues to have normal operating funds. A hearing was held Nov. 22 but the judge reserved decision.

THE PILOT states that there were three main reasons for the coalition's attempt to take over: (1) the anti-Communist flavor of the recent NMU convention, (2) the decisions of the CIO convention, and (3) the forthcoming referendum vote in NMU on the question of whether to bar Communists from membership.

The attack on headquarters took place while the three top NMU officers were out of town. Curran, hearing about it, immediately asked the CIO American Radio Association to send messages to all NMU members aboard ship to rally to his support.

In typical seaman's language, the message read as follows:

"Make arrangements so that upon arrival in New York all except stand-by crews request time off to attend grandmother's funeral. After burying the old lady, contact union and come down to defend the union from commie storm troops and goon squads, who include Communist clerks, furriers, and every party member in sight."

There are ample economic reasons for unrest within the NMU. It is a situation making political explosion almost inevitable.

CURRENTLY, there are four sailors in the Port of New York for every job, and the NMU hiring hall, which is the only bulwark holding off near anarchy in hiring practice, is gravely endangered by the Taft-Hartley Act. A Supreme Court decision on whether Taft-Hartley does outlaw the hiring hall is expected in the Spring.

Meanwhile waterfront employers have signed contracts with NMU continuing the hiring hall in effect on a temporary basis only, and ending it if the Supreme Court finds a violation of the law.

Curran and the majority of the NMU top officials are facing the situation by pressing in Congress for specific exemption of the maritime industry from the Taft-Hartley Act. Bills have been introduced and there is some likelihood of action. A Senate sub-committee of the Labor Committee currently is conducting hearings on the question.

Curran's opposition claims that this is no answer and that the only way to keep the hiring hall is to pull a general maritime strike. They also say that the current job situation calls for a "share-the-jobs" approach instead of the standard practice under which jobs are assigned on no other basis than time spent on the beach.

House Unit Told T-H Act Breeds Strikes in South

By JUSTIN McCARTHY

A SUBCOMMITTEE of the House Committee on Labor and Education stripped the veneer of evasiveness from mill owners and management at Atlanta, Ga., last week and revealed a new pattern of union-busting in the South.

Three cases in which management representatives failed to answer subpoenas were turned over to the Justice Dept., by Rep Thomas Burke (D., O.), subcommittee chairman. If proved that the subpoenas were properly served, the men probably will be held in contempt.

The subcommittee, which consisted of Rep. Roy W. Weir (D., Minn.), and Rep. Samuel K. McConnell (R., Pa.), in addition to Burke, heard witnesses from the Hart Cotton Mill, Tarboro, N. C., tell on Nov. 21 how the company took advantage of Taft-Hartley provisions to force workers to go on strike last May 12.

The next day the subcommittee heard witnesses from four other southern mills, but always the pattern of provocation, harassment and delay was the same.

LEWIS M. CONN, state directo for the CIO Textile Workers in North Carolina, said that two days before the union contract with Hart expired the plant general manager proposed elimination of dues checkoff, a no-strike guarantee, and permission to change workloads without consultation.

Conn pointed out that workload changes would lead to dissatisfaction, the dissatisfaction would lead to a strike, and the strike would lead to a suit against the union. Elimination of the checkoff, he said, would lead to union insecurity and inability to discipline its members.

When Conn remarked that "this is the sort of vicious web being woven around us in this thing," Rep. Burke replied that "it's out of the same cloth that the Taft-Hartley Act was woven."

WHEN THE 550 workers rejected the Hart proposals and went on strike they were subjected to police brutality, injunctions, threats and intimidation that continued to the day of the hearing, Conn said.

(Two cases of violence were described in the CIO News last week: The dynamiting of a striker's home in Fountain Village, near Tarboro, and the beating of TWUA Rep. R. H. Harris.)

The strike at the mill still continues, with only 50 of the original strikers back in the plant. Some 200 workers have been imported by the company in an effort to break the strike, but have failed.

WHEN HART officials took the stand "nobody knew nuthin'". They tossed responsibility for the management of the mill from one to another with the deftness and agility that the Notre Dame backfield displays with a football on Saturday afternoons.

E. P. Cave, head of the gigantic Ely & Walker Dry Goods Co., of St. Louis, of which Hart Mills are a tiny factor, said that he "didn't know any more about a cotton mill than a person that never saw one" and claimed local management was alone responsible for the mills in his vast chain, only 20% of which, incidentally, are union.

Frank Leslie of New York City, president of the mill, did not know much, either. That, he said, was the problem of Marcus W. Carter, general manager of the mill.

Carter, on the stand, agreed with the union's description of bargaining sessions.

ROBERT CAHOON, legal representative for TWUA, said the Taft-Hartley act has forced a legalistic rather than a human approach on mill owners.

He said that W. S. Blakeney, Frank Constangy, and one or two other lawyers constantly pop up as attorneys for firms displaying the same kind of anti-union policies.

"Instead of leading to labor peace," Cahoon said," the Taft-Hartley law is forcing unions into organizational strikes.

"More and more we find that under the completely snafued procedures of the law the only thing left for us to do is to strike to get recognition."

He accused Blakeney and other company lawyers of following a policy of "continual delay," a term meaning that any decision concerning the union would be appealed so that discouragement and the passage of time would wipe out union sentiment.

"We have lost three local unions in North Carolina, one in Georgia, and are now in danger of losing another in North Carolina because of the feature of the Taft-Hartley law allowing scabs to vote in place of strikers," Cahoon said.

Testimony in the other cases, which included: Barnes Lumber Co. and Frank Ix & Sons, both of Charlottesville, Va., U. S. Rubber Co., Scottsville, Va., and the Rubin Shoe Co., Waycross, Ga., followed the same pattern. Only Rubin officials answered subpoenas. Officials of the other companies will be cited for contempt, committee members said.

Parolees Ordered To Vote 'No Union', Probers Hear

MEMBERS OF a congressional investigating committee were told a Kentucky State parole officer instructed parolees employed at the Bond Bros. Wood Preserving Co. plant near Louisville, Ky., to vote against the union in a NLRB election.

The four members of a subcommittee of the House Labor and Education Committee, headed by Rep. Burke (D., Ohio), heard testimony during an all-day session designed to discover the causes behind the strike called by the CIO Woodworkers May 2 after five months of futile bargaining attempts with the company. The strike continues.

The group heard charges that State parole officer, Gus L. Heicken, accompanied by plant superintendent Gordon McGough, visited parolees on the job previous to an NLRB election last year.

Leaish Bronston, one of the former parolees, testified he was told by the officer, "I want you to vote, but not for the union." (The terms of all parolees employed at the plant have expired.)

Burke questioned Heicken's action in relation to the freedom-of-speech provisions of the Taft-Hartley Law.

Burke asked if it were not true that men would be a "little fearful" when a parole officer and superintendent told them involvement in a union might cause "trouble." He questioned whether the parole officer "should even be present" with the superintendent.

He further commented that, "the parole system of the state was apparently used in this case to subvert the intention of Congress."

Members of the committee also inquired at length into an alleged company practice of paying wages in script, which could be cashed only at the plant store. Vice Pres. Clarence Bond said the company had been paying off in this manner since 1923 and "everybody was happy until the union came in." He denied that the firm ran the store.

Rep. Weir (D., Minn.), in commenting on this feature, said, "these men earn their money and in my opinion they should have the right to cash it anywhere they want to." The union contends the store is company-owned and that exorbitant rates of interest are charged on loans.

A previous hearing before the State Commission of Industrial Relations had disclosed the enforced servitude of LaGrange Reformatory parolees at the Bond Bros. plant.

Ship Ballots On Pensions

TWENTY thousand members of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers were voting last week on a Bethlehem Steel Co. pension proposal. Results will not be known until this week.

The workers employed at the company's eight East Coast shipyards have been offered a modification of the pension plan that led to the recent agreement with the CIO Steelworkers.

Negotiators for the union and the company conferred for more than five hours before agreeing to submit the plan to the union's membership. The union committee expressed dissatisfaction with the offer.

Edward Denhardt, secretary of the union's Bethlehem Atlantic Coast committee, described the offer as "unsatisfactory" but added that the membership would be asked to vote on it.

1) The company wants the right to lay off a worker for as long as 15 days without regard to seniority. This would be particularly unfair to workers in the repair yards where great fluctuations in work occur. (A worker might be laid off for 15 days, work a day and be laid off for another 15 days without regard to seniority.) The company would determine the workers to be laid off.

2) The company wishes to eliminate the clause of the contract which states, "When a worker is to be laid off, 40 hours advance notice must be given." The company suggests that this be dispensed with for any other than new ship work.

3) The company proposes to strike out that phase of the agreement which says "under certain conditions, supervisors are not to be permitted to work with tools." It would be changed to read, "supervisor may use tools at anytime he sees fit."

Bell Ignores CWA In Pension Proposal

THE BELL Telephone empire, supposedly in negotiations with the CIO Communications Workers, on Nov. 22 suddenly announced a unilateral increase in its pension plan, thereby exposing its "negotiations" on the subject as a sham.

The CWA countered immediately by filing unfair labor practice charges with the NLRB. The union's attorneys will meet in Washington Nov. 29 to consider what, if any, further action to take.

The Bell system's action was taken without prior consultation with the union, and CWA negotiators had no knowledge even indirectly that such a move was pending.

Just a few days before the announcement, CWA had said in its Newsletter that "negotiations by CWA divisions with Bell managements are meeting the same old policy of stalling . . . Negotiations presently are in a state of suspended animation with the union considering moves to blast the corporations out into the open. Tactic of Bell appears to be to meet with the division bargaining committee and then to insist upon recesses of two weeks to 'consider' demands."

CWA Pres. Joseph Beirne commented after the unilateral offer had been made: "The myth of collective bargaining in the Bell System has been torn apart. It's action like this that provokes strikes."

CWA COMMITTEES have been bargaining with Western Electric in New York, with Southwestern Bell, with the Oregon area management of the Pacific Telephone Co., and with the Commonwealth Telephone Co. of Pennsylvania, among others, and were preparing to serve demands on the Mountain States Telephone Co.

The pattern in all these discussions had been the same. The union had renewed its demand that Bell make its pension system part of collective bargaining and the company maintained that the present contract guarantee, that the company plan will not be made less liberal, was sufficient.

The unilateral changes in the Bell System plan increased minimum pensions from $50 to $100 a month for those with 20 or more years of service at age 65, less one-half of social security payments.

For employes retiring before age 65, with a minimum of 25 years' experience, the pension will be $75 a month but no social security deduction would be made until the employe reached 65, at which time the $100 minimum—less one-half social security—would be applicable. Bell system pensions now average about $78 a month, including all pensions of management personnel and company executives, according to CWA.

BEIRNE said the money changes were long over-due, are part of the CWA'S objective, and have been for years. As long ago as 1947, when the union went on a nation-wide strike, a $100-a-month pension was one of the basic points at issue.

Because it is not jointly administered the union has no real protection under it, he said.

BRIDGES TRIAL RECESS: Pres. Harry Bridges of the Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union and two other officials of the union are on trial in Federal Court in San Francisco on charges in connection with Bridges' application for citizenship. Bridges is on the left on the third step, and at the right on the same step in ILWU First Vice Pres. J. R. Robertson. The other defendant, Henry Schmidt, is not shown. In the front center is Morris Watson (wearing the tweed coat), the union's information director.

Facts Back Up Need of CIO's Program for Children

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

THAT MILLIONS of children in the world's greatest and richest democracy are not getting a chance to grow into healthy and well-adjusted adults is the tragic fact brought out in figures compiled by the Federal Security Administration.

The figures show that:

- From 250,000 to 400,000 children under 18 are brought before juvenile courts yearly.
- One million children in school today will spend part of their lives in mental hospitals—victims of emotionally damaging experiences in infancy and childhood.
- There are millions of handicapped children in the country: 35,000 have diabetes; 175,000 suffer from tuberculosis; 200,000 epilepsy; 175,000 have cerebral palsy; 500,000 need orthopedic and plastic aids.
- Four million have eye defects; one million have hearing defects.
- Half a million have rheumatic fever and rheumatic hearts disease—the chief fatal illness among children.
- Twenty million school-age children need dental care.
- At least 45,000 infants and mothers die needlessly each year.
- In some parts of the country, 72% of the pregnant women and 85% of the children of early school age have nutritional diseases caused by poor and inadequate diet.

Healthy and Happy Children the Hope of the Nation

THESE FIGURES throw light upon the great need to improve and expand the nation's facilities for protecting the physical and mental health of underprivileged children and mothers as urged by the CIO.

The first right of citizenship in a democracy begins in childhood, stated the program for the protection of children adopted at the recent CIO convention in Cleveland.

Improvements in present legislation and new measures needed to safeguard the health and happiness of the nation's youngsters were outlined in the program which reaffirmed the CIO's pledge to work toward achieving these goals.

Just how much of the CIO's recommended program is now under way, and where the greatest needs lie at present, is hard to determine, for the national and state government agencies working on problems involving children are many and scattered.

The overall story of America's neglected future citizens and what is being done or needs to be done to help them lies buried in the records of thousands of government and welfare organizations throughout the country. But the FSA's overall figures quoted above give an indication of the appalling national need and explains why the CIO regards its childrens program as so important.

Among the improvements in the protection of children which the CIO calls for are these:

- The expansion of maternal and child health services until they are within reach of all mothers and children needing them, with special attention to more and better health services for school-age children.
- The expansion of public child welfare services throughout the country to give skilled help to orphaned, neglected and delinquent children, to children of working mothers, and to communities for recreational programs.

The Federal government set-up through which these services function at present is quite complex and confusing, but here is a brief description of some of the main ones:

Most of the health and welfare services for children and mothers made possible under funds appropriated by Congress are administered—through grants to the various states—by numerous bureaus and divisions of the Federal Security Agency's Social Security Administration.

A great part of the activities involving the welfare of children and mothers center in the U. S. Children's Bureau of the SSA. This bureau also cooperates in some instances with other Federal agencies, such as the U. S. Public Health Service, the Office of Education (both also under the FSA) and the Dept. of Agriculture (on the school lunch program, for example).

The work of the Children's Bureau of the FSA-SSA in general is two fold. One part deals with its research, information and advisory services, the other with the grants-to-states program under which the actual services are rendered. These grants are given to the various states for such purposes as maternal and child health, care of crippled children, and general child welfare.

Just recently Oscar Ewing, head of FSA, announced the appointment of five top-notch authorities in highly specialized fields of maternal or child health as part-time consultants to the Division of Health Services of the Children's Bureau.

The new consultation service will seek to help states and communities develop and improve the health services for mothers and infants, especially in providing better care for prematurely born infants, as more funds become available.

OTHER KINDS of improved services for children specified in the CIO's program bring more Federal agencies into the picture.

One of the main points in the program is:

"Elimination of harmful child labor through Federal and state laws, strong labor law administration supported by adequate funds, and more fact-finding on child labor and youth employment problems."

Federal agencies concerned with these problems are (1) the Wage-Hour Administration, which has the responsibility of enforcement of the child labor provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act, and (2) the Child Labor and Youth Employment branch of the Division of Labor Standards, which cooperates with state departments of labor in setting standards. Both these agencies are in the Dept. of Labor.

Another point in the CIO program urges "strengthening of public employment office systems so as to improve and extend counseling, placement and follow-up services for young people."

This involves another Dept. of Labor agency, the U. S. Employment Service.

Other parts of the CIO's general program for children bring in still more government agencies. For example, the National School Lunch Program, strongly favored by the CIO is administered through the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture's Production and Marketing Administration, in cooperation with state departments of education.

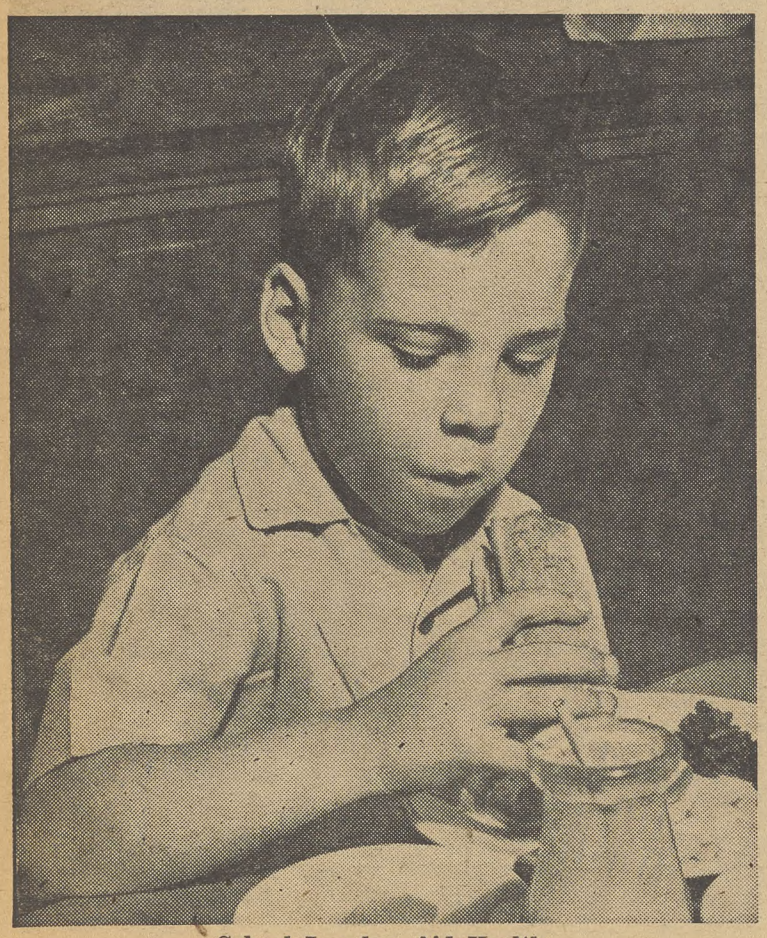
Federal funds for the school lunches are apportioned among the states monthly, depending on the need, the number and type of lunches served, etc. At the peak of the program last year, nearly 7 million children in 4800 of the country's schools were fed.

In addition to cash, the Dept. of Agriculture also makes available, from time to time, supplemental commodities and special surplus commodities, such as potatoes, dried eggs, canned, dried and fresh fruits and vegetables, which are allocated to schools and other public institutions such as orphanages.

This rounds up the main Federal agencies through which services advocated in the CIO's children's program function, although others should be mentioned also, such as the Dept. of Interior which has a park and recreational service, the U. S. Public Health Service, and of course, the Office of Education.

Next year an interesting and important event in this general field will take place when the Midcentury White House Conference on Children and Youth meets the week of Dec. 3, 1950. CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey represents the CIO on the Executive Commitee of the Conference. A 52-member National Committee is comprised of educators, physicians, clergymen, farm and labor leaders, youth representatives and others.

The conference will examine the advances made in the last decade in health, welfare and education of the nation's youth, and bring together the best knowledge about children with the aim of finding ways of applying this knowledge to the schools, homes, churches and the entire community.



School Lunches Aid Health

RUSS PRIESTLEY

"I can't live on the salary you're giving me—will you marry me?"

Rieve To Congressional Unit:

Government Spending Greatly Helps Prosperity

GOVERNMENT spending even at the price of a big federal debt—has contributed heavily to the nation's prosperity.

In fact, historians of the future may well determine that the spending policies started by Pres. Roosevelt were the decisive factor in getting the country out of the depression mess.

And so long as we keep high output and job levels, the size of the federal debt won't be any serious drag on the nation's economy.

These views on Uncle Sam's budget policies were presented last week by Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers Union to the Congressional Joint Committee on the Economic Report. The statement was read to the group by Everett Kassalow, director of the CIO Full Employment Committee, of which Rieve is administrative chairman.

RIEVE described budget balancing as a "kind of off-shoot of the business cycle."

"When times are good and full employment and high levels of national income prevail, every effort should be made to pile up federal surpluses and pay off part of the debt.

"When unemployment rises, however, and national income drops, the federal government must use its fiscal powers to help stabilize the economy, including, if necessary, spending for programs which may result in budget deficits for a while.

"It may well be that when historians come to assess the role of federal spending in the past decade, they will conclude that with all its shortcomings and dangers, its major significance lay in the fact that it furnished leverage which moved the economy off the dead center it had hit in the stagnant thirties.

"Once underway, the basic strength which was inherent in the system but had remained dormant for over a decade, came into play," Rieve's statement said.

WARNING against exaggerated fears concerning the size of the federal debt or of its interest charges, Rieve said they "can only be regarded intelligently in relationship to the nation's total income in a given period, as well as its prospects for economic growth and development . . .

"We cannot help but be struck by the fact that the more than five-fold increase in annual federal interest payments does not seem too serious a load in the light of the $180 billion increase in national income over the same period since 1939. Even in real terms, national income is up over 100%.

"Obviously, this great rise in income has raised the tax bearing capacity of the nation and thereby makes the carrying charge of $5½ billion in interest much less of a burden than even the $1 billion charge was in the late thirties."

THE CIO official declared it was "particularly unfortunate" that so much of the government's spending had to be "of so largely a wasteful, warlike character. Can anyone here conceive of what our instruments of health, welfare and education—to choose but three—might be today if the $200-odd billion debt had been poured into more useful channels?"

He said that while federal deficit spending can help the nation overcome depression trends, the accumulation of federal surpluses "can also help check inflation and prevent wild booms.

"We believe, for example, that the federal surpluses piled up in the years of 1947 and 1948 undoubtedly reduced the force of inflation and lent some additional stability to the economy."

Retention of the excess profits tax and enactment of the "ill-timed, ill-staged income tax bill of 1948" undoubtedly contributed to the inflationary trends, Rieve said.

He added that sound fiscal policies should be worked out in conjunction with provisions for adequate social security, increased minimum wages, a farm support program, security and bank deposit legislation and public housing.

"These and other phases of national economic policy help create an environment in which the tasks of fiscal policy are reduced. As a consequence, the prospects for successful fiscal policy operations are enhanced."

It All Depends Who Does It

If it's done by government, it's "bad"—and if it's done by private business, it's good.

That was the comment made by Pres. Emil Rieve of CIO Textile Workers in a statement to a Congressional economic committee in Washington. He said:

"When a private utility company floats a bond issue, and uses the fund thus obtained to build a new power plant or a series of transmission lines, it is entered on the books as an asset.

"Yet, when a government agency, a TVA or the like, borrows money and does the same thing, it becomes an all-terrible public debt, with nothing good to be said of it."

KAISER-FRAZER TO PAY PENSIONS: Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers (right) puts his signature on an agreement with the Kaiser-Frazer Corp., which provides that the company will pay the cost of pensions for its employes. Henry J. Kaiser, chairman of the corporation's board, who signed for the company, looks on.

K-F Agrees To Pay For Pension Program

THE CIO AUTO Workers and the Kaiser-Frazer Corp. have announced establishment of a new retirement fund following the recommendations of the Presidential report of the Steel Industry Board.

A joint statement issued by the company and the union said that K-F workers can retire voluntarily at 65 years of age. The company will pay into the fund 6c per hour for each employe.

Under the agreement, details of the retirement plan will be worked out by a joint union-management committee and incorporated into a retirement trust agreement.

The program will be administered by a board of trustees consisting of seven members. Three members will be appointed by the company, three by the UAW-CIO, and an impartial chairman will be chosen by mutual agreement.

The new agreement was concluded in negotiations which started five months ago. The joint announcement was made by UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Henry J. Kaiser, K-F board chairman.

It is subject to ratification by UAW members employed at the Kaiser-Frazer plants at Willow Run, Detroit, Adrian and Dowagiac, all in Michigan.

The pension agreement extends until Nov. 11, 1954.

Second major point in the agreement is the extension of the existing "Kaiser-Frazer UAW Social Security Fund" which was established June 1, 1948.

The fund was the first of its kind in the automobile industry. It is administered by a joint union-management board of trustees and provides free hospitalization and surgical benefits, sick and disability benefits of $30 a week for a maximum of 26 weeks, and $2,000 life insurance.

Picketing Of Clothing Stores Upheld

THE CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers has hailed a decision of the N. Y. State Supreme Court upholding labor's right to picket stores selling clothing made by a non-union manufacturer with whom the union is engaged in a dispute.

Justice George Beldock dismissed a complaint by the Sa-Ray Clothing Co., Inc., with stores in Manhattan and Brooklyn, against ACW Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky.

The court also denied Sa-Ray a temporary injunction to stop union picketing, which began Oct. 6. The Amalgamated's campaign is directed against the non-union manufacturing firm, Merit Clothing Co., Inc., of Mayfield, Ky.

Beldock held that the Amalgamated was within its rights, as a matter of law, to follow Merit's non-union goods to its retail outlets "and to persuade the consuming public to refrain from purchasing the non-union product." The judge held that a genuine labor dispute exists within section 876-a of the State's Civil Practices Act.

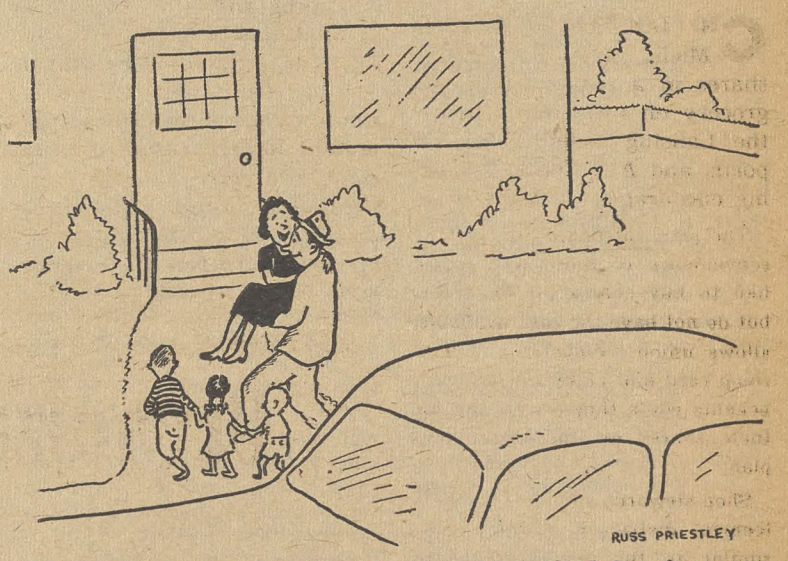
"I am satisfied," Beldock ruled, "that the picketing is being engaged in without violence, coercion or intimidation."

On Oct. 26, the New York Region of the National Labor Relations Board dismissed a charge by Sa-Ray against the Amalgamated, declaring that the board found no sufficient evidence of any violations of the National Labor Relations Act by the union.

William Isaacson, ACW's general counsel, represented the Amalgamated both before Justice Beldock and the Regional Board.

Local Quits UOPWA

By a vote of 200 to 4, the Newsvendors' Union at Los Angeles, an affiliate of the United Office & Professional Workers, has quit the UOPWA and asked the national CIO for a local industrial union charter.



"Oh John, you mean our new house we've waited for since our wedding day—it's finished?"

Rail Fare Increases Please Air, Bus Lines

"THOSE well-dressed characters wearing the big grins are airline executives and the fellows laughing out loud run bus lines," said PAC's Political Action of the Week.

"The reason they're so happy is because they've noted that the Interstate Commerce Commission granted the request of 60 eastern railroads for a 12½% increase in passenger fares.

"The new fares are three and three-eighths cents a mile coach and four and one-half cents a mile first class. That's 44% over the fare three years ago. It's twice bus fare. Here's how the new rates line up beside airline fares between New York and several cities (not counting 15% Federal tax):

"Chicago	$27.30	$30.71	$29.60	$44.10	$48.64	$44.10
"Cleveland	17.18	19.33	17.80	27.85	30.70	25.10
"Detroit	20.67	23.25	21.00	32.98	36.39	30.10
"Washington	6.74	7.58	none	10.73	11.85	13.10

"Six ICC members voted the increase, saying the railroads were entitled to more revenue. Chairman Charles D. Mahaffie and three others dissented, saying the time is here for the railroads to try cutting fares to increase their volume.

"One who voted for the raise was ICC member J. Hayden Alldredge. Testifying in Congress recently, he pointed out that the ICC cannot fix rates, it can only approve or reject railroad proposals. He said he was against rate fixing by the Government because that would make Congress responsible for the financial condition of the railroads.

"But in the same testimony, Alldredge said that—without having the rate fixing power—Congress may have to consider federal subsidy of railroads if they go on losing money under the present practice of treating them as private property."

NAMer Says Monoply Stifles Small Plants

Newspapermen crowded around as the big shots from the Natl. Association of Manufacturers, the Chamber of Commerce, and duPont told the House monopoly committee that consumers were responsible for the growth of big business.

But few were around when a little manufacturer—a member of the NAM—denied their whole story. The spokesmen for big business were unanimous in declaring that vigorous competition exists in American industry today—and that the only reason the big companies were big was that consumers preferred the products of the companies which have grown so rapidly. The newspapers played up their statements.

But a wholly different story was told by Orville Morrison, president of the Sunroc Refrigerator Co., Glen Riddle, Pa., which specializes in making water coolers in competition with such giants as General Electric and Westinghouse. His story got little attention in the press.

Morrison said the consumer had little choice under the monopolistic practices of big business. He charged GE and Westinghouse divided the markets and did not bid against each other. He said their products were not sold on their merits, but were forced on the consumer through control of distributors—wholesalers and retailers—who were afraid to buy from any but the big companies for fear of retaliation.

MORRISON said he had been able to outsell the big companies for 70% of the water cooler business of government units and big buyers who test their own products.

The little business man said he had tried to warn his colleagues in the NAM that they were "leading us down the road to totalitarianism" by their monopolistic practices—but had made little headway. Many businessmen, he said, were suffering from a neurosis which compelled them to try to become the biggest in their field.

Challenging the testimony of the big business spokesmen that consumers' preferences were responsible for the growth of the big companies, Morrison said all sorts of devices were used to keep consumers from exercising their choice. He noted, for instance, that many of the products he buys for his plant can be obtained from only one source—and therefore he has no choice—whereas a few years ago there were many sources.

"UNLESS action is taken soon to stop loss selling and division of markets by Westinghouse and firms like that," Morrison said, "half the small companies in my business will soon disappear." He charged the big companies lowered their prices when his company was bidding but raised them when it didn't.

In many instances, Morrison testified, the consumer does not get the best product because he has no way of comparing quality. If GE puts an inferior motor into a refrigerator, as it has done, he said, the ordinary consumer cannot tell the difference.

Morrison charged the Army Procurement Office in Chicago had favored Westinghouse in the recent award of a contract for 800 coolers—by writing specifications based on Westinghouse advertisements—and permitting Westinghouse to alter its bid after the bidding was closed. Chairman Emanuel Celler (D., N. Y.) announced he was sending the testimony to the Army, the Justice Department, and the Federal Trade Commission.

Big Drive On Health Plan Set

THE AMERICAN Medical Association and its insurance company allies are planning to take big advertisements in every newspaper in the country—dailies and weeklies alike—to promote attacks on national health insurance. The campaign will begin early next year.

The new campaign, expected to cost in the hundreds of thousands of dollars, will use the AMA's publicity team of Whitaker & Baxter and the dough of the giant insurance companies, which have teamed up with the AMA to distribute anti-health insurance literature and send speakers to "grass roots" organizations' meetings.

Evidently sensitive over the charges of a deal between Minnesota editors and the state medical society, Clem Whitaker, of the AMA publicity firm, emphasized that the advertisements were going to be placed in all newspapers—not just those friendly to the AMA.

Whitaker always has taken the position that if advertising were placed in all newspapers, there could be no charge of using it to influence the press. Perhaps he is unfamiliar with the story of A&P advertising.

SOME BIG newspapers—which get thousands of dollars a week from A&P advertising—have shown great reluctance to handle the government's side of the anti-trust case. And even though they have accepted A&P ads attacking the government's case, they have refused advertising defending the government case.

There was no indication in Whitaker's announcement of how much would be spent in this advertising campaign. But, he said, ads would be placed in every one of the nation's 12,000 newspapers, and in addition, advertising would be placed on the radio, in magazines and on billboards. It costs big money to put on an advertising campaign of this kind.

The advertising, Whitaker said, will be geared so that life insurance companies, which are interested in the profits from voluntary insurance which the AMA is promoting as a substitute for national health insurance, can tie in with the AMA campaign.

Apparently nervous over the repercussions of the advertising campaign, Editor & Publisher, trade organ of the newspaper business, warned editorially that "we may expect to hear the same old critics spreading the same old story about the purchase of editorial opinion every time a newspaper agrees with the AMA view next year. We suggest that every daily and weekly newspaper go on record right now, then the critics won't have anything to talk about and they can smother in their own indignation."

Co-op Stock Sold Through Stamp Plan

CIO LOCALS in Lansing, Mich., now are buying shares in a new co-op supergrocery on the "stamp plan," the Lansing Labor News reports, and AFL locals are being encouraged to do likewise.

The plan, introduced to suit the convenience of those who would like to buy shares at $20 apiece but do not have the cash available, allows union members to hold a co-op card and enjoy the discount benefits while they are paying for their shares on the installment plan.

Shop stewards and local committeemen distribute stamp books similar to the war bond books used during the war. Spaces are provided for pasting in 25-cent stamps, which may be bought from the stewards and committeemen at any time. A paid-up book buys one share.

To back up the drive for memberships, the co-op is displaying merchandise at union meetings, and comparing prices with those of brands sold through regular retail outlets. Reaction has been highly favorable.

Nathan Associates Add Labor Division

Robert R. Nathan Associates of Washington has added a Labor Division to its list of available services.

The facilities of the organization's newest addition will be offered not only to national and international unions but will also be geared to the problems of locals which are faced with economic problems.

Nathan prepared reports on national economic policy for the CIO and on the economic position of the Steel Industry for the Steelworkers, and helped present the union's case before the President's Fact Finding Board.

The Labor Division is located at the headquarters of Robert R. Nathan Associates, Inc., 3 Thomas Circle, Washington 5, D. C.

McGrath Expects Reaction Against A&P

ONCE GROCERY store competition is driven out of a community by a "planned loss program" the A&P food chain is likely to raise prices again to a higher level. That has happened in the past, and is one of the reasons why the federal antitrust suit against A&P is so important, Attorney General J. Howard McGrath declared in a copyrighted interview in the Nov. 25 issue of U. S. News.

"In the long run," McGrath asserted, "I think the A&P has made a mistake from a public relations point of view, through its use of newspaper advertisements to argue its side of the suit.

"We point out that they did engage in these practices, and did pay their fine, and that they now resist the Government's efforts to make them correct the situation. Once the people understand what our suit is about they violently switch to our side."

Ed. Note: It seems as though the word "may" should have appeared before violently. We are quoting the story just as it appeared in the magazine.

Asked whether in the long view the consumer is better protected if there is competition at the producing end, even though it might not mean a lower price tomorrow, McGrath asserted, "That's right."

McGrath denied assertions in A&P advertisements appearing in thousands of papers on the same day the interview appeared that "A&P will be put out of business" and that the breaking up of the giant chain "will wipe out the savings you now enjoy on the foods A&P makes."

(In the absence of Vice-President Haywood, who is attending the London conference for establishment of a free World Trade Union organization, his column is compiled from field reports).

IOWA—Reg. Dir. Ben Henry reports old UE Local 1116, with membership of 1,500 and contracts covering 3,800 in seven plants held "a special membership meeting . . . there were 27 people present . . . gave a vote of loyalty to the old UE." Distributing CIO leaflets at the plants, Dir. Henry reports, "we were well received by the employes."

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA—Reg. Dir. George Craig reports, "Local 132 of Lancaster, Local 135, of Lykens and Local 104 and 112 of Easton, held their membership meetings and have decided to remain in the CIO by overwhelming majorities . . . another blow to the old UE."

CONNECTICUT—Reg. Dir. Edward McCrane reports, "I mailed 1,500 copies of the UE expulsion resolution to the homes of UE members . . . I feel confident that when we are able to bring the real facts to the rank and file we will break down the left wing following. (Old UE leaders have ORDERED members not to read CIO literature in Connecticut.")

CLEVELAND—Reg. Dir. Sam Sponseller reports UE Locals 777, 724, 710, 701, and 728, with membership approximating 3,000 voted to remain in CIO and executive boards of Locals 721 and 747 are recommending CIO affiliation to the membership of 3,000. These various locals are in Cleveland, Lima, Sandusky and Barberton.

CENTRAL NEW YORK—Sub-Reg. Dir. John J. Maurillo reports, "I attended a meeting together with Brother Frank Fiorillo with Local 314 in Hudson, and after a short discussion the workers voted unanimously to affiliate with the IUE-CIO. A meeting of the General Electric Co., Local 301 . . . some 9,000 workers attended . . . after much yelling and shouting a vote was finally taken which resulted in affiliating with IUE-CIO which was carried by a 7 to 1 margin."

BUFFALO—Reg. Dir. Hugh Thompson reports that a mass meeting of Local 1581 representing 4,300 members and with whose executive board he had met voted with only eight dissenting votes to affiliate with IUE-CIO. At Local 303, "We had a turnout of approximately 300 people . . . and the local union voted with only 16 dissenting votes to go with CIO."

On other organizational fronts:

CIO Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that the Amalgamated Clothing Workers won an NLRB election at the Sierra Madre Sportswear Co., Chino, Calif., by a five to one majority. CIO organizers Joe Saldivar and Adel Hamilton were in charge. The United Steelworkers won a union shop election at the International Derrick & Equipment Co., Torrance, Calif., by a vote of 121 to 2. The Steelworkers won another NLRB election at the U. S. Steel Supply Co., Los Angeles, Calif., by a vote of 36 to 13. USA-CIO Rep. Gil Anaya and Balt Yanez, Local 1981 were in charge.

Adolph Germer, Director of Organization IWA-CIO, reports that in a runoff representation election at the American River Pine Mills, Foresthills, Calif., the IWA-CIO was victorious by a vote of IWA 51; AFL 37. In charge for the Woodworkers were Claude Ballard, Kenneth McKee and Stanley Bauer.

Business Agent Sonia Baltrum reports that the Textile Workers have won four union shop elections in San Francisco. The victories, by almost unanimous votes, were gained at the Ames-Harris-Neville Co., Pacific Diamond H. Bag Co., Suntent Luebbert Co., and Western Bag Co., all in San Francisco, Calif.

CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda reports that in an NLRB election held at the Redfield Gunsight Co., Denver, Colo., the Steelworkers won the election by a vote of 37 to 26.

CIO Reg. Dir. Jack Easton reports the following results of two union security elections held in Huntington, West Virginia: Heiner Bakery; eligible 74, yes 70, no 4. Mootz Baking Co; eligible 80, voting 77, yes 73, no 4.

No Union, No Soccer

America's professional baseball players, a few of whom have toyed with the idea of trade unionism, sought to keep an eye on Britain's professional soccer players. Britain's "booters," who belong to the Players' Union, are threatening to adopt a closed shop. They say they may refuse to play with non-members.

PAC To Study Phila. Victory, Detroit Defeat

PAC LIAISON officers from all CIO unions will attend a meeting in Washington, Dec. 5, to discuss plans and problems in connection with the 1950 Congressional elections, and also to review the 1948 "Tale of Two Cities"—Philadelphia and Detroit.

PAC Dir. Jack Kroll and the delegates will review in detail the campaign procedures used in Philadelphia and Detroit and will also scrutinize gains and setbacks in other cities and states.

Philadelphia and Detroit have been picked for special attention because they are regarded as the two most significant contests of 1948 from the point of view of (a) difficulties involved and (b) political action techniques. The meeting is expected to be long, lively and productive.

In Philadelphia, four Democrats broke the hold of the Republican machine on the city government, with labor backing, although the City of Brotherly love is not known as a labor town.

In Detroit, UAW Member George Edwards was defeated for mayor by a Republican, although Detroit is reputed to be a labor town. This is the paradox which the PAC delegates will seek to unravel, and it will take long and careful study before a conclusion is reached.

Richardson Dilworth, Democrat who led the winning ticket in Philadelphia, is not a union member. He had the support of the city's two newspapers, the normally Republican Inquirer and Bulletin.

He had been a central figure in an early 1948 reform of the city Democratic organization, following his defeat for mayor in 1947; he also had conducted an old-fashioned and productive expose of graft and incompetence in the Republican administration.

His labor backing was not unanimous; certain AFL unions, and the independent Hosiery workers, came out for the Republicans, and not all CIO unions were enthusiastic about him.

There was no United Labor Committee back of him, but there was considerable quiet cooperation at the ward and precinct level and an enormous amount of gruelling work on voter and registration lists, with the result that registration and voting broke all previous records. The Democratic organization and the labor groups pulled together without friction. The Negro vote was not organized one way or the other and there was no race issue in the campaign. It was a one-issue campaign: reform of municipal government.

The situation in Detroit was quite different, and not nearly so simple. Edwards ostensibly was an ideal candidate but his Republican opponent, Albert J. Cobo, was hard to attack. Although he opposed public housing and other liberal programs, in his 16 years as city treasurer he had built up a reputation for disinterested civic service and complete honesty. The AFL went all out for Cobo and so did the newspapers.

The Democratic organization was badly split as a carry-over from the 1948 election of G. Mennen Williams to the governorship. The election was "non-partisan"—the candidates ran without party identification on the ballot.

The race issue was very much in the campaign; the Cobo forces, including Detroit Dixiecrats, told voters in white districts that Edwards was going all-out for the Negroes, and told Negro voters that Edwards was from Texas and "you know how they treat us down there."

UAW, which spared no efforts in the campaign, attributes Edwards' defeat to (a) the vicious press and radio propaganda against Edwards, and (b) the apparent fact that "you can't elect a labor candidate without full Democratic support."

Although voting broke all previous records in Detroit, the huge turnout did not come from normally liberal-Democratic districts; pro-Edwards precincts, according to an Associated Press analysis of results, "consistently had 30% or lower primary turnouts, with notably few ripples of response in the finale to the union's campaigning. Cobo precincts showed an average turnout nearer 60%."

All of this, in considerably greater detail, will come under review when the PAC officers meet.

McCabe Declared Elected In Buffalo

James J. McCabe, president of Steelworkers Local 2497, Buffalo, N. Y., was declared elected to the Buffalo city council Nov. 12, after a recount of votes.

A re-check of voting machine results showed that McCabe, indorsed by the Erie County PAC, had won by 83 votes over Pascal C. Rubino, who also was indorsed by PAC. Unofficial returns, widely reported in the newspapers, had given the selection to Rubino by 152 votes.

The upset does not affect the political line-up of the city council, since both men are Democrats. The council now is nine to six Democratic.

Glassworker Elected Mayor

Tommy Nicholson of CIO Glassworkers local 15 at Butler, Pa., was elected mayor of Butler Nov. 8.

Here is the election report, as sent in to the CIO News by Butler 15's correspondent, A. R. Beck:

"Well, we did it! Our brother Tommy Nicholson came through the general election with flying colors, winning the mayoralty election by a large majority. We naturally feel this to be quite a triumph for Butler local as this is the first time in the history of the city that a worker, as well as a union man, has ever been able to win any post of any importance in the city government . . .

"Butler is very badly in need of some new industries as well as a lot of civic developments, and it will be up to the new mayor to be on his toes and get busy and battle all the way for them. If he does not, then we can expect the same old crap that has been shoved down our throats for the last—well, I cannot say how many years, but a lot of them."

Labor Helps Quincy, Mass., Change To PR with Loss of 1.5% of Ballots

"DON'T CROSS your candidates—give them a number."

With this slogan, the United Labor Committee of Quincy, Mass., accomplished the almost unheard-of public education feat of seeing a city through the change-over from ordinary to proportional representation voting with a total loss of only 434 ballots out of 29,730 cast, or about 1.5%.

Under the PR system, ballots marked simply with an "X" are not counted. The voter must number the candidates in the order of preference. Quincy since time immemorial had voted by the "X" method; last year, the city government decided to change to PR.

In nearby Cambridge, which has had PR for five years, fully 20% of all ballots cast are still invalidated because voters persist in marking their choices with an "X."

But in Quincy, the alert United Labor Committee used every means to educate the public. In radio spot announcements repeated over and over again, in all speeches, all statements, all addresses to union meetings, and in 50,000 circulars distributed on election day, the pitch was:

"Don't cross your candidates, give them a number."

The appeal worked. Total registration was 44,000; the number of ballots actually cast was well above the number that politicians expected in view of the registration figures; and only 434 were void.

David J. Crowley, of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers, was among those elected to the city council. Two other candidates indorsed by the labor committee also were elected. The Committee is headed by Arthur Boyson, CIO, and Edmund J. Healy, AFL.

Report On Low Incomes

Knocks Props From Under Anti-Fair Deal Arguments

By NATHAN ROBERTSON

EVIDENCE collected by a Congressional committee that a quarter of U. S. families still get less than $2000 a year has put new life into the battle for President Truman's Fair Deal program. It has contributed powerful support for almost every measure on the President's program.

The report, drafted by the staff of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report, which was created under the full employment law, will serve as a campaign textbook in next year's Congressional elections. It will be a major reference book in all future debates on Fair Deal measures in Congress.

This evidence of low incomes of many American families takes the ground out from under many of the arguments made by opponents of the President's program. It is devastating proof, for instance, that the alternatives proposed for national health insurance are unrealistic and unworkable.

Sen. Robert A. Taft has been contending that national health insurance is unnecessary because 20% of the American people are able to pay their own doctor's bills without help from the government. He has proposed meeting the medical problem by providing "charity" medicine for the families at the bottom of the income scale.

With 10,000,000 families making less than $2000 a year, and therefore obviously unable to meet the high cost of modern medical care, Taft's approach would cost the government billions of dollars a year without reaching many of the families that also need a better way to pay for their doctor and hospital bills.

The American Medical Association admitted 10 years ago that families making less than $3000 a year faced disaster in meeting the costs of serious illness. That figure, adjusted to the higher cost of living, is now about $5000. The joint committee report shows about 30,000,000 out of the 38,500,000 families in the U. S. now in that category.

THE AMA and its supporters in Congress have proposed voluntary health insurance as an alternative to national health insurance. But the recent Congressional report shows that the cost of voluntary health insurance is way out of the reach of millions of American families, quite aside from its other inadequacies, such as limited coverage.

The President's compulsory health insurance program, on the other hand, would cover almost all of these low income families at a cost based on their ability to pay. They would thus be removed from the charity rolls, at a tremendous saving, and would get the same kind of medical care as other families.

HERE ARE some of the other measures in the President's program which have been given a tremendous boost by the report on family incomes:

● Expansion and Liberalization of Social Security: In 1948 almost 2,000,000 families with incomes under $2000 were headed by persons 65 years of age or older. Almost three quarters of the beneficiaries of old age insurance, under the social security law, had incomes of less than $1000. The President's program would provide substantial help for these families.

● Civil Rights Legislation: The number of Negro families in the low-income brackets was far out of proportion to the number in the total population. Civil rights legislation would help these Negro families to obtain work without discrimination against them on account of their color.

● Federal Aid to Education: The committee found lack of education was an important cause of low earning power among all groups of low income families, and that there was a vicious circle because low incomes were a factor in the lack of education. This evidence points to the need of even broader aid to education than the President has proposed.

● The Brannan Farm Program: The report showed clearly that low-income families spend a much larger proportion of their incomes for food than other families and get far less nutritious diets. The Brannan farm program would lower the cost of food to consumers, and make it possible for low-income families to get more of their share. The report indicated present policies of artificially holding up the price of food to consumers are dangerous to national health.

● Development of "TVA's" in other river valleys: Strong support for development of river valleys along the pattern of TVA was provided by the report. The Tennessee valley was one of the poorest regions in the U. S. prior to the New Deal. The report showed average incomes in the valley have risen far faster than in the rest of the United States—from $148 per capita in 1933 to $797 in 1947. Similar gains were shown in every category including wage and salary payments, net retail sales, bank deposits, and the number of business concerns.

The Congressional report contained similar statistical evidence backing up almost every legislative proposal the President has made to Congress. It made the Republican attacks on "the welfare state" sound a little hollow.

Spirited Convention Spurs CIO Electrical Workers Toward Organizing And Bargaining Objectives

The IUE-CIO is on the march! Its first organizational convention was a whopping success. Now the month-old democratic CIO union of electrical, radio and machine workers is "getting on with its job"—(1) to bring into its ranks all the workers in its industry; (2) to win certification through Labor Board election victories; (3) to gain collective bargaining agreements for higher living standards and security.

Over 400 delegates — from 130 locals and representing 220,000 workers—attended the four-day convention in Philadelphia. Presiding over the sessions was James B. Carey, CIO's secreary-treasurer and chairman of the IUE's administrative committee.

It was an enthusiastic convention, marked by frequent rounds of applause and a high degree of unanimous support in behalf of the organization's primary goals.

They knew the danger of gang-ups between Communist groups and reactionary employers to offset the rising strength of the new democratic union.

But, as Chairman Carey pointed out, "the crazy Moscow adventurers cannot win, regardless of the support being given them by a few short-sighted employers." And he warned that no trickery — in the courts or outside them — would halt the IUE-CIO in its victory march.

Now the IUE-CIO moves out to win speedy NLRB elections; to bargain with employers; to win better conditions. And "next spring or summer" another convention will be held — to elect permanent officers for the fastest-growing union in America. (For additional details, See Pages 6 and 7.)

Oil Union Requests Special Counsel To Replace Denham

By RAY DAVIDSON

APPOINTMENT of a special acting general counsel for the NLRB to handle a case upon which General Counsel Robert N. Denham refuses to act has been requested by Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers.

Knight requested this step in a telegram to Pres. Truman.

The case in question involves nearly 800 members of the OWIU who were discharged by Union Oil Co. of California nearly a year ago, following a bitter four-month strike against the company.

The men were laid off when the refinery maintenance work they had been doing was turned over to a contractor hired by Union Oil.

The company signed an agreement with the contractor, the Fluor Corp. which provided that Fluor should employ no labor except AFL members. This effectively excluded OWIU men from their jobs.

Such an agreement is a flagrant violation of the Taft Hartley Law, OWIU said.

THE NLRB regional director at Los Angeles recommended that a formal hearing be held on the charge.

However, as Knight pointed out in his telegram to Pres. Truman, "Gen. Counsel Robert Denham of NLRB, after collaboration with company attorneys, unlawfully and arbitrarily refuses to issue complaint against Union Oil of Cal."

Knight told Pres. Truman that "because of Denham's apparent deal with the company, we request you to appoint special acting general counsel to issue complaint in this case so that the Board itself may determine its merits. We have no other way of being heard by the Board itself unless this is done."

THIS IS NOT the first instance where OWIU has complained to Pres. Truman about Denham.

Knight last August sent the President a telegram in which he charged that the NLRB General Counsel had used "dictatorial power at the request of major oil companies" in denying fair hearings before the NLRB to 300 members of the union discharged by the California oil companies.

OWIU then asked Truman to remove Denham from office.

Two months later a NLRB trial examiner ordered the reinstatement of 40 men fired by Standard Oil of California.

Denham then informed the union that he had ordered NLRB California regional directors to issue complaints of unfair labor practices against the companies involved in the firing of an additional 253 men.

Michigan CIO Backs New Label Campaign

The Michigan CIO Council has asked its affiliates to support the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers in their drive to publicize the union label. ACWA is a union of men's clothing workers.

"Many of our people do not even know where the union label is located in men's clothes and can't understand that they hurt a fellow union member when they buy non-union made goods," declared Barney Hopkins, Michigan CIO secretary-treasurer.

Oil Firm Attorney Accused Of Hitting NLRB Examiner

An oil company lawyer from Houston, Tex., will be barred from further practice before the NLRB unless he can show why he shouldn't be.

Attorney John L. Camp has until Dec. 8 to reply in writing under oath to the NLRB's show-cause order. The board acted when its general counsel, Robert N. Denham, complained that Camp made "an unprovoked brutal physical assault" on E. Don Wilson, a member of Denham's staff.

Denham said the assault occurred last Oct. 26, at Tankin, Tex., where trial examiner Henry J. Kent was conducting hearings in a case involving the Ohio Oil Co. and the CIO Oil Workers. Camp was representing Ohio Oil.

The accused attorney can have a hearing before the board if he files a formal application for one.

NLRB Will Get Tough On Taft-Hartley Affidavits

THE NATIONAL Labor Relations Board will look more closely into the filing of T-H non-communist affidavits beginning Jan. 1, 1950.

A new amendment to the Board's Rules and Regulations provides that—

1. The Board will investigate those situations in which it believes a union failed to list any officers in its constitution for the purposes of evasion.

2. The Board, after such investigation, may require non-communist affidavits from persons other than occupants of offices listed in the union's constitution.

The text of the amendment follows:

"The term 'officer' as used in subsection (b) hereof shall mean any person occupying a position identified as an office in the constitution of the labor organization; except, however, that where the Board has reasonable cause to believe that a labor organization has omitted from its constitution the designation of any position as an office for the purpose of evading or circumventing the filing requirements of Section 9 (h) of the Act, the Board may, upon appropriate notice, conduct an investigation to determine the facts in that regard, and where the facts appear to warrant such action the Board may require affidavits from persons other than incumbents of positions identified by the constitution as offices before the labor organization will be recognized as having complied with Section 9 (h) of the Act."

According to the Board, 194 National and International unions were in compliance with the non-communist requirements as of Dec. 1.

The new amendment applies solely to the number of affidavits and does not change the policy concerning investigation into the validity of the affidavits. Such questions will continue to be referred to the Department of Justice.

The Board may thus require a greater number of affidavits where it has reason to believe that evasion is being attempted.

All affidavits have to be filed annually and whenever a change of officers occurs.

UAW Wins Over FE At Harvester Plant

The CIO Auto Workers has announced it won an NLRB election in the Louisville, Ky., plant of International Harvester Corp. The vote was one in a series of post-CIO convention fights to win over the membership of Farm Equipment Workers, ousted by CIO for following the Communist party line. Membership meetings of other locals have also voted to affiliate with UAW. These include the two big Harvester plants in Chicago.

Packing Union Wins 5-Day 36-Hour Week

THE CIO Packinghouse Workers and Armour & Co., one of the Big Four meat packers, have agreed on a contract giving most workers pay raises ranging from one-half cent to 15 cents an hour.

An UPWA official estimated that about 18,000 of the 25,000 workers covered would get larger paychecks starting Oct. 31, the date to which the contract was retroactive.

The AFL Meat Cutters, which has been gearing its bargaining with the CIO union's, is expected to sign a similar contract for the 12,000 Armour workers which it represents.

UPWA's pact includes across-the-board raises for Armour workers in Birmingham, Ala. (two and one-half cents), Fargo, N. D. (two and one-half cents), Oklahoma City (two cents), Fort Worth, Texas (two cents), and Tifton, Ga. (one and one-half cents).

THE ARMOUR contract does not have the long retroactivity to Sept. 12 that the Swift contract did, but Ralph Helstein, UPWA president, hailed a new feature in which Armour is pioneering: a 36-hour week guarantee in five days, instead of the six which the old contract provided.

(Thus, if a man works one eight-hour day, he is guaranteed 28 hours more work within the next four days.)

Other features of the contract: three weeks' vacation after 15 years' service (instead of 20 years); elimination of "multiple rates" (now a worker gets the rate of the highest job he works on); and improvements in severance pay and in the seniority plan.

The UPWA-Armour pact runs to Aug. 11, 1950, but may be reopened for wages by either side after next Feb. 15. Of the 21 plants covered, the larger ones are in Chicago, Omaha, East St. Louis, Kansas City, St. Joseph, Mo., Fort Worth, Tex., Oklahoma City and St. Paul.

NLRB Says Furriers' 'Switch' Is Phony

In an attempt to qualify for an election, a local of the International Fur Workers' Union-CIO—headed by Ben Gold, admitted Communist — disaffiliated and went "independent."

However, the National Labor Relations Board this week ruled that the transformation was "phony" and the "independent" was just a "front" for the Furriers' union.

Hence, the "independent"—which had represented nearly 900 tannery workers in Fulton County, N. Y.—was barred by the NLRB from the ballot in an election just ordered. Workers will be limited to voting for the AFL United Leather Workers or for "no union."

Kroll Urges Fight For Political Reforms

CIO-PAC Director Jack Kroll has called on all state and local Political Action Committees to start working now for the urgently needed political reforms indorsed by the CIO convention.

"These reforms must be undertaken," Kroll said, "if we are to keep our democratic process alive and responsive to the needs of the people . . . It is fitting that we of PAC should take the lead in fighting for these reforms now. We have always been and we will continue to be in the forefront of those working actively to perfect our form of government and we shall never cease to labor in this field."

The needed improvements were listed as follows:

1. Revision of registration laws to eliminate "cumbersome requirements designed to prevent expression of the popular will."

2. Pay increases for state legislators and officials. "State legislators in many places are subject to undue economic pressure," Kroll commented, "because of the inadequate pay which operates to deter working men and small farmers from running for these important offices."

3. Establishment of the direct, open primary in all states.

4. Elimination of "the disgraceful practice of juggling election districts—both state and national—whereby voters in one community exercise more influence than voters in another, and where representatives of a few hundred thousand people can outvote millions."

5. Abolition of the outmoded Electoral College and institution of direct election of the President and Vice President of the U. S.

6. Abandonment of the seniority system under which Congressional committee chairmanships now are awarded.

7. Passage of an effective Senate rule providing for limitation of debate, thus doing away with the possibility of filibustering.

"This program should be incorporated in state programs that are to be presented to state legislatures which will meet next year," Kroll continued. "It should be presented to prospective candidates who seek the indorsement of labor in coming elections campaigns, and their responses should constitute one of the considerations upon which support is based.

"It should be widely presented to our membership, and working arrangements for the pushing of these reforms developed with groups that are in accord with us."

In recent weeks Kroll has made an extensive tour of the nation, bringing this message to scores of CIO meetings. He has placed particular emphasis upon the elimination of gerrymandering, because when the 1950 U. S. census is completed, the states will be re-districted by their legislatures in accordance with the census results. Certain states will lose one or two Congressional districts and others will gain.

Flaxer, Durkin Say: 'Probe CIO Instead Of Our Unions'

THE PRESIDENTS of two of the CIO internationals now facing trial on charges of having consistently followed the Communist party line have failed in their attempts to persuade Pres. Philip Murray to:

1. Disqualify the trial boards appointed by the CIO Executive Board as "prejudiced and incompetent."
2. Appoint a committee of "impartial" citizens, such as Pres. John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers, to investigate the CIO instead.
3. Postpone the hearing dates, which have been set and announced.
4. Adopt new rules turning the hearings from informal, privately conducted sessions at which each side will be represented by an equal number of witnesses and a full transcript of proceedings taken, to publicly held free-for-alls with the accused unions presenting as many witnesses as they like.
5. Allow the accused unions the right to be represented by counsel and to see in detail, in advance of the hearing, the specifics of charges presented against them at the Convention.

The demands were served on Pres. Murray Nov. 26 and 27, respectively, by Pres. James Durkin of the Office and Professional Workers and Pres. Abram Flaxer of the Public Workers.

(The hearing on charges against UPW has been set for Dec. 12, and UOPWA for Dec. 15. Both will take place in the Board Room of the CIO National Headquarters in Washington. The trial board consists of Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers, Pres. Harry Sayre of the Paperworkers, and Pres. Joseph Beirne of the Communications Workers.)

Flaxer and Durkin also addressed similar communications to Rieve, asking him to disqualify himself.

Both Murray and Rieve replied to the communications, pointing out that:

1. Under the CIO constitution, the Executive Board and only the Executive Board is empowered by the CIO Constitution to take action against CIO Internationals.
2. The function of the trial board is to investigate the charges and make recommendations to the Executive Board.
3. It has always been CIO practice that charges against CIO internationals be heard by a committee of Executive Board members.
4. The rules for conduct of the hearings accord with long accepted procedure in the CIO.

Rieve added:

"The committee has, of course, no way of informing you in advance of the hearing as to the specific evidence which will be submitted to the committee . . . The rules to which you object serve only the purpose of assuring a fair and expeditious investigation without unnecessary interruption or disturbance."

To the complaint that he was prejudiced, Rieve tersely replied: "Your charge of bias, made in advance of the hearings, has no basis in fact."

In his letter to Murray, Flaxer went into a detailed diatribe against the three international presidents comprising the trial board, and a lengthy defense of the Public Workers' policies.

Murray replied: "Your lengthy and argumentative denial of the claim that your union has consistently directed its policies and activities toward the achievement of the program and purposes of the Communist party, rather than the objectives and policies of the CIO, should, of course, properly be made in the hearings which the committee will hold to investigate that claim."

Durkin, in his letter to Murray, said: "Our union voted against the constitutional amendment under which we are now facing charges, and at the Executive Board meeting following the Convention I recorded my vote against the setting up of a trial committee for us and other unions."

Murray replied:

"I am aware that your union opposed the constitutional amendment . . . (and) voted against the appointment of the committee . . . In both cases, however, the actions to which you were opposed were adopted by large majorities. I assume that you and your union recognize, as I do, that decisions properly made under the provisions of the CIO constitution are valid despite the fact that some unions or persons may have opposed them."

Both Durkin and Flaxer called the trial board a "kangaroo court," and both suggested, none too gently, that it was the CIO which should be put on trial. Both named lists of prominent citizens to whom each would be willing to submit the record of his union's activities. Flaxer named several lawyers, some of them prominently connected with the Lawyers' Guild. It was Durkin who suggested John L. Lewis.

Is CIO Inconsistent With CP?—Durkin

In letters to CIO Pres. Murray and Textile Workers' Pres. Rieve, Public Workers' Pres. Flaxer and Office Workers' Pres. Durkin repeatedly asked which policies and practices followed by their unions were consistent with the aims of the Communist Party rather than those of the CIO.

Durkin, however, went a step farther than Flaxer. In his letter to Rieve, he asked point-blank which aims of the CIO were inconsistent with those of the Communist party!

Local Leader Backs Pizer

"THE GREAT majority of the locals in our International wish to remain within the CIO," said Secy-Treas. Jack Hochstadt of CIO Furniture Workers' local 76 in New York City, as he called on the UFW Executive Board to conform to CIO policy.

UFW is one of the 10 unions facing trial on charges of having consistently followed the Communist party line.

UFW Pres. Morris Pizer, who had fronted for the party-liners for several years, broke sharply with them last week and called on all UFW locals for support.

Hochstadt, whose local is one of the largest in UFW, said: "The people in our International Union who speak by word of mouth that they want to remain united in the CIO should prove it by action . . .

"It is my opinion that the local 76 membership will support such a policy. We are fearful that if such a policy is not adopted immediately by our International, the Furniture Workers will proceed on their own to remain in the CIO, thereby destroying the UFW as an International Union."

ON HIS WAY to attend the First Congress of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions, President Walter Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers (left) got a hearty welcome from his uncle Ernest Stocker, retired printer at Ruit, a village near Stuttgart, Germany. Reuther went to Stuttgart to see German labor leaders and his visit at Ruit was the first in 13 years. The woman in the rear is Reuther's aunt, Mrs. Karoline Stocker. Stocker is a brother of Reuther's mother. Reuther headed the CIO's ten-man delegation.

Free Unions Form World Federation

THE FREE trade unions of the democratic world came together at a London conference last week, debated over some points of difference, reached agreement, and went ahead with the job of building a new international labor organization.

Some 238 delegates, representing about 40 million organized workers in some two-score nations, were on hand for the convention. They are working out the basis for a new Int. Federation of Free Trade Unions, in which democratic unions will be associated in common cause.

According to press reports from London, the convention's first and "most explosive" issue was solved by a compromise plan worked out by Chairman Walter Reuther of the CIO's 10-man delegation. He was backed by David Dubinsky, head of the AFL Intl. Ladies Garment Workers Union.

The issue centered on the question of sending invitations to the Catholic trade union groups which function in many Western European countries. There have long been mutually jealous attitudes between these unions and the major labor groups in each country, most of them led by democratic Socialists.

The majority unions had advocated a plan whereby invitations for attendance at the London meeting would go to a Catholic union center only when the other union group in that country approved the bid. On the opening day, Dubinsky and Vice-Pres. Herbert Payne of the CIO Textile Workers urged the credentials group to find a method of changing the situation within 48 hours.

Next day, Reuther proposed the compromise: that all Catholic union centers be invited to join the new organization—but with the understanding that in affiliating they would agree to sever connections within two years with the Intl. Federation of Catholic Trade Unions. That compromise was accepted.

The compromise thus permits all Catholic union centers to give their full support, without divided loyalties to another international labor body.

PRESIDENT of the London conference is Paul Finet of Belgium, while Vincent Tewson of the British Trades Union Congress acts as secretary, and union leaders from Cuba, Norway and the Barbadoes serve as vice-chairmen.

J. H. Oldenbroeck of the Intl. Transport Workers Federation is mentioned in press reports as a likely candidate for executive secretary of the new group. The same reports indicate CIO and AFL, together with many of the European nations, favor a headquarters on the Continent, while the British and Oldenbroeck want it established in London.

FAO Rejects Food Plan

THE FOOD and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations has turned down a plan to distribute food surpluses to the world, but the fight for the proposal will continue.

Despite the opposition of the State and Agriculture Dept., representatives on the U.S. delegation to FAO, sentiment of unions and farm groups for the plan was mounting.

The plan in question is the proposed International Commodity Clearing House, which would accept the money of the "soft currency" countries, which are in need of food, in payment for food from the "hard currency" countries, which have the surpluses.

ICCH would hold the "soft currencies" as a credit of the supplying country until increased trade and convertibility of the curriencies permitted a clearing of the account books.

FAO referred the plan to a working party of its Commission. Instead of recommending ICCH, the working party urged setting up a FAO consultative committee to which surpluses and needs would be reported voluntarily.

CIO PRES. Philip Murray, Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers and Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers all sent message to FAO in favor of the plan.

"We support the ICCH concept because the CIO has consistently supported the principles of multilateral trade," Murray said. "We feel that the extension of these principles of aiding the countries of the world to balance their foreign trade would be furthered by the adoption of the principles and the concepts of the ICCH."

Reuther said:

"In the prevailing struggle of ideologies, every ton of food is worth its weight in armament. We have an affirmative answer to communism (in ICCH). That answer should be heard in every part of the world."

OTHER GROUPS that called for adoption of ICCH included the AFL, the AFL Ladies Garment Workers, AFL Federation of Teachers, the Intl. Association of Machinists, Cooperative League of the U. S., United Council of Church Women, Natl. Catholic Rural Life Conference.

Communists Using 'Big Lie' Technique

Left-Wing Editors And Other Party Hacks Painting Distorted Picture Of Recent CIO CONVENTION

By ALLAN L. SWIM

COMMIES and fellow travelers are doing a lot of noisy and nauseating bellyaching these days about what happened at the recent CIO convention out in Cleveland.

To hear them tell it, Philip Murray and a majority of delegates kicked democracy out the window, practiced dictatorship and charted a course down the road to reaction.

In the process, so the party hacks say, the CIO turned its back on militant and progressive unionism and tossed overboard all of the good things for which the organization stood when it was created.

Yes, the party-liners make it all sound so simple—and so bad.

That's because they lie so easily!

THE NEWSPAPERS of the unions against which "Communism" charges have been lodged haven't given their readers the slightest idea of what went on at the Cleveland convention.

They have been screaming about "witch hunts," "loyalty purges" and "dictatorship."

They have attempted to picture the leaders of their own unions as men of sterling character who were roughly slapped down when they attempted to inject democracy into convention proceedings.

They have painted Murray and his colleagues as a group of ruthless dictators determined to destroy the labor movement.

Their coverage of the convention and their interpretation of what occurred followed the CP line which was reeled out by the Daily Worker.

After running out of half-truths and distortions they resorted to plain lies.

And the irony of it all is that the editors of these sheets are the lads who scream loudest about the "distortions in the daily press."

It really must require some super mental gyrations to excuse their own distortions while condemning the distortions of others.

AT THIS LATE date there should be no great mystery about what happened at the Cleveland convention.

A majority of delegates voted to put the skids under the Commies, to bar them from membership on the CIO Executive Board and to pave the way for expulsion of unions which adhere to the party line in preference to CIO policy.

This was done because the majority was fed up with the manner in which the Commies and their stooges had been exploiting their CIO connections to carry out policies made in Moscow—not in CIO conventions and Executive Board meetings.

The Commies knew what the issue was—and so did everybody else at the convention.

But the lefties are distorting the issue and are trying to picture convention majority rule as a mark of dictatorship.

AS WAS POINTED out in this column several weeks ago, the actions taken at the convention marked an important phase of the left-right battle within the CIO but did not signify its end.

The battle will be fought out finally in local unions and in industrial union councils throughout the country.

And in these local unions and councils the Commies will peddle their phony line for all it's worth.

They'll pose as the great defenders of democracy, as No. 1 advocates of civil rights, as the only ones with progressive or liberal ideas.

And at the same time they will maintain tight allegiance to a foreign government which practices totalitarianism and requires that labor organizations slavishly play the role of company unions.

Furthermore, they—like a guy named Hitler—will operate on the theory that the Big Lie will be accepted as truth if repeated often enough and loud enough.

Real Progress

A new CIO union, the IUE, was chartered only a little more than a month ago—and when it held its first convention last week in Philadelphia it represented more than 220,000 electrical workers.

This in itself is real progress—remarkable progress.

Every person with union experience knows you can't start from scratch and set up a union of more than 220,000 members in 30 to 35 days.

It just can't be done.

Years of hard work—hard work by men who refused to bow to Communist dictates—went into the creation of IUE-CIO.

This group, led by James B. Carey, former president of UE and CIO secretary-treasurer, did not deliberately set out in years gone by to bring about the creation of a new electrical union.

They set out to free the nation's electrical workers from the domination of a group of leaders who adhered more closely to the policies of the Kremlin than the policies of the CIO.

They wanted a democratic union—an American union. So did thousands of men and women who work in electrical plants.

Now they have one.

They have one because thousands of electrical workers rebelled against the leadership of UE before and after it was expelled from the CIO for following the Communist Party line.

The old UE crowd has been shouting and screaming, pouring out anti IUE-CIO propaganda and running to the courts for injunctions.

Its leaders have been acting as party-liners often do as they fight a losing battle—as they see rank-and-file workers turn against their Moscow-determined policies.

The CIO and its affiliates, as always, have many important tasks confronting them, but none is more important right now than lending full support to IUE-CIO and the committee of 12 which is administering its affairs.

Commie Davis Finally Climbed on Bandwagon

THE CIO News on Nov. 21 reported that Communist Benjamin J. Davis, former New York City councilman, along with the rest of the city communists, "lined up on the landlords' side in the struggle which preceded adoption of the Sharkey law."

The Sharkey law is a New York City ordinance freezing rents as of March 1, 1949, and subjecting decisions of the regional federal rent control office to review by a City Rent Commission, with an overall allowable ceiling of 15% on rent increases.

The CIO News went on to say that Davis "fought the measure bitterly in the council, on the alleged grounds that it did not go far enough."

The story has aroused the wrath of S. W. Gerson, chairman of the Legislative Bureau of the New York State Committee of the Communist Party.

His complaint, faithfully reported in a two-column story in the Daily Worker of Nov. 28, is that the article "slyly conveys a false impression." Gerson points out that the official minutes of the city council of Sept. 20, 1949, show that Davis voted with the council majority for final adoption of the Sharkey law.

Gerson also details in the same letter the highlights of Davis' attacks on the proposal, including the offering of two unsuccessful amendments designed to strengthen the law, and Davis' affirmative vote on shelving the bill until it could be strengthened.

The CIO News had no intention of "slyly conveying a false impression." It meant to say that Davis and the Manhattan commies fought the law bitterly before it was adopted. The newspaper was unaware that Davis climbed on the bandwagon at the last minute after his fight was lost.

Conn. Radio Station Aided CIO Candidate

RADIO STATION WAVZ, in New Haven, Conn., gave "full editorial backing" to Richard C. Lee, CIO-indorsed candidate, in his recent campaign for the mayoralty of Yale University's home town, the CIO News is advised.

A story in Variety, entertainment trade magazine, stated some time back that radio stations had not taken advantage of their newfound right to editorialize, when it came to the fall election campaigns.

The CIO News on Nov. 21 quoted Variety on the subject, pointing out that the CIO had vigorously opposed the Federal Communications Commission decision which gave stations this right in the first place.

The News story reached the desk of Victor W. Knauth, president of WAVZ, who wrote the following letter to the CIO News editor:

"WAVZ gave full editorial support on the air to Dick Lee, the Democratic candidate for mayor of New Haven. We did this because WAVZ is operated like a local newspaper and we take editorial positions on many local matters.

"Oh yes, Dick Lee came from a slow start and was nosed out in the race for Mayor by only 700 votes out of some 70,000 votes cast. His Democratic fellow-candidates won control of the City Council. It was the heaviest off-year election turn-out on record. You can see that his CIO backing and maybe WAVZ's editorial support played their part."

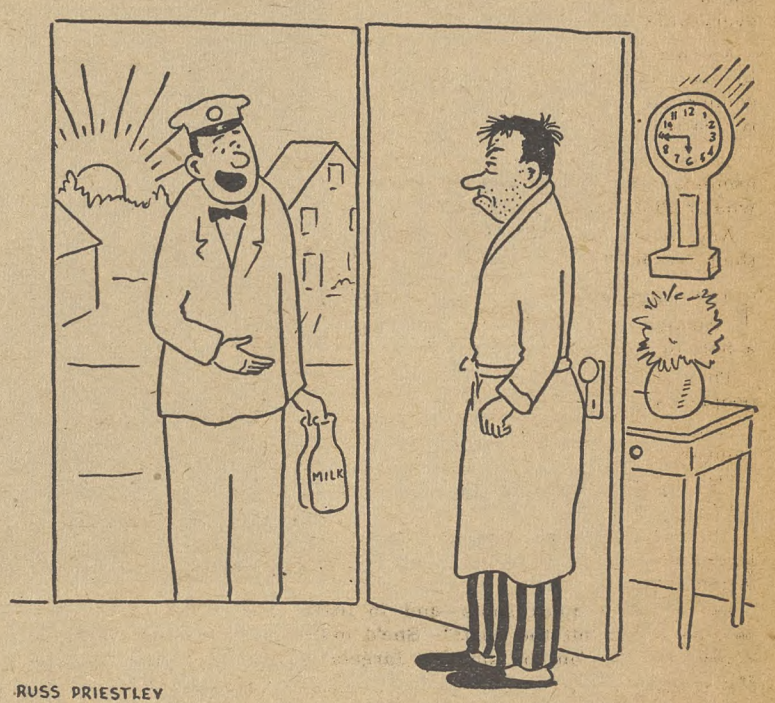
Lee's victorious opponent was the incumbent mayor, William C. Celentano, Republican.

CIO's argument against the FCC's granting the right to editorialize on the air was (a) that radio is primarily an entertainment medium and (b) that if radio stations were granted the right to editorialize they would undoubtedly reflect the Big-Business attitude, since radio entertainment is a big business depending entirely on advertising for support.

Two Youths Arrested In Slaying Of Negro

Two white youths were arrested in a cafe at Charleston, S. C., while having coffee, on a charge of murdering and robbing a Negro cotton farmer in Walhalla, in the Blue Ridge foothills. Police said Leroy Parker has confessed. His companion was James Lawling. Police said the two youths shot Mike Rice when he refused to tell them where he had hidden the $500 he got for his cotton crop.

While the man lay groaning they took the money, and warned Henry Davis, 14, a nephew of Rice's, to "guard" the body, according to police. Rice died during the night. It was 24 hours later before the terrified boy summoned up the courage to notify police.



RUSS PRIESTLEY

"G' Morning, Charlie, I was in the neighborhood so I decided to drop around and say 'hello.'"

She Picked Up The Gun And Began Firing

THIS is the story of two women organizers and a group of would-be hoodlums who made life miserable for them—for a time.

Involved were insults, heckling, threats and a bit of gun-play.

The two women—one in her 60's and the other in her 20's—stood their ground.

The would-be hoodlums didn't. They decided they weren't really tough when one of the women picked up a gun and started blazing away.

Nobody got shot, but the gunfire radically altered a bad situation insofar as the two CIO representatives were concerned.

THE TWO organizers were sent to a Southern town to try their hand at establishing a union at a garment factory.

They had been there only a short time when they started running into difficulties.

In similar situations male organizers frequently receive black eyes and bloody noses, but the men of this town obviously didn't believe in slugging women.

But the men didn't draw any line on insults and heckling. They really turned on the heat.

The younger woman was scared and frankly admitted it. Her more experienced companion, however, seemed not to be worried about what was happening. She had been in tough situations many times.

A GROUP OF MEN started following the women nearly everywhere they went and they did everything they could to make life miserable for them.

When the organizers left their hotel the would-be toughies started walking behind them, making such remarks as:

"Why don't you leave town? Nobody wants you around here. Don't you know something bad will happen to you if you don't leave?"

When the women entered a restaurant for lunch their "escorts" went along and occupied the booth next to them.

Their meal was accompanied by insults, by implied threats and by direct threats.

The organizers were followed when they got into a car or when they went to a movie.

THE HECKLING campaign, obviously encouraged by the company the women were trying to organize, went on for about a month.

The younger woman had had about all of it she could take—but her more experienced companion kept telling her that everything would turn out OK.

At this point a traveling carnival came to town and the younger woman told her companion she would like to have a bit of recreation.

"Let's just go out to the carnival grounds and walk around—just to see what's going on."

And when they went to the carnival their "escorts" went along.

THE TWO WOMEN strolled around the carnival grounds and finally came to a halt in front of a shooting gallery.

They watched for a while as some young people banged away at the targets.

"Come on; let's go," said the younger woman.

"No, I believe I'll try my hand at this," said her companion.

The elderly woman paid her money, selected a rifle, raised it to her shoulder and began firing—rapidly.

She fired 15 quick shots—and 15 little, moving birds "bit the dust!" She'd made a perfect score on the smallest targets in the gallery.

And at that very moment the two "helpless" women organizers lost their "escorts." There was no more heckling. A. L. S.

Rep. Biemiller:

Hysteria Over Welfare State Borrowed from Lewis Carroll

Rep. Biemiller (D., Wis.) in a speech last week to Milwaukee lodge, No. 0137, Fraternal Order of Eagles, said that the reason for the attacks on the "welfare state" was that big business wanted the exclusive right to run the country:

"How frightened would you be if someone hissed in your ear, 'Beware the Jabberwock!' Maybe the panicky tone might scare you, but I think you'd wonder what on earth they were talking about.

"And yet that's just about what's been going on for the last few months—a kind of panic campaign, lifted right out of Alice's Adventures Through the Looking-Glass.

"The only difference is that when Lewis Carroll wrote that famous story, he intended it to be nonsense. But in this case, people—a few people—have been moaning 'Danger! Here comes Statism!' or else, 'Look out, look out, it's the Welfare State!' Then they expect you to run in all directions.

"Now it really can't be the terms themselves that are scaring Mr. Dulles and Mr. Dewey. The dictionary defines welfare as 'prosperity' and 'exemption from pain and discomfort.' And it defines 'statism' as 'belief in a state government, as in a republic, in contrast with belief in communism or a soviet government.'

"Obviously, it can't be the words that are worrying them. In fact it seems much more likely that these gentlemen's terror is induced by having followed Alice through the looking-glass into the land where everything goes backward and no one thinks it necessary to use words that make sense."

Biemiller went on telling how Franklin D. Roosevelt acted to halt bank failures, and to protect farm prices and the incomes of workers. These things helped business, he said. Biemiller continued:

"In spite of the looking-glass protestations of the moguls and mouthpieces of Big Business, I'm not at all sure that they really want free enterprise at all. I haven't seen any of the mammoth trusts encouraging competition. But the welfare state does want free enterprise.

"By the beginning of the Twentieth Century the power of the barons of Wall Street was really so well recognized that Bryan answered John Pierpont Morgan's smug comment that 'America is good enough for me,' with the retort, 'Whenever he doesn't like it, he can give it back to us.' And it was Theodore, not Franklin, Roosevelt who first prosecuted monopolies.

"I think we are getting closer to the real meaning of the Alices walking through the looking glass. They are truly afraid of a government who might want to put some restraints on Big Business to prevent it from swallowing the rest of the economy. But more than that, there is another thing they are afraid of.

"The present government is legitimately concerned about business, and has shown this concern through many concrete actions. But it does not limit its concern to business. It recognizes its responsibility to all its citizens. It recognizes the need of all citizens to live free from the fear of poverty and serfdom. In this richest of all countries in the world, the government has thought it proper to share its wealth with all its people, not in the way of totalitarian states which offer the lure of bread at the price of liberty, but by helping people to help themselves, by protecting them from dangers beyond their control, by allowing them to grow strong enough to protect their own interests against exploiters.

"We are working for equal rights and opportunities for all Americans, And as members of a state deeply interested in the welfare of its people, we are going to do everything we can to provide adequate health services for everyone.

"Ah! Now I think we have the answer. This is what Jabberwock means, at last. It means fear of a government that takes its responsibilities seriously. It means horror of a state that can and does recognize that its obligations are not primarily to a few industrial giants or to a handful of their bootlickers."

Forever Backward?

"And if these travellers in looking-glass land want to go forever backwards, do you think what they want reflects the will of the people?

"Do you think their program of cuts in relief, abolition of social security, withdrawal of farm price supports, breaking of labor unions, and reincarnation of slums—do you think their program would ever have a chance so long as we are a democracy?

"Have the election returns in 1948 and 1949 suggested that the people of this country want a government-by-millionaires? Or legislation for private privilege? Do you really believe that anyone wishes to change the word welfare to farewell?"

Enthusiastic Delegates Launch New IUE-CIO On Fighting Course

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

1. IUE's Spirit

The delegate from Ohio said: "This is the first resolution I ever spoke on at an electrical workers convention where I didn't have to spend 15 minutes trying to figure out the Commie angle."

The delegate from Philadelphia said: "This is the first time I've got the floor at an electrical workers convention in four years—because now we have a democratic union."

The delegate from Canada said: "For the last few years, every time I came to a UE convention, American Immigration would investigate to find out where I stood on this Commie business. But this time, at the border, I told the Immigration man I was coming to the IUE. We became friends in a matter of seconds."

James Carey, head of IUE's administrative committee, said: "Each year the Communists celebrate the November revolution in Russia. Well, this year they'll have concern over the November counter-revolution—this convention of the IUE. Every day in November, we've grown stronger and stronger."

CIO Pres. Philip Murray said: "The old UE was a communist nest, an inferno . . . You have got to build this organization on a veritable Rock of Gibraltar. You have got to build a fighting organization—a clean, hard-hitting organization, an organization that will not be polluted, an organization that will represent the interests of the people employed in these plants and which will represent the viewpoint of the trade union movement in America—an American trade union."

* * *

That cross-section of statements—made from the platform and from the floor—gives a key to the mood of enthusiasm and determination which marked the first organizational convention CIO's newest union.

The Intl. Union of Electrical Radio & Machine Workers, CIO, rolled up its sleeves in Philadelphia last week to do a truly united job of building a new democratic organization of workers in the electrical and allied industries.

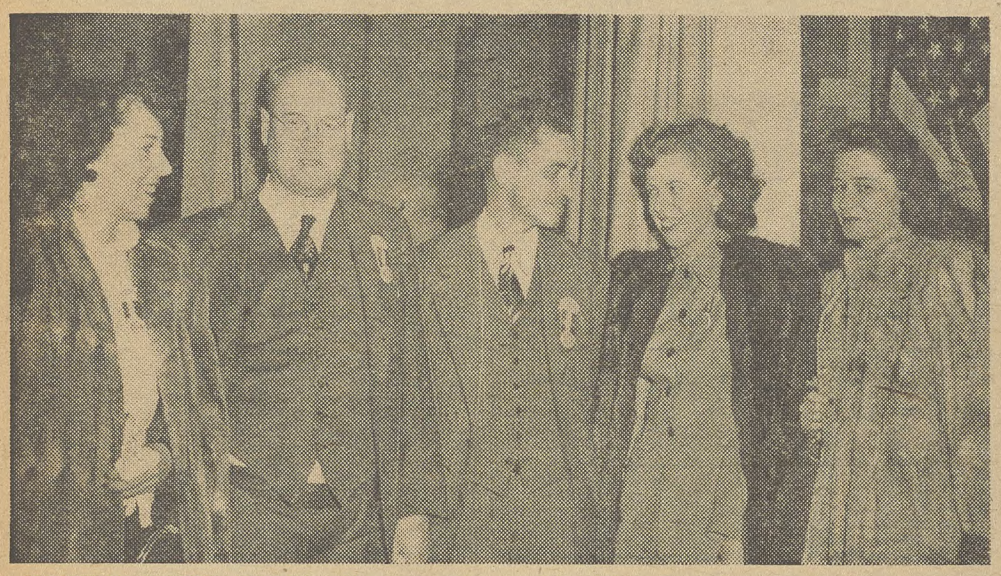
Some 400 delegates—representing upwards of 130 locals and nearly a quarter of a million workers—spoke, laughed, applauded, asked questions, held study sessions, adopted constitutional provisions and passed resolutions. Freed from the domination of what they called the "old UE" or the "dead UE," they spent a busy four days for some difficult months ahead.

2. IUE's Strength

Chartered after the "old UE" was expelled by the CIO convention last month as a Communist-dominated organization, the lusty IUE has seen a steady influx of locals and members in every section of the country.

On Nov. 28—when the convention opened at the Broadwood Hotel in Philadelphia—133 locals representing 221,325 members had already joined up with IUE. New locals are affiliating every day.

Says the IUE: "This total represents more than one-half of the membership of the UE at the time of its convention six week ago . . ."



FAMILY FITZPATRICK—Kin of delegate Mike from Pittsburgh — helped brighten up IUE convention. Fitzpatrick and Chairman Carey got into the picture with Miss Severina Gardiner, a niece; daughter, Louise Fitzpatrick, and daughter-in-law, Mrs. Blanche Fitzpatrick. This was one of the lighter moments.

LABOR AND NATION was subject of talk by William H. Davis, noted attorney who served as head of War Labor Board. Here Davis (left) chats with John E. Dillon of IUE Local 450 at Long Island City, N. Y.

THEY GUIDE IUE-CIO: Members of IUE's Administrative Committee, who serve until union officers are elected, meet with CIO Pres. Murray. Left to right: Joe Hawkins, Mansfield, O.; Robert Elsner, Dayton, O.; John Callihan, Pittsfiel Mass.; Frey Kelley, Lynn, Mass.; Pre Murray; Anthony Cimino, Springfiel Mass; Michael Fitzpatrick, Pittsburg E. J. Kraft, Dayton, O.; Dallas Smit

IUE leaders, on the basis of reports reaching the union's national office, claim that the overwhelming majority of workers in General Electric, Westinghouse, General Motors Electric Division and other large firms, are solidly in support of IUE.

To prove those majorities, the union is seeking Labor Board elections—the earlier the better.

3. IUE's Structure

IUE is a union in the process of organizing itself, Its first convention was organizational, rather than constitutional. It functions under the leadership of an administrative committee headed by CIO Sec.-Treas. Carey, who for years led the democratic minority's fight against the UE leadership.

The convention adopted, section-by-section, a constitution framed to provide maximum protection of the membership' democratic rights. But it held off election of officers until a future convention when the union is "over the hump" of organizing, Labor Board elections and legal tests. That was a course advocated by Pres. Murray, by Carey and by Fred Kelley, a member of the IUE administrative committee from the big GE local in Lynn, Mass.

"You have an excellent committee here of 10 very able, hard hitting, conscientious men, and at the head of this committee is Jimmy Carey, who has been associated with me as an officer of CIO for nine years," Pres. Murray said. "Jimmy is possessed of all the qualifications essential to the performance of this organizational task which you have assumed. You must repose confidence in your leadership. You must not permit discord to develop within your ranks."

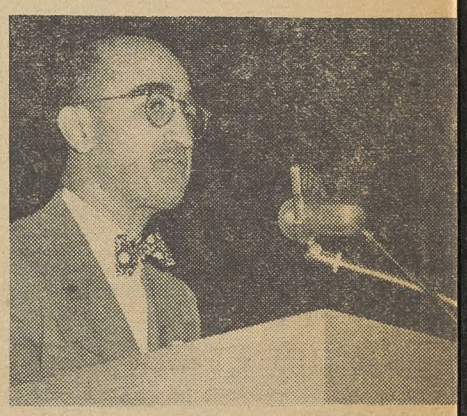
Some delegates did in fact want to hold elections now, and they spoke their minds on the convention floor. They felt that a "full-fledged" union structure speedily constructed would help them in the tasks ahead.

Carey put the issue into sharp focus.

"Do we want to take time out now for the purpose of electing officers, or do we want all our people to work to bring some measure of stability to this union?" he asked. And he emphasized that the IUE's immediate job is to give sanctuary to the workers of the electrical industry, to fight the big problems coming up.

The IUE will hold a constitutional convention, he said, "when we're finished with the job of cleaning out Communist domination in this industry—and we just don't know when that will be." It may be next spring or summer, he indicated.

As part of that fight against outside domination, the IUE convention barred Communists, their followers or other totalitarians from holdinng any office—local, district or national—in the new union.



LOTS OF LAW: Big problems face IU CIO, General Counsel Ben Sigal reminde convention delegates. But he predicte union would win them easily.

4. IUE's Goals

IUE has set a double task for itself—t "negative" job of ridding the industry Communist union leadership, and the po tive goal of winning wage and security a vances for its members.

"The IUE-CIO will concentrate all strength and all its energy in doing an hone to-God, militant, forward-looking, trade-unio down-to-earth job of improving the pay, curity and welfare conditions of the men a women who work in the electrical industr Carey reported to the convention.

Here is the union's economic program, outlined by the convention's officers' repo committee:

• Wages: Adjustments to bring up the p of electrical union workers to status of tho in steel, auto and aircraft, and to get f share of industry's rising productivity.

Government figures for September sh electrical workers receiving an average wa of $1.45 an hour. That is three cents less th the average for those in all durable goo

UE News Get Credentials

The "old UE" was keeping a nervous ey on proceedings of the IUE-CIO convention.

The UE News was represented at the pres tables, and Betsy Goldstein, the UE paper' correspondent, looked a little surprised whe she quickly received press credentials.

Atmosphere was different from that UE's convention last September, when pres credentials were denied for several hours t some reporters, and photographers wer barred from the hall.

UE News reporter took big batch of note on convention speeches and actions.

ort Wayne, Ind. Not present when the hotographer pushed the button were hairman Carey, Secretary William noots, and Harry Block, Philadelphia. he discussion appears serious.

dustries, and well below the levels of steel nd auto.

Pensions: IUE wants a $100 a month mini- um pension for workers over 65 who have years of service—this type of pension re- ntly won by the United Steelworkers. In dition, the union would like a severance ay program for those leaving jobs, and a stem of death benefits for widows and other rvivors.

Social Insurance: IUE seeks a system of nefits for medical care, hospitalization and rgery, also along lines won by steel union.

5. IUE's Policies

IUE's program is not confined to questions wages, hours and working conditions— ough these naturally loom large at the esent time in the union's fight for recogni- on and collective bargaining with its in- stry.

Its resolutions called for full support of IO's program, as indorsed by the Cleveland nvention.

"The IUE-CIO pledges it will work for the nplementation of CIO policy through its vn union, through industrial union councils, rough the use of CIO services, such as ommunity Service Committees, and through rrying its message directly to the people," e convention said.

IUE joined forces with other CIO unions fight Taft-Hartley, state anti-labor laws, seek improvement of the federal wage- our law.

6. IUE's Future

During the next few months, IUE-CIO will e engaged in a difficult and complex battle against unfriendly courts, unfriendly em- loyers, the Taft-Hartley Act and agents the old UE. But delegates to the Phila- lphia convention showed a quiet detremina- on to "get on with the job."

Their policy statement reflected that atti- de. It said:

"The membership of our international union determined to resist legalistic maneuvers Communists or by anyone allied with em, to seize their property, to prevent the se of that property, or to conduct their ffairs as they themselves determine in meet- gs called for the purpose by their duly ected officers."

The months ahead will be busy ones for UE-CIO members and their officers and gal staff.

But Chairman Carey summed up the con- ention's optimism in his closing remarks the four-day convention:

"The crazy Moscow adventurers cannot win, egardless of the support being given them a few short-sighted employers. The wis- om of American democracy stands back of he IUE-CIO."

UE's $500 Bundle '$64 Question'

A big group of speakers came to Philadelphia to address the first IUE-CIO convention and to wish it well in the future.

Here are the high-spot remarks of the guests:

CIO Pres. Murray: (discussing the "old UE's" big talk and little action) "I picked up the newspapers one beautiful, bright spring-like morning, and I read on the front page the story to the effect the UE was demanding a $500 package (for each worker). Humph. And May passed, and June . . . July came along, and an occasional squib in the newspapers about the $500 package. August, the $500 package had virtually disappeared.

"October and November have now come, and December is about on us, and what has happened to that $500 packqage? There is the $64 question.

"It is missing, absolutely missing. They move around in the UE with a $500 package that is lost or stolen. I wish that this convention would offer a reward for the return of that $500 package."

Sec. of Labor Maurice Tobin: "Free labor hasn't a ghost of a chance to retain its rights so long as it remains half-white and half-red. It must purge itself of every weakness within, in order to be strong against any outside efforts to dominate it for the malignant designs of world communism.'

Truman Sends Greetings

IUE-CIO received a warm message of greetings from Pres. Harry S. Truman.

"The policies adopted at the convention can afford workers in the electrical, radio and machine manufacturing industries full and free opportunity to build for themselves a bargaining agency representative of their hopes and aspirations as loyal American citizens," the President wrote to James B. Carey.

". . . I feel confident . . . they will always oppose subversive activity, in and out of the labor movement. . . . Through democratic processes in all the activities of our public life, we can continue to go forward in the service of humanity."

Sec. of Air Stuart Symington: He hailed the new union as one composed of loyal, democratic Americans in whose hands the national security would be fully safe and protected.

William H. Davis, head of the wartime War Labor Board: "Throwing out the Communists is only the first step." He urged the union to make itself a strong force for democratic action.

Sen. Francis Myers, (D., Pa.): "I congratulate you for a courageous and American act . . . We cannot have prosperity in America unless we have strong labor unions."

Pres. Willard Townsend of the CIO United Transport Service Employes: "Because you have thrown off totalitarianism, I greet you from the bottom of my heart . . . But remember that there are indignities existing in America which should also be thrown over."

Pres. Emil Rieve of Textile Workers Union: "We in the CIO did not throw out the left wing—we threw out the east wing . . . We believe that real democracy is better than the so-called 'people's democracies' of concentration camps and secret police.

"But this does not mean that we believe our country is perfect. This great country should be greater . . . We must find our way as free Americans. It will be a radical way. We'll be called 'worse than radicals' but we will win in the end."

CIO HUDDLE: CIO Pres. Murray and Vice-Pres. Emil Rieve talk things over with Sec.-Treas. James Carey, who heads IUE-CIO Administrative Committee. Both Murray and Rieve addressed convention, urged it fight for better conditions for electrical workers throughout nation. Murray lauded Carey, the committee.

Cominform Calls Carey Enemy Of Working Class

James B. Carey, secretary-treasurer of the CIO, was one of three democratic labor leaders honored last week by the Cominform with special denunciation.

The others mentioned were AFL Pres. Green and Arthur Deakin of the British Trades Union Congress.

In a special statement of Cominform policy adopted at a hush-hust meeting in Hungary, the Communist high command said that "reactionary trade union leaders" like Green, Carey and Deakin do the following:

1. Conduct "a splitting anti-popular policy."
2. Are the "bitterest enemies of the working class."
3. Are "accomplices of the warmongers and lackeys of imperialism."
4. Conceal their "betrayal" of workers' interests in "pseudo-Socialist, cosompolitan phraseology.'

The Cominform went on to call on workers everywhere to join with them in a united front for peace.

It also called for cold-war tactics against Tito's Yugoslavia.

'WE WANT RECOGNITION' from corporations was theme of IUE-CIO convention talks. Spokesmen for locals at big GE, Westinghouse and GM plants got together for evening session to discuss tactics before NLRB and in dealings with companies. IUE's program calls for more pay, pensions, insurance.

ACTIVE LADIES at IUE-CIO convention were Grace Morgan, Lynn, Mass.; Kate Leaf, Fairmont, W. Va.; Mary Callahan, Philadelphia; and Doris Reichardt, also from Lynn. Looks like they saw the lighter side of things.

Potofsky Pleads For Point 4 Aid For Israel

PRES. JACOB POTOFSKY of the CIO Clothing Workers has advocated the application of President Truman's Point 4 to Israel "because it is the most strategically placed in the Middle East, geographically, culturally and economically."

"No other segment of the Middle East can hope to prosper unless Israel prospers. The fate of the whole region is tied up with the development of Israel agriculturally and industrially," he said.

Potofsky, Louis Hollander, president of the New York State CIO Council and an ACW vice president, and Mayor William O'Dwyer of New York City spoke at a luncheon in New York City, tendered by the Natl. Committee for Labor Israel on behalf of Histadrut, the Israeli trade union organization.

The committee is seeking to raise $10 million through voluntary contributions in this country, and the luncheon was held in connection with a three-day convention in behalf of the fund campaign.

(Potofsky was a member of a CIO delegation named by Pres. Murray to visit Israel. Other members were Pres. Joseph Curran of the Natl. Maritime Union, and Maxwell Brandwen, counsel to ACW.

The Amalgamated president urged trade-union leaders at the luncheon to give all-out support to Histadrut's fund-raising campaign.

He said that Histadrut has made a home for thousands of dispossessed in Israel and is responsible for virtually every cooperative enterprise, transportation system, collective farm, housing venture, medical and educational service "which have made Israel bloom today."

Israel needs funds, he said, to strengthen its army against all possible aggression and to provide housing for the thousands of immigrants pouring into the country.

"The new Free State of Israel and its growth as a bastion of democracy in the Middle East would be unthinkable without Histadrut," Potofsky said. "Histadrut's stamp was evident wherever we turned.

"It not only is conducting regular union activities such as we know, but is responsible for virtually every cooperative enterprise, transportation system, collective farm, housing venture, medical and educational service and other projects which have made Israel bloom today. It is truly the most remarkable labor movement in the world.

"Histadrut's role in this undertaking is to find employment for the employables.

"We urge that the CIO, together with the AFL and the Railway Brotherhoods, support all measures to help make Israel a powerful force for progress throughout the world, and more particularly in the Middle East."

Potofsky not only called for additional substantial United States loans to Israel but also large private investments in the economic projects of that country. He said that the existing shortage of investment capital "may imperil the humanitarian goals" of the Jewish State.

He said that ACW last year had raised $300,000 for various projects in Israel, the bulk of them undertaken by Histadrut, and will do almost as well this year.

Hollander also stressed the need for private investment in Israel. He said that the new nation could not hope to accomplish its gigantic tasks without material help from abroad.

He joined with Mayor William O'Dwyer in opposing a plan to have the United Nations administer Jerusalem.

Hollander said Jerusalem is "the heart and soul and life of Israel. There can be no Israel without Jerusalem and no Jerusalem without Israel; it cannot be torn away from Israel," he said.

Messages praising Histadrut were received from Pres. Truman, and Pres. Chaim Weizmann, Israel president.

Copies of the "Report on Israel," prepared by Potofsky, Curran and Bradwen, may be obtained from the CIO Publications Dept., 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C. Prices: 15c a copy; 50 for $6.75; 100 for $12; 500 for $50.

Independent Union South Of Rio Urged

A HEMISPHERE plan for economic and social development of Latin-American countries has been proposed by the CIO Latin-American Affairs Committee, headed by Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

The proposal, based on action taken at the recent CIO convention, advocates, among other things, "a genuine and independent labor movement" below the Rio Grande that is "free from political dogmatism and pressure" and which pursues "a policy dedicated to the improvement of living and working conditions" among Latin-Americans.

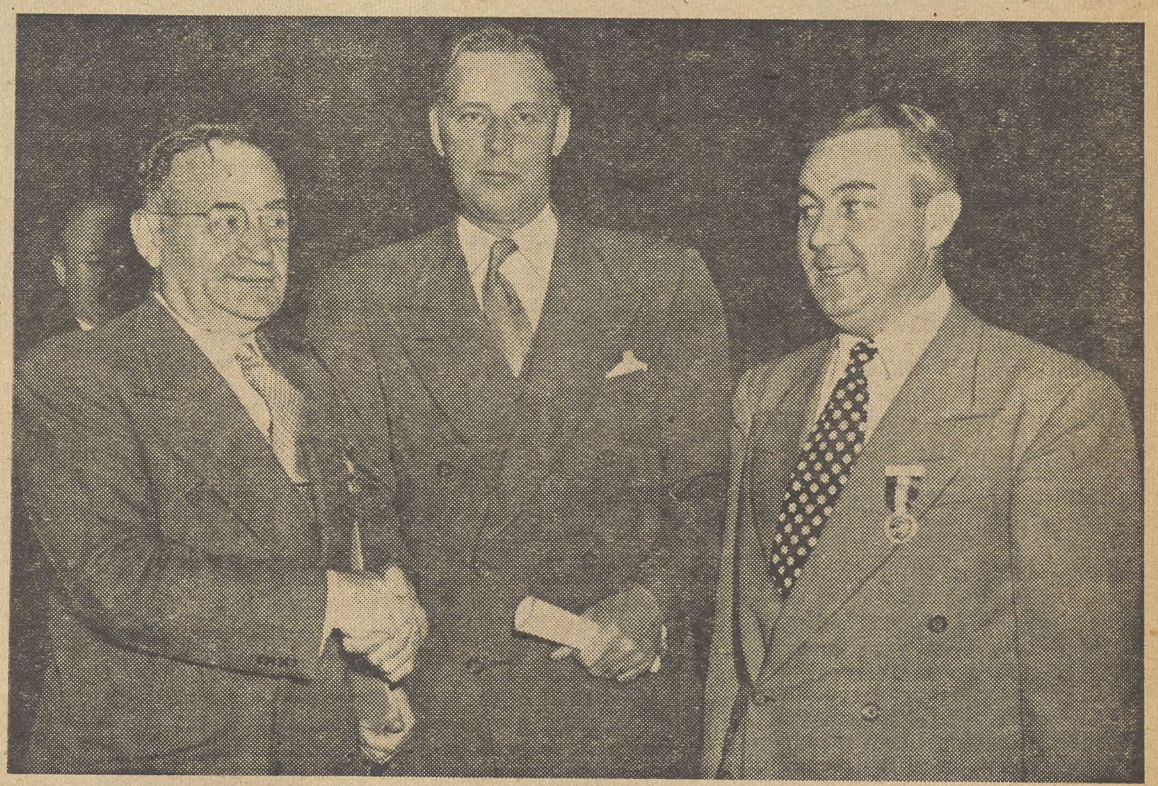
The CIO hemispheric plan envisages cooperation with Latin-American people against encroachments by foreign powers and monopolistic interests, as well as support for national democracy and against dictatorship and militarism.

It urges a development program for Latin-America spread over 20 to 30 years. The greater part of the funds needed for the program, the CIO committee says, should come from public sources and be provided in the main by American governments in proportion to their economic and financial strength.

Because of Latin-America's vast natural resources, a large part of which remain unsurveyed, the CIO committee urges a thorough investigation of basic resources, including minerals, forest products, fuel and water power.

THE OVER-ALL aim of its plan, the Committee declares, is to lift the Latin-American economy and production "from the depths and bondage of its colonial and semi-colonial status up to the level required by the needs of our time and national self-respect and independence."

To achieve this aim, the CIO committee urges a complete overhauling of Latin-American economy and production, looking toward modernization, diversification of crops and land reform to assure maximum use of arable land for cultivation.



THREE PROMINENT SPEAKERS at the Massachusetts CIO Council Convention at Boston were Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers, Labor Secy. Maurice Tobin and Pres. J. William Belanger of the state council. Rieve called for the "welfare state," and Tobin urged enactment of laws providing a $100 minimum pension and a dollar minimum hourly wage.

Insurance Man Sees Danger In Bigness

THE PRESIDENT of one of the nation's most successful small insurance companies warned last week that the big companies are growing so fast they soon will get all of the country's investment income.

The warning was drowned out by denials from other insurance companies and an industrial spokesman that there is any danger in Big Business.

William Montgomery, head of Acacia Mutual Life Insurance Co., sounded the warning before the Cellar monopoly investigating committee. He said a limit on the size of insurance companies was "inevitable" if they were to be stopped from gobbling up all the nation's investment opportunities within a few years.

But other insurance company spokesmen and Charles E. Wilson, president of General Electric, all defended the growth of bigness and denied charges of monopoly. Wilson denied all of the monopoly charges against GE presented by previous witnesses in the hearings and insisted the company's policy was to obey the anti-trust laws.

Chairman Cellar (D., N. Y.) listed 16 anti-trust cases against GE and almost a dozen actions by the Federal Trade Commission. Wilson testified most of these cases were based on actions before he became president and that the convictions came from changing Supreme Court attitudes on the meaning of the law.

MONTGOMERY charged the big insurance companies were growing so fast because they overcharged consumers for insurance policies and were accumulating unnecessarily large reserves.

If their growth continues at the present pace, he said, "a few companies will have control of the investment assets and I do not know where the little fellows like ourselves are going to come in on investments."

Such concentration in a few big companies, Montgomery said, is definitely "not healthy" for the economy. He contended the big companies were unable to offer insurance any more cheaply than the small companies and therefore there was no public advantage in them.

Montgomery suggested the big companies be required to give a public accounting of their failure to pay promised dividends to policy holders. He said their failure to pay such dividends was one of the reasons for their growing reserves.

Montgomery's testimony was challenged by C. G. Coley of the Durham Life Insurance Co. of Raleigh, N. C., and James A. Fulton, of the Home Life Insurance Co. of New York. They both contended the small companies were able to compete with the big ones.

Mass. CIO Emphasizes Pensions

RETIREMENT pensions, from both industry and government, took much of the attention of the Massachusetts CIO convention at Boston.

Unemployment, a real problem in a state where the textile industry is widespread, also held the stage in both resolutions and speeches.

Labor Secy. Maurice J. Tobin, chief speaker at the conclave, urged minimum pensions of $100 a month "for every retired person in the U. S." Tobin described such a scheme as "not charity" but a sound insurance system which should be enacted into law at the earliest possible date."

With recently established $100 pensions in the steel, auto and communications industries, the CIO gathering went on record in favor of legislation to protect older workers from discharge or company refusal to hire because they will soon be eligible for such pensions.

The group seeks to make discrimination because of age an unfair labor practice the same as discrimination for union activity.

PRESIDENT Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers said that the needs of New England cannot be met without the establishment of the "welfare state" for the entire nation. Referring to the recent business slump in the area, Rieve pointed out that "it was the workers and not the employers who really suffered."

Archbishop Richard J. Cushing of Boston paid high tribute to organized labor for having taken steps to "clean house" and rid the trade union movement of Communists. He implied also that other liberal forces should help to crush the "Red Menace," stating:

"You can only be rid of Communist policies and programs by providing better programs, programs more consistent with human need, human dignity and Divine law."

The convention also adopted resolutions pledging the delegates to work for adequate cash sickness laws in the State legislature, and to put pressure on both State and Federal legislatures for development of New England waterways.

J. William Belanger of Textile was re-elected council president. All other incumbent officers and board members were re-elected, and five new board members were added.

Labor-Haters Help Unions, Parley Told

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

SOMETIMES labor - haters overshoot their mark in fighting legislation of benefit to workers, and do more good for labor than harm, by the very viciousness of their attacks.

This fact, combined with the campaign put on by the Massachusetts United Labor Committee, helps explain the noteworthy legislative gains won this year by labor in his state, Albert Clifton of the Massachusetts CIO told the National Conference on Labor Legislation held last week in Washington. The committee had the support of all branches of organized labor.

Clifton was one of a group of CIO representatives from 25 states and the District of Columbia who attended the 16th annual conference of representatives of state, Federal government and other agencies concerned with labor legislation.

Speaking from the floor at the opening session, Clifton told the several hundred delegates from more than 40 states and territories that the Massachusetts United Labor Committee had done a real job in getting improvements in workmen's compensation, unemployment benefits and other measures affecting workers.

"You'll find more opposition than you ever believed existed, when you try to get legislation passed of benefit to labor," Clifton said, in describing the heated lobbying activities of insurance companies and other business interests. He thanked "the enemies of labor" for their aid.

SOME OF THE CIO state officials who attended the National Conference on Labor Legislation get together between sessions to talk with CIO Council Dir. John Brophy (seated far right). CIO's State Council leaders in the East, South, Midwest and Far West came to Washington for the four-day meeting to exchange ideas and discuss ways of improving state and federal labor legislation. the Conference is staged annually by the Dept. of Labor.

LABOR SECY. Maurice J. Tobin, in an opening address at the conference, said that while we are "headed in the right direction" and "have better than held our own" in the field of labor legislation, much remains to be done.

He emphasized the need for improving our Federal-State system of unemployment insurance, pointing out that benefits have not kept pace with the rise in wages or in the cost of living.

The period of duration also needs to be increased Tobin said. In 1948, a year of peak employment about 28% of the unemployed exhausted their benefits before getting other jobs. Need for a broader coverage, he said, is shown by the fact that only seven out of every 10 workers in the country are now protected by unemployment insurance.

Tobin said that the Dept. of Labor is planning to ask Congress to pass legislation to strengthen the unemployment insurance system by setting up nation-wide minimum standards.

The Federal government also should assist states whose unemployment compensation programs need money, Tobin said.

IN ADDITION to Clifton's report on Massachusetts, other interesting facts about labor legislation in various states were revealed in remarks from the floor. John Shelley (D.), congressman - elect from California, told of labor's fight to get disability insurance out of the hands of private insurance companies, which he said had been getting 60c out of every $1 collected, with only 40c going to the workers covered.

ROBERT C. Brown, state official from Montana, told the conference that his state had no department of labor now, though it did have one for seven years, until "some wise guy" found that it was unconstitutional.

The Montana constitution calls for a joint department of agriculture, labor and industry. A proposition to amend the constitution and set up a separate department of labor will be presented to the people of the state next year, Brown said.

Arthur W. Devine, director of the Rhode Island Dept. of Labor, said his state was the only one in the union that has a vacation pay clause in the unemployment compensation law.

Jim Hughes, Oklahoma Commissioner of Labor, reported with pride that no anti-labor law had been passed in his state.

A number of recommendations, drawn up by various committees which met separately after the opening session, were later approved by the conference. These included a $1 minimum wage provided both by Federal and state legislation, so that all workers would be covered without exception; establishment of state safety codes; and larger appropriations for state labor departments.

The conference also approved a recommendation made by the committee on Employment Opportunities calling for increased efforts to open up more jobs for minority groups. An amendment made from the conference floor, proposing fair employment practice legislation at state and local levels was defeated 43 to 39.

A Summary Of Provisions Of 75c Minimum Wage Law

DO YOU KNOW just what your rights are under the newly amended Federal Wage-Hour law which goes into effect Jan. 25?

Increase in the minimum wage from 40c to 75c as provided in the amended law, known as the Fair Labor Standards Act, has been widely publicized, but there are other important provisions not so well known, which affect many more CIO workers than the increase in the minimum wage.

Furthermore, it is not always easy to determine just how and to whom the terms laid down in the law apply.

The Wage-Hour law, passed in 1938, was never amended until the 81st Congress this fall finally brought it a little more up-to-date by increasing the hourly minimum to 75c.

Some other changes were also made, tightening up restrictions on child labor, bringing several small additional groups under coverage, removing about 200,000 others previously covered and regulating home work to bar attempts to evade the law in this field.

As amended the Fair Labor Standards Act, in general, sets up these three mandatory standards:

1. A minimum wage of 75c an hour—except for industries in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

2. Time and one-half for overtime after 40 hours a week—with certain exemptions.

3. A minimum age of 16 years for general employment—except for occupations declared hazardous and certain occupations outside of school hours.

- The law does not otherwise limit the number of hours of work and does not provide for higher rates of pay for Sundays and holidays as such. (This is commonly done through collective bargaining.)
- It applies to men and women employes—not specifically exempt, and to home workers as well as to factory workers.

Here in brief is a summary of the main points of the wage-hour law, as affected by the Portal-to-Portal Act of 1947 and as changed by the Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1949:

1. Wage-Hour coverage: All workers come under the wage-hour provisions who are engaged in the production of goods for interstate commerce through "producing, manufacturing, mining, handling, transporting, or in any other manner working on such goods, or in any closely related process or occupation directly essential to the production" of such goods.

- The 75c minimum and 40-hour week apply regardless of the method of payment — hourly, weekly, piecework, monthly or other basis. Workers must be paid at the rate of not less than 75c an hour.

2. Exemptions from minimum wage and overtime provisions:

Some of these are complete, some are partial, and some are made inapplicable by the performance at any time of nonexempt work.

- Employes completely exempt from both the minimum wage and overtime provisions include:

Those engaged in a bona fide executive administrative, professional or local retailing capacity; also outside salesmen.

Agricultural workers, certain groups employed in the seafood and fishing industries other than canning; those engaged in forestry and logging operations employing fewer than 12 workers; seamen, taxicab company employes; switchboard operators of public telephone exchanges with not more than 750 stations; and workers engaged in delivery of newspapers to the consumer (also exempt from child-labor provisions).

- Exempt from overtime provisions only:

Employes of certain railroads and pipe lines and certain employes of motor carriers subject to regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and employes of certain carriers by air.

Certain employes of concerns in the dairy industry, and those engaged in cotton and cottonseed processing, and in the processing of sugar beets, sugar-beet molasses, sugar cane or maple sap into sugar (but not refined sugar) or into syrup.

- Exemption from overtime only—up to 14 weeks in any one calendar year:

Certain employes engaged in the first processing, canning or packing of perishable or seasonal fresh fruits and vegetables or in handling, slaughtering or dressing poultry or livestock.

- Partial exemption from overtime only—up to 12 hours a day or 56 hours a week:

Employes in seasonal industries —but only for a period or periods not exceeding a total of 14 work weeks in any calendar year; and employes working under either a guaranteed annual employment agreement, or an agreement limiting hours worked in any 26-week period. Such agreements must be reached through collective bargaining with an NLRB certified union.

(Failure to comply with the special overtime provisions of these exemptions makes the employer liable for overtime pay for all hours of work over 40 in each work week.)

- Minimum pay exceptions: Certain learners, apprentices, messengers, and handicapped workers are excepted from the 75c minimum, but only under special certificates issued in accordance with regulations laid down by the Wage-Hour Administrator.
- "Hot Goods": The Fair Labor Standards Act makes it unlawful to transport, deliver or sell any goods produced in violation of the minimum wage and overtime provisions—if such violation is known.

3. Child Labor Provisions:

The Act prohibits "oppressive child labor." This is defined as:

- Employment of children under 16 except in non-mining and non-manufacturing occupations and under such conditions as will not interfere with their schooling, health or well-being.
- Employment of minors between 16 and 18 years of age in occupations found to be hazardous or harmful to their health.
- Employment of a child under 14 in any occupation is termed "oppressive child labor" unless specifically exempt.

The exemptions include children employed in agriculture outside of school hours; as actors or performers in motion-picture, theater, radio or television productions; as newspaper delivery boys; and children under 16, employed by their parents or guardians in non-hazardous occupations.

4. Enforcement of measure: The Act provides three methods for recovering unpaid minimum and/or overtime wages due:

(a) The employe may bring suit against an employer for back wages due, plus a reasonable amount to cover costs of suit; (b) the Administrator of the Wage-Hour Division may supervise payment of back wages; or (c) the Administrator at employe's written request may bring suit in his behalf.

5. Criminal Penalties: Willful violators of the Fair Labor Standards Act can be prosecuted by the Federal Government, and upon conviction can be fined up to $10,000 and, in case of a second conviction, imprisoned up to six months.

The Act stops employers from discharging or discriminating against any worker who has filed a complaint or started or participated in a proceeding under the Act.

Civil Service Halts Plan To Oust Liberals

THE CIVIL Service Commission, after receiving violent protests from organized labor, has announced that it will halt its projected purge of liberal trial examiners from government agencies.

The purge, one of the mostly quietly noxious stunts pulled as a result of election of the 80th ("worst") Congress, would have removed from the government payroll a total of 54 trial examiners working for the quasi-judicial agencies. Over half of these would have come from the NLRB.

The men would have been removed for no other reason than that their view on administration of the laws under which they were preparing cases did not coincide with the interpretation given those laws by prominent Big Business lawyers.

It was as if attorneys for a large corporation were allowed to handpick the government lawyers who would decide whether a union had a justifiable complaint against the corporation. It was just as blatant as that.

The purge was the brain-child of Senator Alexander S. Wiley (R., Wis.), who demanded elimination of trial examiners "having an approach inimical to the welfare of private enterprise." He made so much noise about it that the Civil Service Commission set up a panel of outside lawyers to review the qualifications of government trial examiners.

Five of the six named were prominent in the Bar Association and several had for years represented corporations which had been found guilty of violating the Wagner Act, on recommendations made by many of these same examiners. The panel, to nobody's surprise, found 54 examiners "guilty."

When the story got out, however, the blackballed examiners threatened court action, the unions raised vigorous protests, and the Senate Civil Service Committee of the 81st Congress started an investigation into the whole affair.

The Civil Service Commission now has backed down completely, ordered the 54 examiners retained in their jobs, and announced it will "re-investigate" their ratings and issue new ones.

Over-Confidence Blamed For Cincinnati Defeat

AT LEAST three factors account for the defeat of Rollin Everett, administrative officer of the Cincinnati CIO Newspaper Guild, in his campaign for re-election to a third term on the Cincinnati city council, says Ohio PAC.

The Republicans carried on a vicious whispering campaign against Everett, accusing him of being "left-wing, socialistic and a stooge of Jack Kroll." The Commies worked desperately to defeat him because of his strong anti-Wallace stand and his support of all moves to eliminate Communist influence from CIO.

The most potent factor, however, as reported in the Cincinnati Sun, a labor weekly which Everett founded and formerly edited, was over-confidence on the part of Everett's own supporters. They were so sure of his election that they cast their "first choice" votes for other labor-supported candidates, under Cincinnati's proportional representation voting system, in the belief that the other candidates needed the votes more. Ward and precinct effort also was weak.

The result was that while the Charter group, which Everett supported, retained control of the council, Everett was temporarily put on the sidelines.

Brewery Employer Groups Shun Pension Discussions

Pres. Karl F. Feller of the CIO Brewery Workers has warned the U. S. Brewers Foundation and the Small Brewers Association that unless they agree to a joint conference with the international on health, welfare and pension plans, the union will bargain for these benefits on a local basis.

Several months ago union officials asked both groups to set a date for talks to begin. The SBA promptly agreed to the conference but nothing was heard from USBF until late in October, when that organization flatly declined to discuss the matter.

Shortly after USBF's refusal was received, SBA Sec. William M. O'Shea did an about face. He advised the union, "Our Board of Directors has instructed me to inform you that we do not believe we have any authority to represent the members of our Association on such matters."

Recall Urged Of Councilmen Favoring Low-Cost Housing

The desperate lengths to which real estate dealers are going in attempts to block low-cost housing was forcefully brought out in Oakland, Cal., during the past week.

The Committee for Home Protection, front for real estate interests in that area, started a recall drive against three city councilmen because they voted to ask for a Federal loan to finance construction of 3000 low-rent housing units in Oakland.

Five of Oakland's nine councilmen voted to apply for the loan, but the realtors directed their attack on three—Scott Weakley, Raymond E. Pease and Joseph Edward Smith. The two others were not included as targets simply because they have served less than six months and hence cannot legally be subjected to recall proceedings as yet.

They Didn't See Into Future

IN A RECENT organizing campaign in Dallas, Texas, the employer mailed a vicious anti-union letter to his employes.

A night-shift worker called CIO headquarters as soon as he received the letter at his home.

UAW and CIO organizers banged out an answer to the letter, telling day-shift workers leaving the plant that "there's a love letter from the boss waiting at home for you." Comment on the boss's letter was made.

Next day the boss sent another letter. The night-shift worker called again just as soon as he received it at home.

This time, the organizers hastily printed up placards and displayed them at the gates as the day-shift workers headed home. The placards read:

"Phoney Letter No. 2

"Is waiting Now At Home For You."

Next day the boss sent a third letter, then a fourth.

Each letter brought out warning placards:

"Phoney Letter No. 4

"Has Just Been Left Beneath Your Door."

The boss called a conference of some workers, to test reaction. He asked one employe what he thought about UAW-CIO.

"They seem to be able to see into the future," the employe said. "They answer your letters before you write them."

Two Utah Towns Elect CIO Mayors

TWO UTAH towns now have CIO mayors, according to a report sent in to CIO-PAC, and the new mayors have labor backing on their councils.

Joseph M. Cronin, member of local 151 of the CIO Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, was elected Mayor of Eureka, Utah. Three members of the same local—Harold Brinton, Henry A. Wall, and John Phipps—were elected to the city council.

Earl Resigh, member of the CIO United Trades local industrial union in Park City, Utah, was elected mayor. Serving on the council are Joe U. Davitch, also of the United Trades local, and three members of the CIO Progressive Metal Workers Council—Phil Santy, Leonard Addy, and William E. Bates.

In Bingham, Utah, Joe Dispenza of Mine, Mill local 485 was elected to the city council.

The Utah victories are regarded as very important, since U. S. Senator Elbert B. Thomas (D., Utah.), Taft-Hartley foe who is chairman of the Senate Labor Committee, faces a tough battle for re-election in 1950.

(Note: The Nov. 21 issue of the CIO News reported that four CIO members in Connecticut had been "elected" to positions which actually were appointive. The four are: John Gamble, Auto Worker, appointed justice of the peace in Hartford; Louis Trocci, Textile, appointed grand juror in Simsbury; Joseph Ciesinski, Ship, appointed judge of Seymour town court; and Margaret C. Driscoll, wife of the Conn. CIO council secretary-treasurer, appointed prosecutor for the Bridgeport City Court.)

NAACP Rejects Civil Right Congress 'Unity'

THE NATIONAL Association for the Advancement of Colored People has turned down the offer of "support" and "cooperation" made it Nov. 14 by the party-line Civil Rights Congress because "we do not desire that kind of cooperation, or that kind of 'unity'."

The Civil Rights Congress wrote a lengthy letter to Roy Wilkins, acting NAACP secretary, offering "help" with the NAACP-initiated Civil Rights Mobilization and asking why the Congress has not been included in the list of organizations invited to participate as co-sponsors.

On Nov. 22, Wilkins answered the letter.

"We remember the Scottsboro case," Wilkins wrote . . . "(when) the NAACP was subjected to the most unprincipled vilification. We remember . . . the whole unspeakable machinery that was turned loose upon all those who did not embrace the 'unity' policy as announced by the Communists.

"We want none of that unity today.

"We remember that during the war when Negro Americans were fighting for jobs on the home front and fighting for decent treatment in the armed services we could get no help from the organizations on the extreme left . . . As soon as Russia was attacked they dropped the Negro question . . . During the war years the disciples of the extreme left sounded very much like the worst of the Negro-hating Southerners.

". . . It seems to us to prove that the organizations of the extreme left, when they campaign for civil rights, or on behalf of a minority, do so as a secondary consideration, as an activity which is certain to be weighted, shaped, angled or abandoned in accordance with the Communist party line.

"We can have no truck with such unity.

"We are wary, too, of your asserted devotion to civil rights . . . If the Smith Act is a monstrous piece of legislation when used against the 11 Communists it was no less monstrous, no less an instrument for the suppression of civil liberties, when used against the Minneapolis men," (i. e., the Dunne Brothers, Trotskyites, convicted under the Act).

"We reject such a part-time concept of civil liberties," Wilkins continued.

"We of the NAACP recall, also, the most recent attacks on our Association by the Civil Rights Congress.

"In the present Civil Rights Mobilization we have no desire for that kind of cooperation, or that kind of 'unity.' We do not believe it will contribute to the success of the campaign. On the contrary, we believe it will be a distinct handicap.

"The organizations sponsoring this Civil Rights Mobilization are seeking the enactment of civil rights legislation to the end that minority groups may be more fully protected in their rights under the American constitution and the American concept of a democracy. We do not believe, in the light of the consistent performance of the Civil Rights Congress and its associates, that this is their end objective."

AVC Parley Moves To Help Create World Vets' Group

WHILE representatives of unions in non-totalitarian countries were meeting last week in London to set up the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, the Chicago convention of the American Veterans Committee was taking steps to help create a world organization of veterans in democratic nations.

Gilbert A. Harrison, former national AVC chairman, was chosen to represent AVC at a world conference called by French and Belgian veterans' organizations in Paris next summer.

The convention instructed him to promote an international association of veterans free of communism and fascism.

The AVC adopted a platform which included a plank continuing the organization's opposition to a Federal bonus. The AVC is the only major veterans' organization opposed to such a bonus. The platform said:

"We regard such bonuses and pensions as economically unsound political handouts, for which the veteran himself would ultimately pay. We propose, instead, as benefitting veterans and non-veteran alike, the AVC program of social legislation."

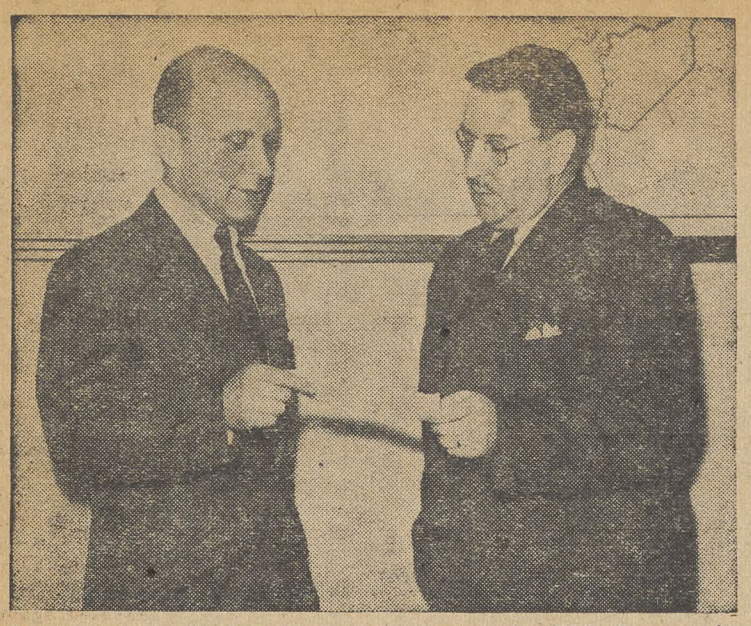
MICHAEL STRAIGHT, editor of the New Republic, and William R. Ming, Jr., Chicago, Negro attorney and law professor, were elected national chairman and national vice chairman, respectively, defeating left-wing candidates by majorities of about four to one.

Moderates also defeated left-wing candidates in every contest for the 25-man Natl. Planning Committee, which governs the AVC between conventions.

Louis C. Parister, Jr., Tulsa, Okla., was elected as AVC's first paid national executive director at a salary of $7000 a year. He is a retiring member of the planning board.

Joseph A. Cloherty, Jr., and Ely Wagner, both of Washington, D. C., were re-elected national secretary and national treasurer, respectively.

"Why demoralize us with examples of such lousy, non-union wages and hours!"



EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR Leo Perlis of the CIO Community Services Committee (left) hands CARE Executive Director Paul Comly French a check for $1000 to be used for the purchase of CARE food packages for Israel. CIO-CSC Chairman Irving Abramson directed that the distribution of the packages be made "to needy trade unionists and their families through Histadrut—with the compliments of the CIO-CSC." Histadrut is the Israel Trade Union Federation. (See story on Page 8.)

Lithographers' Union Seeks $1 Million In Damages

SUIT FOR $1 million damages has been filed in St. Louis, Mo., by the CIO Lithographers against 16 printing and lithographing firms.

The suit charges the companies conspired with an employers' group to prevent members of the union from working for employers outside the group.

The union also filed unfair labor practice charges with the NLRB, contending that the 16 firms locked out the lithographers and refused to bargain with the union.

More than 170 members of Local 5 have been idle since Nov. 1 in a dispute over working time and a health plan.

Defendants in the suit are officers of the Associated Printers and Lithographers of St. Louis, a voluntary employers' group; Maurice E. Mendle, chairman of the employers' wage scale committee, and the 16 firms and their heads.

AMA May Need New Tactics With Unions

The publicity firm of Whittaker & Baxter may have to start giving the American Medical Association some new advice.

The AMA, in a new effort to kill President Truman's national health insurance bill, is offering to send spokesmen to union meetings.

Recently, the AFL Central Labor Union at Baltimore heard Dr. J. M. T. Finney denounce the health bill. But the doctor, a justly noted surgeon, made one mistake—he allowed questions. Later on, figuratively a bit battered and bruised, he left the hall with, as one observer put it, his tail between his legs. If this line of questioning was any indication, Baltimore AFL members like the national health plan whether the AMA does or not.

Sheriff To Stand Trial in Floggings

Twelve men, including the Dade County (Ga.) sheriff, must stand trial on federal charges that they turned seven Negroes over to a masked mob to be flogged. Federal Judge Frank A. Hooper has denied a defense motion to throw out the indictments.

The indictment charged the sheriff, three deputies, and eight others conspired to have the Negroes arrested, then seized and beaten, by a group of 50 to 75 in Klan robes, the night of April 2.

War Chest Being Raised For Sen. Taft

MORE PROOF that industrialists all over the country are raising a big war chest for the re-election of their idol, Sen. Taft (R. Ohio), was brought to light by the San Diego (Cal.) Labor Leader.

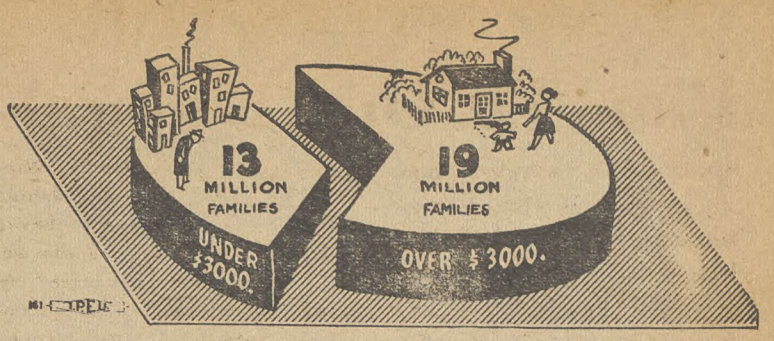
The Leader printed a copy of an appeal for Taft addressed by the San Diego Employers' Association, Inc., to all its members. The appeal glorified Taft as the savior of the employers, and called upon them to contribute to his political fund.

"If Taft goes down to defeat," the association cried. "it will be a demonstration of left-wing labor political power which cannot but have a discouraging effect upon other congressmen and senators . . . As the U. S. Senate is a national forum, so will it be a national catastrophe if Senator Taft is poleaxed . . ."

Then the document revealed that "spreading throughout the west, from Texas to Washington, is a spontaneous movement to assist Senator Taft." It suggested that a dollar from each of "several million business and professional men" around the country be forwarded to Taft, along with form letters praising him for his "courageous statesmanship."

Brannan Plan Backed

The California State Grange adopted a resolution supporting the Brannan farm subsidy plan as a sound program to stabilize the economy. George H. Sehlmeyer was re-elected state Grange master. Michael W. Straus, federal commissioner of reclamation, was among the convention speakers.



ONE THIRD of the nation's non-rural families struggle along on incomes under $3000 a year, according to the report of a subcommittee of the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report. The CIO's program for economic and social legislation would help them live better.

10 German Labor Leaders Laud U. S. at End of Trip Here

TEN GERMAN labor leaders have gone home after a two-month tour of the U. S., surprised at their friendly reception, and filled with admiration for American democracy, productive efficiency, and living standards.

They came under the joint auspices of Army and the Dept. of Labor, saw industry at work, visited both the CIO and AFL national conventions, and took in TVA. At a farewell press conference in Washington, they gave newsmen their impressions of this country.

Hans Stetter of Stuttgart, a pre-war member of the Reichstag, and a union member since 1903, said German industry could not operate on a two-shift or three-shift basis, as in the U. S., because there is not enough capital, or materials, or freedom to act. And even if they could act, there would be no buyers for their products, he said.

Americans are not much different from other people, he said, as they too blame politicians and taxes for all ills. Stetter, a joiner, is a member of the Stuttgart City Council.

Ernst Schwartz, of Mannheim, an anti-Nazi who was thrown into a concentration camp in 1933, was struck by the democratic aspects of American life, in the relations of parents and children, children and teachers, and in collective bargaining. In Germany, he said, the model child is an obedient child; here he is trained to make free decisions.

He decried the American poll taxes, and criticized the occupation authorities for nullifying German laws. He is deputy chairman of the Chemistry, Paper and Ceramics Union.

Fritz Angermeier, of Munich, was struck by the tolerance of Americans, by lack of evidence of what he called "the class struggle," and by the American educational system. In Germany, he said, free public education ends at the fourth grade. After that, children go to private school, which he said creates class consciousness. He noted also that whereas German education is technical, here it is general and there is little emphasis on blind obedience.

Angermeier is secretary for youth of the Bavarian Industrial Union of Hardware Workers.

NLRB OK's ACW Pickets

THE National Labor Relations Board has rejected an appeal by the Sa-Ray Clothing Co., Inc., New York City, from a decision by the New York Regional Board dismissing a charge against the CIO Clothing Workers.

The union was charged with violating Taft-Hartley in picketing company retail stores for selling clothing made by a non-union manufacturer with whom the Amalgamated is in dispute.

The NLRB general counsel held there was insufficient evidence of alleged union violations to "warrant further proceedings." The Regional Labor Board had ruled against the company on Oct. 26.

On Nov. 14, Justice George Beldock, of Kings County, N. Y., Supreme Court, dismissed a complaint by the Sa-Ray firm, with stores in Manhattan and Brooklyn, against ACW Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, and denied a temporary injunction to stop union picketing which had begun on Oct. 6.

The Amalgamated's campaign is directed against the non-union manufacturing firm, Merit Clothing Co., Inc., of Mayfield, Ky.

You'd Pay Only Once Under Brannan Plan

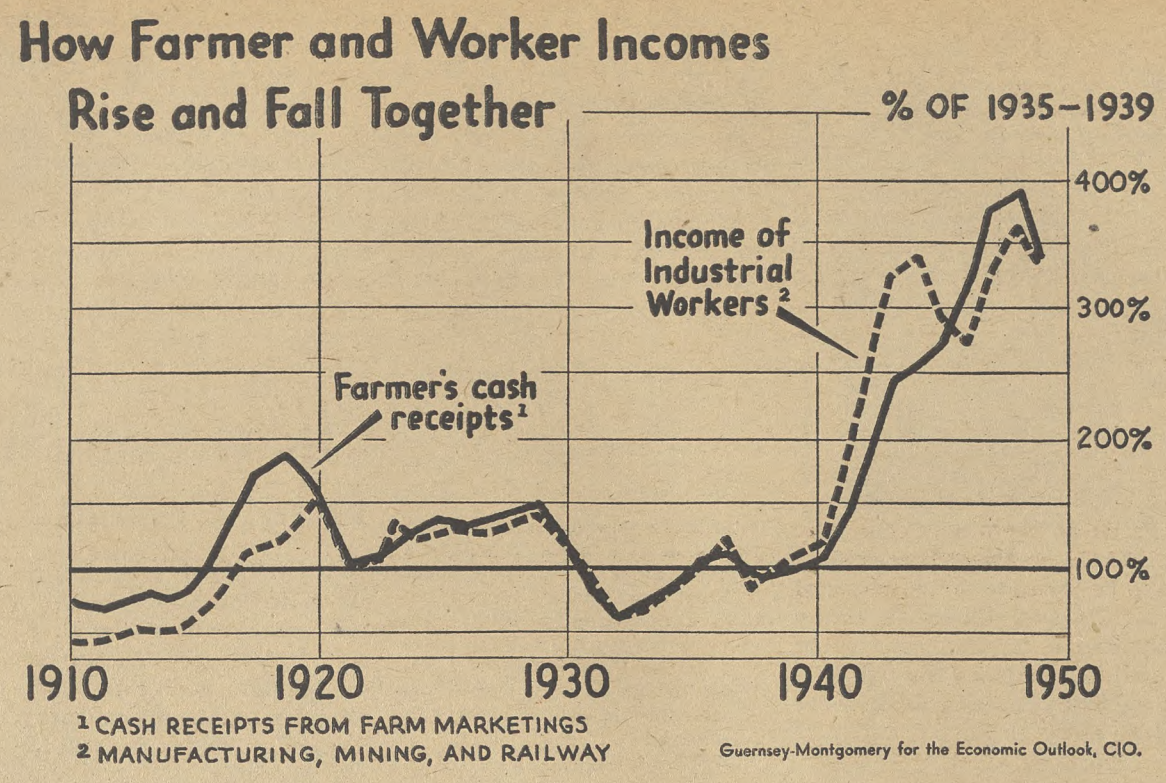
"NEITHER the nation nor its farmers is well served by policies that try to hold up the farmer's income by pricing his best potential customers out of the market," comments the Economic Outlook in a searching study of the farm problem, just released.

"Unfortunately," the report continues, "our present farm support price program does just that. Most families pay twice for this short-sighted policy—first as taxpayers when the government buys farm products, and again at the grocery store when the higher price is paid by the housewife."

"This is a situation which the Brannan Plan attempts to remedy."

The CIO convention passed a resolution supporting the Brannan Plan, in the following language: "This convention endorses the concept of the Brannon Plan: to support farm prices and incomes at reasonable level; to give special assistance to family-type farms; to assure farmers that the food they produce will find a market and will be used to feed people; and at the same time to allow consumers to buy at reasonable prices the abundant supplies of food and fibers which the farmers of America are producing."

The plan is one of the hottest political issues facing the nation, and unquestionably will have a profound effect on the 1950 Congressional elections. The Truman administration was returned to power because it had labor and farm support. The Brannan Plan, with its simplicity and its direct appeal to the economic interests of both small farmers and labor, is producing, even in the discussion stage, striking examples of the increasing solidarity of interest between farm and labor groups.



Guernsey-Montgomery for the Economic Outlook, CIO.

So fundamental are the issues raised by the proposal that leaders of the three major farm organizations who oppose the plan, notably the Farm Bureau Federation, are finding in state after state that a large part of their membership, faithful for years, is now in open revolt and is flocking to the National Farmers Union, only one of the "big four" to support the proposal.

THE ECONOMIC Outlook showed that in 1947, a boom year for agricultural prices, 70% of farm families took in less than $3000 in cash and 25% had incomes of less than $1000.

Their "market"—workers in non-farm communities—in 1948 fared equally poorly. One third earned less than $2000; and they were forced to spend an average of nearly 60% of their income for food! Farmer's and worker's incomes fluctuate together. (See chart.)

The present government farm support price policy fits into this picture backwards, the Outlook finds, whereas the Brannan Plan answers it almost exactly.

Under the present policy, the government supports the price of farm products by keeping them off the market, i.e. it buys "surpluses" from farmers and stores them, in order that the price of what the farmer does sell will be at or near "parity." Parity is "a level at which the particular commodity is considered fair to the farmer who produces it, in relation to the prices of the things he has to buy."

The government undertakes this support price program only for commodities which can be stored without spoiling, and this can be done for only 25% of what the farmer produces. The perishable crops therefore fluctuate wildly in price while the supported commodities stay high, and farmers who depend on perishable crops alone are not protected at all.

The program not by design, is somewhat analogous to the technique used by big industry during the depression: from 1929 to 1932, for instance, industrial production was cut almost 50% while the wholesale price of manufactured products dropped only 25%. Industry held its products off the market to maintain price.

"What we must aim for," comments Economic Outlook, "in an over-all farm program is protection against low annual farm income, not just protection on a few farm commodities alone. . . . There is also a contradiction in the expenditure of tremendous sums for the government purchase and storage of farm products to hold up the price, when at lower prices larger quantities might be absorbed by consumers."

THE BRANNAN Plan, in essence, would let the price of all farm products seek its "natural" market level, and then would reimburse the farmer by making up to him the difference between the average market price of the particular commodity and the fair parity price.

Since 80% of all farm production goes to feed people, the benefit to the average consumer would be immediate. Among the non-food products presently under price supports, cotton and tobacco are outstanding; a "natural" market price might result in lower consumer prices for cotton clothing, household linens, and tobacco.

Hand-in-hand with this would go a flexible system of crop production payments, to encourage production of the crops in greatest need. And, to insure the productive future of the nation's farm lands, farmers participating in the program would agree to follow minimum soil conservation practices.

"Farming is one of the last strongholds of small business in America," the Outlook says. "Over the last century, hundreds of thousands of small non-agricultural enterprises have been destroyed by larger and more powerful competitors. But family farming has survived."

Corporate farming is now a large part of the agricultural scene; by 1945, 2% of our farm enterprises were selling nearly 25% of the value of all farm products; but the family-sized farms vastly outnumber these large producers. It is the farming corporations which resist the Brannan Plan, since it would limit the amount payable to any farmer to the amount of earnings on an efficient family-sized farm.

"A national farm policy incorporating an income support program is equivalent to the concept of sustained incomes for city workers through minimum wages, collective bargaining contracts, and unemployment compensation," the Outlook summarizes.

UAW Local Begins New $250,000 Home

Ground has been broken at LaGrange, Ill., for a $250,000 home of Local 719 of the CIO Automobile Workers. The local represents 10,000 employes at the Electro-Motive Division of General Motors.

The buidling will have office space for the union, and such facilities as bowling alleys, an auditorium and a restaurant. These facilities will be available for public use.

Budget Bureau May Show U. S. Operating in Black

By NATHAN ROBERTSON

ONE OF THE biggest news stories of 1950 is being brewed in the Budget Bureau. It is a new kind of federal budget showing how the government's money is being spent. It may make the difference between a victory and a defeat for the Fair Deal program in Congress next year and in the elections next fall.

It has been obvious for some time that the biggest battle over the Fair Deal program in Congress next year would involve the prospective federal deficit of $5½ billions.

According to present bookkeeping methods that is how much more the government is spending this year than it is taking in from taxes. It will mean an increase in the big annual debt of another $5½ billions—or the biggest increase since the war ended.

Senator Byrd (D., Va.) and his conservative colleagues in Congress—including Senator Taft (R., O.)—have been planning to make that the issue in their attack on all Fair Deal programs in Congress. They have been planning to demand sharp curtailment of federal spending to balance the budget.

THIS WOULD mean curtailing many Fair Deal programs which are now being used to strenghten America internally and internationally. It would mean cutting expenditures for the army and navy, for the Marshall plan, and for arming Europe.

It also would mean sharp cuts in expenditures for western reclamation and power developments for hospitals and home construction, and even for social security and education, although the social security expenditures do not come directly out of the budget. It would, in short, wreck the welfare state.

Fair Dealers in Congress have been worried. Some of them were determined to fight any cuts in these programs and demand, instead, higher taxes. But they knew this was a difficult battle—and one they probably would lose—with the result that either they would have to make cuts in spending or face the charge of deficit financing in a period of comparative good times.

One of the most troubled was Senator Paul Douglas (D., Ill.), a Fair Dealer who as a professional economist knew that deficit spending in good times was dangerous and could not be defended. As a result, he had seemed to join forces with the Byrds in demanding economy—although the kind of economy he wanted was a far different kind. Douglas wanted to cut military expenditures and eliminate waste. Byrd and his crew aimed particularly at the social programs.

The new budget, which is being prepared at the Budget Bureau, may solve a lot of problems for Douglas and the other Fair Dealers in Congress. By showing how our money is being spent, it will differentiate between expenditures for running the government, including army and navy, and for long-range investments, such as roads, hospitals, schools, homes, and public works.

Some of these long range investments—such as those for reclamation projects—will be repaid to the treasury directly. Others will result in indirect repayment through increased earnings which bring in higher tax collections.

THERE HAS long been a demand among students of the federal budget for this kind of information. They have contended that corporations and individual citizens differentiate between going expenditures and long-range investments, and so should the government.

A man who makes $5000 a year, for instance, cannot afford to spend $10,000 a year for living expenses. But he can, and often does, buy a home costing $10,000 and borrows most of the money with the idea of paying it back over a long period of years, while he enjoys the new home. Or he may borrow $5000 from a bank to start a business from which he hopes to gain additional income.

Emil Rieve, Administrative chairman of the CIO's full employment committee, raised this issue recently when he asked one of the most pertinent questions ever submitted to a Congressional committee. Rieve, in testimony presented before Douglas' subcommittee of the Joint Congressional Economic Committee, asked:

"Why is it that when a private utility company floats a bond issue, and uses the funds thus obtained to build a new power plant or a series of transmission lines, it is entered on the books as an asset; yet, when a government agency, a TVA or the like, borrows money and does the same thing, it becomes an all-terrible public debt, with nothing good to be said for it?"

THE implications back of this question are tremendous. Our expenditures this year aggregate $43½ billions. But how much of this goes for current running expenses, and how much of it represents long-range investments, many of which will be self-liquidating either directly or indirectly, at least in part?

If we are using $10 billions this year for long-range improvements, or investments, then our current running expenses are only about $33½ billions. Then instead of shuddering at a deficit of more than $5 billions, we can do what a business corporation would do. We can figure we are taking in almost $5 billions more than our current running expenses, and call that a surplus, to be used to amortize our long-range investments.

Vol. XII WASHINGTON, D. C., DECEMBER 12, 1949 No. 49

REPRESENTATIVES of nearly 50 million workers scattered over a large portion of the world met in County Hall in London, England, and established an Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. Among those taking part in the conference were 10 representatives of the CIO. Members of the American delegation, including AFL representatives, appear in the first and second rows of seats at the left of the picture. Efforts To Unite GOP, State Righters Snowball

IS THE OLD Republican Party on the way out?

Will it be supplanted by a merger of the conservatives in its ranks and the Southern States Righters who have been kicked out of the Democratic Party?

These are questions which are increasingly agitating political circles.

The issue is being forced by conservatives and liberals alike, although the word "coalition" is being used instead of "new party."

Sen. Bricker (R. Ohio) was quoted in the Republican Herald-Tribune as saying:

"I wish we could get an alignment whereby we could give the people some issues to vote for as well as candidates.

"I think we should present the issues to the American people in the clear-cut terms of essential freedoms versus big government, big spending, high taxes and government control of everybody and everything.

"IF WE COULD line up the conservatives who believe in preserving the American system against the so-called liberals then we could really have an issue and the American people could make their decision with their eyes open. . . .

"I believe that the difference of opinion on civil rights could be resolved. After all, it is minor compared to the over-all fact that the liberties which we have enjoyed are gradually being eroded under the welfare state program.

"We are mortgaging the future of our children and grand-children, and unless the spending is cut down they just never will be able to pay it out."

Bricker also expounded his views to the Natl. Association of Manufacturers at its annual convention in New York City.

BUT THE MAN who perhaps did more than anybody else to crystallize the issue is James F. Byrnes, former Secretary of State, who last June in a speech in Virginia hurled the charge of "statism" at the Truman Administration.

The cry was taken up by the elder statesman of the Republican party, Ex-Pres. Herbert Hoover, and was used unsuccessfully by John Foster Dulles, who was defeated by Democrat Herbert Lehman for U. S. Senator from New York.

DULLES' defeat did not deter Byrnes from saying at the Southern Governors' Conference at Biloxi, Miss., a few weeks ago:

"We are threatened with the concentration in Washington of the powers of local government, including police powers, and with the imposition of creeping but ever advancing socialistic program . . .

"Too many people are thinking of security instead of opportunity. They seem more afraid of life than death."

(The conference re-elected as chairman Gov. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, the States Rights presidential candidate in 1948.)

Byrnes' theme was taken up and amplified by Raymond Moley in Newsweek and Arthur Krock in the New York Times. They recommended that the GOP drop its civil rights platform and join with the State Righters to combat the growth of the "welfare state" as exemplified by the Truman administration. However they stopped short of calling for a national party.

Realizing that Byrnes was the one who had started the ball rolling, Natl. Dir. Charles M. LaFollette of the liberal Americans for Democratic Action called on the former Secretary of State to take over leadership of the North-South conservative coalition.

"A great number of Republican Party leaders are in reality 'Northern men of Southern principles'; scratch a Dixiecrat and you will find a Northern or Eastern special interest," LaFollette wrote. "Dixiecrats fume at proposals for guaranteeing civil rights; many Northern Chambers of Commerce have an equal distaste for FEPC. I suggest that all of them ought to live in the same house together."

"As a Republican who quit his party to work for liberalism," LaFollette said he wrote Byrnes "as a Democrat who left his party to work for conservatism." He said he thought there was "real merit" to suggestions following Byrnes' recent Biloxi, Miss., speech that Byrnes "head up the conservative alignment in America" and give "shape and form" to the Congressional coalition.

ADA supports candidates of any non-totalitarian political group "if they agree with ADA's liberal principles," LaFollette said. "If, however, the candidates of your group agree with you and Mr. Hoover and Mr. Dulles that balancing the financial budget is more important than balancing the budget of human needs I am afraid they will have to get along without liberal and independent support."

The Washington office of the senior Senator from Ohio, Taft, who is on a campaign tour in the Buckeye State, said that he had made no comment on Bricker's proposal.

'See Your Congressman' Before '50, Cowan Says

CIO UNIONS throughout the country are being urged to "see their Congressman" before he comes back to Washington next month.

Nathan Cowan, CIO legislative director, urged all affiliates to "organize delegations as soon as possible to meet with Senators and Congressmen before their return to Washington, for a full presentation of our viewpoint on legislation that will be before Congress during the second session" of the 81st Congress.

Cowan's letter was mailed to international unions, state and city CIO councils, regional directors and legislative representatives throughout the nation.

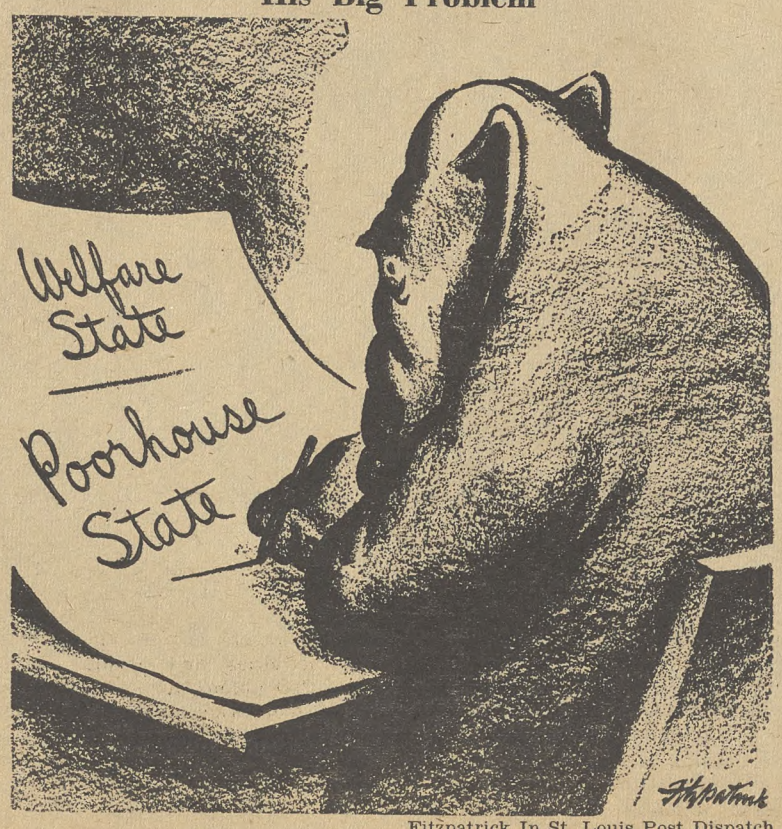
"Despite the mandate of the people in the 1948 elections," Cowan wrote, "the Fair Deal program was only partially realized" during the first session. "Chief stumbling block in the way of substantial enactment of the program was the vicious bi-partisan coalition of Dixiecrats and reactionary Northern Republicans.

"Before the second session of the present Congress convenes on Jan. 3, it is imperative that we re-emphasize to Congressmen and Senators with renewed vigor our insistence upon the passage of liberal legislation improving the general welfare of the nation . . .

"We will appreciate receiving reports from you at the conclusion of your conference, as to the attitudes of individual Senators and Congressmen on specific items of legislation."

Attached to the letter was a summary of CIO's position on Taft-Hartley, social security improvements, civil rights, rent control, housing, aid-to-education, labor extension service, displaced persons and improved coverage and enforcement provisions of the Wage-Hour Act.

His Big Problem



Fitzpatrick In St. Louis Post Dispatch

Last Major Holdout Signs Steel Contract

THE CIO Steelworkers have signed a contract with the Aluminum Co. of America, ending the last of the major walkouts in the metals industry.

The company employs 17,000 members of the union at nine plants throughout the country.

The benefits include non-contributory $100 pensions upon retirement for employes 65 years old, with 25 years of continuous service.

For those with 15 years' service minimum pensions ranging from $60 to $100 a month are assured.

The company also pays the full cost of the social insurance benefits, as it had been doing.

SOCIAL insurance benefits provide a $2000 life insurance policy while the employe works and a $1,500 paid-up policy on retirement; $26-a-week sick benefits for 26 weeks; $8.50 a day hospitalization for 31 days; $85 for special hospital services and pay for surgical care up to $225.

The steel union had earlier rejected a company proposal because, as Pres. Murray said, "it fell far short of the so-called Bethlehem formula and did not provide contractual pension guarantees."

The company had proposed and the AFL International Council of Aluminum Workers, which represents about 9000 workers, had accepted a pension clause which stated that if a worker reached the age of 65 he was entitled to a pension but that if he continued to work he would receive no more credit toward his pension.

The AFL members had not joined the strike.

THE COMPANY has informed the steel union that the terms of the CIO agreement would now be extended to the plants which are represented by the AFL union.

The new pact covers CIO workers at New Kensington, Pa., Bridgewater, Conn., Edgewater, N. J., Alcoa, Tenn., Mobile, Ala., Badin, N. C., Detroit, Mich., Richmond, Ind., and Bauxite, Ark.

Contract negotiations were proceeding last week at Schenectady, N. Y., between the union and the American Locomotive Co. The company has made a proposal which is being considered by the union.

Approximately 17,000 Steelworkers remained on strike in various parts of the country last week end.

Auto Union Asks Biggest NLRB Poll

THE BIGGEST election in the history of the NLRB will be held in 100 General Motors plants all over the country, on petition of the CIO Auto Workers, for a union shop election among 265,000 employes.

T. A. Johnstone, director of the UAW General Motors Department, has submitted petitions containing more than 136,000 signatures, far beyond the 30% required under Taft-Hartley.

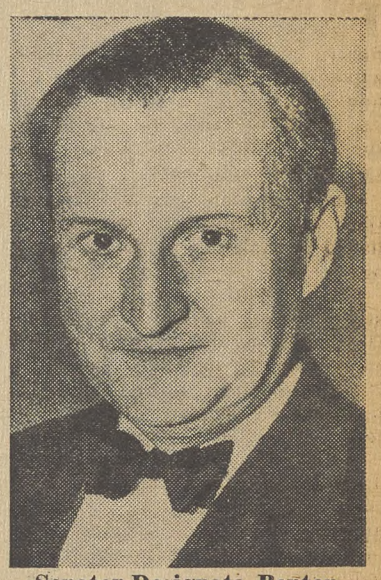
"This election," said Johnstone, "will provide the people of this country with another example of the sheer idiocy of the law. Not only must UAW-CIO spend an enormous amount of time and effort on this election, but the taxpayers will have to bear a heavy bill for NLRB's expenses in such a huge undertaking—all because some industrialists and members of Congress were so foolish as to believe that unions did not really represent the true sentiments of workers."

In a similar election last June, Ford workers voted 88,943 for union security, 1241 against.

Franco, Soviet Hit By ICFTU

Among its first actions, the new Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions lashed out at both the Communist Soviet Union and the fascist regime of Gen. Franco in Spain.

The international labor group asked its executive committee to probe repeated charges of forced labor in Russia and the satellite nations; and it voiced opposition to inclusion of Spain in the European Recovery Program or the Atlantic Union until democratic rights — including those of free unions—are restored in that nation.



Senator-Designate Benton

Naming of Benton Hailed by Truman

William Benton, Democrat, a former Assistant Secretary of State (1945-47), has been appointed by Gov. Chester Bowles as a U. S. Senator, to succeed Sen. Raymond E. Baldwin, who is resigning to become a justice of the State Supreme Court.

President Truman, in a message of congratulations, said "It is good news for all who believe in progressive government." Benton said, "I hope I will become known as a liberal legislator."

Benton and Bowles formed an advertising agency that became one of the biggest in the country. Benton retired from the firm in 1936.

He helped found the Committee for Economic Development, has been a member of U. S. delegations at six international conferences, and while an Assistant Secretary of State organized the nation's first peacetime international information program, including the "Voice of America" broadcasts.

Court Upholds Right Of Locals To Join IUE

TACTICS OF THE United Electrical Workers designed to stall and impede the growth of the newly chartered CIO Intl. Union of Electrical Workers through court injunctions, NLRB rulings and malicious propaganda started to back-fire last week.

On the extended battle fronts of the left-right wing fight UE was losing every encounter.

In New York State, Supreme Court Justice Morris Elder refused to grant an injunction to nine left-wing members of Local 450, which would have bound the membership and funds of the local to the UE.

Justice Elder declared in his decision that the membership had the right to dissaffiliate with its parent organization and in effect was free to join IUE-CIO.

"This is a most important judicial clarification of the right of UE members to liberate themselves from communist tyranny," Irving Abramson, CIO Eastern District director, declared.

Abramson, a member of the New York Bar since 1932, personally argued the IUE case before the high court.

THE CASE arose after the 4,200 workers in Local 450, at the Sperry Gyroscope Co. voted overwhelmingly to abandon UE and join IUE-CIO. A committee was set up at the time to safeguard the local's funds from a possible raid by UE adherents.

The injunction seekers charged that the committee was established in violation of the by-laws of the local constitution.

Justice Elder held that the constitution that bound the local to UE was based on the assumption that UE was an affiliate of the CIO. With the expulsion of UE, he said, the compact became automatically void.

"When the basic objective was destroyed by UE's expulsion from the CIO," Elder ruled, "continuance by Local 450 of membership in UE was a meaningless and valueless connection, and under the particular facts of the case Local 450 and its members were relieved of any further obligation to continue membership in UE."

LOCAL PRES. Joseph Fitzgerald described the injunction as an attempt at harassment of the entire membership "in its fight against Communist control and its fight to support the policies of the CIO against communist party interference in the affairs of the union."

James B. Carey, chairman of the IUE Administrative Committee, said: "It would be well for other justices throughout the country before whom some 60 other legal maneuvers by the defunct UE are pending, to study Justice Elder's decision."

"Justice Elder," he continued, "has given a wise answer to a number of questions that are in the public mind. The public wants to know if workers who engage in a patriotic effort to eliminate control of Communists in their affairs in an important defense industry are to be penalized by the law for their efforts. The public wants to know if workers can be denied the free choice of their bargaining agent through legalistic maneuvers."

On another front the IUE-CIO scored a major victory in its fight to have NLRB elections at major electrical manufacturing companies.

Late in the week NLRB Regional Dir. John A. Penollo ordered hearings to determine the collective bargaining agent at five General Motors sub-divisions.

The hearings will be before an NLRB officer in Dayton, Ohio, Dec. 19.

In the same order General Counsel Robert Denham directed that the separate petitions filed by IUE-CIO be consolidated for two GM plants in Dayton, Ohio; one each at Rochester, N. Y.; New Brunswick, N. J., and Warren, Ohio, covering a total of 27,000 employes.

Should the NLRB decide that the collective bargaining agent in the GM plants is in doubt, or dispute, and order elections to be held, it probably will set a precedent to be followed throughout the industry.

Meanwhile, top officers of the UE were questioned about Communist affiliations before the House Un-American Activities Committee.

Secy.-Treas. Julius Emspak and Organization Dir. James Matles fell back on the favorite CP line to avoid answering the questions put to them.

"I refuse to affirm or deny," they chanted.

They declared that the committee was trying to smear them; that it was all a plot of Phil Murray and Jim Carey; that the committee had no legal right to demand an answer. And so went the proceedings all through the day.

Frank Tavenner, chief counsel for the committee, read a long statement tracing the "line" followed by the UE News and the "Line" followed by the official organs of the Communist Party. He pointed out that they were strikingly similar.

At another juncture in the hearing Emspak was read a list of 50 persons, most of whom are field representatives of the UE. He refused to affirm or deny that he even knew the people.

Congressman Moulder (D. Mo.) questioned them as to whether they tried to conceal the fact that they are CP members from the union's rank-and-file.

Emspak replied, "I don't care and that's not the concern of the membership."

Murray's 'Uncle Phil' Dies At 84

CIO PRES. Murray lost one of his dearest relatives when death took his beloved "Uncle Phil" Dec. 4. He was a brother of President Murray's father.

"Uncle Phil" represented one of the CIO president's closest ties with the early days around the coal fields of Western Pennsylvania. He had spent all of his working life in the mines, first in Scotland and later in America.

A brilliant memory which 84 years of life failed to dim enabled "Uncle Phil" to recall almost forgotten details of the building of the United Mine Workers and the lore surrounding the coal diggers.

During prolonged and hectic periods of negotiations and struggles of the union movement which kept him occupied, President Murray enjoyed nothing more than spending a quiet Sunday afternoon in "Uncle Phil's" living room reminiscing about the coal camps they both knew so well and recalling amusing incidents involving the old-time miners they worked and lived with nearly a half-century ago.

President Murray inherited many characteristics from "Uncle Phil." His sharp wit, a keen sense of humor and a little burr in his speech made "Uncle Phil" a fascinating story-teller.

He was well known around the coal fields for his athletic prowess and was outstanding as a soccer player both in the old country and in America.

Canadian UE Group Suspended By CCL

Pres. A. R. Mosher of the Canadian Congress of Labour has announced that the Executive Council of the Congress has suspended District No. 5, United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America, for non-payment of per capita.

Mosher said the Council suspended the five top district officers of UE last July for statements reflecting upon the Ontario Federation of Labour, and that this action was approved by the Congress convention in Ottawa in October.

The Congress has affiliated the Canadian locals of the new CIO International Union of Electrical Workers.

Men's Clothing Firms To Pay $100 Pensions

AN AVERAGE $20 monthly increase in pension benefits has been negotiated in the men's and boy's clothing industry by the Clothing Manufacturers Association of the U. S. A. and the CIO Clothing Workers

The increase becomes effective in 1950.

It is estimated that clothing workers' pensions will approximate $100 a month from joint industry and government sources, at the age of 65.

An increase in social security pensions, which Congress is expected to approve at the next session, will increase pension payments to clothing workers further.

More than 150,000 clothing workers are covered by the agreement. The old-age retirement benefits, like the industry's social welfare program, are paid exclusively by employer contributions.

Both Pres. Raymond Reiss of the clothing manufacturers' association and ACW Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky hailed the pension increase.

NEGOTIATIONS are under way to extend pensions to 75,000 shirt and cotton garment workers, under Amalgamated jurisdiction, not now covered by this type of insurance. Both clothing workers, cotton garment workers and others employed within the Amalgamated jurisdiction enjoy employer-paid health, life, accident, maternity, hospitalization and surgical benefits.

In a joint statement Reiss, Potofsky and David Drechsler, general counsel for the employers' association, said:

"The clothing industry and the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America pioneered in old-age retirement benefits paid by industry, as it did in the broad field of social welfare, on an industry-wide basis. We initiated our social security in 1943, and retirement benefits in 1947.

"We have constantly sought, on an actuarial basis, to introduce new benefits and increase old ones. This we have been able to do, while observing sound insurance practices. We have been building up the necessary reserves so that payments, in every phase of our insurance program, can be made promptly and effectively.

"These reserves total over $60 millions, of which $35 million is earmarked for retirement benefits. We regard these as margins that guarantee the permanence of our funds."

The employers, therefore, will not have to increase payments to the fund.

"BOTH management and the union, in the field of social welfare and old-age retirement, have been guided by deep considerations for the average worker and his family," the statement said.

"Long ago we felt that the clothing worker had a stake in industry beyond what appeared in his pay envelope."

It was pointed out that the increased retirement pension will benefit all clothing workers already retired, as well as those who will reach 65 after next Jan. 1.

The number of clothing workers already retired under the industry-wide plan total, to date, 3575.

Retirement benefits in the clothing industry are met by employer contributions of 3% on their weekly payrolls, and the social welfare benefits by 2% on their weekly payrolls.

Charges Filed On Alameda Co. (Cal.) CIO

A NEW STEP in the campaign to clean out Communist Party influence in California CIO was taken with the filing of formal charges against the Alameda County CIO Council.

The charges, signed by Chairman Arnold F. Campo and Sec. James McKenna of the Alameda County Committee for National CIO and by 10 additional officers of CIO local unions in the East Bay, declare "the Alameda Council has perverted its officers to the point where the Council is nothing more than an agency for the dissemination of the Communist Party line."

The charges were sent to CIO Pres. Philip Murray, and they ask that the present Council's charter be revoked, "so that a new CIO union council may be organized by local unions supporting policies of CIO."

The action by the Alameda County Committee for National CIO, a group of pro-CIO unions which withdrew from the Council some months ago, parallels the filing of similar charges earlier by the San Francisco Committee for National CIO against the San Francisco CIO Council.

ON A STATEWIDE basis, similar charges are on file against the California State CIO Council, with a hearing scheduled on Dec. 19 in Washington by an investigating committee comprised of Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization; John Brophy, CIO director of industrial union councils; and John Moran, vice president of the Communications Workers of America and a member of the Natl. CIO Executive Board.

According to Tim Flynn, Northern California CIO regional director, action on the State Council charges will set a precedent for the cleanup of the Bay Area Councils.

FULL TEXT of their petition to CIO President Murray follows:

"The undersigned officers of the Alameda County Committee for National CIO and of CIO local unions in Alameda County charge the officers of the Alameda County Industrial Union Council with wholesale and deliberate violations of basic CIO policies, the CIO Constitution and Rules for Industrial Union Councils.

"We charge:

"1 The officers of the Council have interfered with the internal activities and affairs of various CIO unions, including the United Steelworkers of America, the United Automobile Workers of America, the Textile Workers Union of America, the Utility Workers Union of America and Communications Workers of America.

"2 The Alameda Council has perverted its offices to the point where the Council is nothing more than an agency for the dissemination of the Communist Party line. Instances have occurred where the Council has attempted to foist the Communist Party policies on candidates for public office and where the resources of the Council have been used to promote the so-called Progressive Party in violation of basic CIO policy.

"Therefore, we request that the present certificate of affiliation of the Alameda County Industrial Union Council be promptly revoked, so that a new CIO union council may be organized by local unions supporting policies of CIO."

'Champion' Of Americanism Is A Phony

Rep. J. Parnell Thomas, Who Showed No Mercy To Those He Persecuted, Throws Himself On Mercy Of Court

By ALLAN L. SWIM

NOT LONG AGO a florid-faced fat man from New Jersey entered a surprise technical plea of "nolo contendere" while on trial in a Washington, D. C., court.

This meant, in effect, that he was throwing himself on the mercy of the court and was no longer challenging the government's contention that he was a crook.

The amount of money involved in the case was comparatively small but the trial was big news because the defendant was Rep. J. Parnell Thomas, a Republican who posed as an authority on Americanism.

Thomas, former head of the House Un-American Activities Committee, was charged with receiving salary kick-backs from employes and with filing false financial information with the government.

THE CIO NEWS made numerous attacks on Rep. Thomas before he was indicted, and on Nov. 15, 1948, this paper said editorially:

"Rep. J. Parnell Thomas, who 'tried' many Americans in the headlines, is going to have his own trial in court.

"He will have full opportunity to exercise the constitutional rights which he has denied to others.

"He will have a chance to confront his accusers and have them cross-examined by an attorney of his own choosing.

"This is as it should be.

"However, if our judicial system operated along the lines of the House Un-American Activities Committee, which Thomas heads, he already would be behind bars."

Thomas—the man who served as a judge of good citizenship—didn't even choose to fight the good fight when he was brought to trial.

THE THOMAS AFFAIR makes me recall the case of another "great patriot"—former Rep. Andrew J. May of Kentucky.

May was whooping it up for America during the war and became so enthusiastic about prosecution of the conflict that he advocated the drafting of labor.

Later May was convicted on a charge of bribery in connection with war contracts and sentenced to eight months to two years in prison.

And in the same week that Thomas pleaded "nolo contendere" the U. S. Supreme Court upheld May's conviction.

It would be unfair, of course, to assume from these two cases that our Congress is loaded with crooks.

But it would be fair to wonder out loud about the real character and real intent of some of the lawmakers who go about beating their chests in the name of "good, old-fashioned American democracy."

Fitzpatrick in St. Louis Post Dispatch

Height of Un-Americanism

THE CHEST BEATING goes on all over Washington—and all over the country, too, for that matter.

Men who privately foster the trend toward monopoly make fiery speeches about preservation of free enterprise.

Those who scream in contempt against the "welfare state" for the common man frequently do everything they can to obtain government aid for Big Business.

Quite a number of the "pious souls" who pose as Christians and talk about "our great fight to spread democracy throughout the world" work secretly—and sometimes openly—for the retention of the poll tax and race discrimination, and for a return to sweat-shop conditions.

THOMAS AND MAY serve as symbols of the bad we find in government and serve again to remind us of the guillibility of the public.

For each May and Thomas, thank goodness, there are hundreds of honest, forthright public servants. Some of them speak up boldly for what they think is right—for what they think is good for all the people. Others just do their jobs quietly and efficiently—and the public hears little or nothing about them.

There are, of course, a number of conclusions one might draw from the Thomas and May cases—but, personally, I'd rather end this column by wondering about:

1. Do the editorial writers who once lauded Thomas feel a bit sheepish today?
2. Do those who supported May in his "draft labor" move feel that they foolishly followed a phony "champion?"
3. Can—and will—Congress do anything about the people persecuted by the Thomas Committee now that its former chairman has revealed himself to be a complete phony?

Don't Mean What They Say

Leaders of the American Medical Association spoke out frequently and fervently in Washington last week against "nationalization of medicine" and against "socialized medicine."

We—as surprising as it may sound—have considerable sympathy with what they said.

But we're strongly opposed to what they meant!

They talked about what might happen to the medical profession if it became government controlled—and they painted a frightening picture.

But what they actually meant was that they were going right ahead with their fight against national health insurance.

From our viewpoint, the AMA has a perfect right to oppose federal health insurance—although we think the organization is taking a narrow, short-sighted view in doing so.

But we can find no justification whatever for the completely phony propaganda campaign the AMA is waging in an effort to prevent enactment of the Truman health insurance program.

Nobody familiar with the situation can argue successfully that the nation's people have adequate health services.

The argument that the voluntary health insurance plans are adequate simply doesn't hold water.

A number of liberal organizations—including the CIO—believe that federal insurance can solve the problem.

The AMA challenges this view, which is OK. But the AMA has no moral right to paint a completely false picture of national health insurance. Its campaign is based on deceit and dishonesty.

St. Louis Paper Asks Why Pay May, Thomas Pensions

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch editorially attacked payment of pensions to former Rep. May and Rep. Thomas, declaring that the law was not intended to benefit "Criminals." The Editorial follows:

"Among the many good things which former Rep. Andrew Jackson May of Kentucky and Rep. J. Parnell Thomas of New Jersey have damaged by their frauds in public office is the system of pensions for members of Congress.

"Ordinary citizens may reasonably wonder why the tax money which they worked hard to earn should be applied to paying pensions of these men, who were faithless to their public trust in the pursuit of crooked money for themselves.

"Perhaps it will disillusion some Americans to see jailbirds paid the pensions which were originally intended to express the thanks of a grateful Government for long and faithful service and to encourage good men to seek public office.

"Nevertheless, May has already started drawing a pension of $280 a month for life, and Thomas will start drawing a pension of $290 a month eight years hence when he reaches 62.

"In both cases most of the money will come from the United States Treasury, for Thomas has paid in only $5000 to $6000 of his share and May $2716.

"It is unfortunate for public acceptance of the pension idea that May and Thomas are among its first beneficiaries. They cannot justly be deprived of their pensions, but the law could well be amended to prevent similar miscarriages of intention in the future.

"A member of Congress who has built up a considerable investment of his own funds in his pension account over the years should probably not be deprived of it for a single misstep at the end.

"But those who, like May and Thomas, have contributed a relative pittance of their own might reasonably be made to forfeit the payment from the public treasury, though getting their own investment back, if they prove grossly derelict. It is Congressmen whom the pension law is intended to benefit—not criminals."

Pamphlet Tells How To Avoid Mental Ills

The stress and strain of modern living is pretty hard on most Americans. Some public health authorities say that on any given day, half of the people in our hospitals are victims of mental diseases, and that every year 150,000 more mental cases are admitted.

Low income Americans can't afford psychiatric treatment even if there were enough psychiatrists to go around. Is there anything people can do themselves, if they are worried about their state of mind?

Yes, says a pamphlet just published by the Public Affairs Committee, Inc. It's called "Mental Health is a Family Affair," and it is written by Dr. Dallas Pratt and Jack Neher of the National Mental Health Foundation.

The pamphlet stresses preventive measures, such as better family relations and new techniques in social organization, instead of psychiatric treatment. It gives the causes of many personality problems in families, tells how some new ideas are helping families overcome these problems, and shows how these promote mental health.

They Scattered In Every Direction --Fast!

A SHELL THAT exploded in Europe during the last war was responsible for a CIO organizer escaping a bad beating in Virginia a few years later.

When the shell exploded, Harry (which isn't his correct name) lost a large part of his hearing ability.

And when Harry went into action in a Virginia woods late one afternoon a "vigilante committee" lost no time in leaving the scene.

Following is the story, as told by a man who formerly worked with Harry:

HARRY WAS sent into a Virginia town to launch a union organizing campaign at a small woodworking plant which employed only Negroes.

The town, he soon learned, was strongly anti-union, and race prejudice ran deep. He assessed the situation as best he could and quietly undertook the task of establishing a union.

Soon thereafter he learned that a "vigilante committee" had been formed to combat his campaign and that the group had openly threatened to break up any meeting he might hold.

He knew it would be necessary to avoid violence—so he decided to hold no meetings.

Through personal contact he talked with the employes one at a time or in small groups.

AFTER WEEKS of hard work and despite threats from the "vigilantes," Harry signed up a majority of the men at the plant.

Then he filed a petition for certification with the NLRB. A short time later the Board set a date for an election.

At this point the company began stepping up its anti-CIO campaign and Harry became a bit concerned about the effects of management propaganda.

As date of the election drew near he decided to take a chance and call one meeting for plant employes. He decided to hold it in a clearing in a wooded section some distance from town.

ABOUT 50 PERSONS showed up for the session, which started late in the afternoon—just before sundown.

Harry talked rapidly because he had a hunch trouble might be brewing. He explained the balloting system used by the NLRB and urged the men to vote for the CIO.

Then a man rushed up to Harry and told him the "vigilante committee" was on its way to break up the meeting.

At Harry's request, all of those present except two "disappeared" into the woods and headed home.

A FEW MINUTES later the "vigilantes" arrived in a car. Harry walked over to them and asked, "Looking for me?"

"Yes—and you know what we're here for!" one of them replied.

"I think I do—and I've got something for you," Harry said.

Harry reached in his pocket, took out his spare hearing aid, opened it with a clicking sound, removed one of the batteries and tossed it into the car.

The "vigilantes," thinking the organizer had thrown a bomb or hand grenade among them, scrambled out of the car and headed for the tall timber!

Harry and companions returned to town without harm. A.L.S.

Barkley Flays 'Tree-Sitters, Hitching Post Devotees'

In a speech before the Democratic Nalt. Committee dinner at New York City, Vice Pres. Alben W. Barkley challenged the Republicans—who have been loud in their denunciation of Truman's "welfare state"—to specify what part of the Democratic program they would repeal.

The speech was significant because the meeting launched the Democratic Senatorial and Congressional campaigns of 1950. Excerpts from the speech follow:

"The Democratic Party has always recognized, and now more than ever recognizes, that the people of this nation have the capacity and the will to fashion and control their own government.

"The Democratic Party under its leadership from Jefferson to Truman has sought to implement the will of the American people into their government and we are proud of the accomplishments of a political organization dedicated to the realization of the rights and ambitions of the American people in their desire for life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

"We are proud of the fact that under Democratic leadership more progressive and far-reaching legislation in behalf of the American people has been enacted by the Congress than under the leadership of any other political organization in the history of the nation.

"So wise and well-established has this program been, that even when our political opponents have attained temporary power in control of the government, they have not dared openly to nullify or repeal it, though they have sometimes sought its subversion by indirection.

"We are now told by those who delight to occupy the position of tree-sitters and hitching post devotees that this program is leading us down the road to the so-called 'welfare state.' We are being told that we are now on the last mile toward collectivism in America. We might with perfect propriety inquire who set us on the first mile toward this collectivism which is a figment of the imagination.

"Wherein lies the difference between the establishment of a Farm Board and the expenditure of 1500 million, during the last Republican administration of this nation, and the establishment of a long-term agricultural program which lifted the farmers of the nation out of the ditch of despondency and placed their feet upon the firm foundation of prosperity?

"The difference lies in the fact that one succeeded, while the other failed. We are now being told by those who regard every tree frog as a roaring lion and every innocent angleworm as a spreading adder that we are on the verge of entering the 'welfare state' and that it and so called 'statism' are lurking around the corner to absorb the liberties and devour the substance of the people.

"These prophets of pessimism have not told the American people what part of the Democratic program is to be repealed. They have not told the American people to what extent we are to reverse the policies of this government in order to get back to the 'laissez-faire' days of antiquity.

"They have not told us how far back we must go in order to recognize Uncle Sam as a complacent old gentleman sitting astride the dome of the Capitol drawing his salary in blissful self-satisfaction and doing nothing.

"They have not told us where 'individualism' ceases and 'statism' begins in the cooperation between the federal government and the states in highway construction, in flood control, in soil conservation, in rural electrification, in the irrigation and reclamation of arid lands, in the preservation of the fertility and productivity of our soil.

"They have not told us where 'individualism' ceases and 'statism' begins in the attempt to preserve the health of the American people or in helping them to provide adequate houses in which to rear their children, free from disease and criminal influences.

"They have not told us where 'individualism' ceases and 'statism' begins in providing adequate cooperation between the federal government and the states and counties and the farmers themselves in providing agricultural training, crop supports, crop insurance and other stabilizing policies and programs in behalf of American agriculture.

"They have not told us where 'individualism' ceases and 'statism' begins in the enactment of legislation providing for collective bargaining between employers and employes, and the protection of labor against injustice, or honest business against those who would seek, by monopolistic practices, to destroy honest business.

"The American people have a right to know the extent to which the policies, which have strengthened us in peace and war during the last two decades, are to be nullified and reversed by those who now criticize them, but so far lack the courage to specify the extent of their prospective devastation, if they secure control of the government."

'Statism' Deflated

CIO Women's Auxiliaries All Out for Better Living

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

UNLESS YOU happen to live there, you may never have heard of the towns in Minnesota named Hopkins, or Keewater, or Ely, or Albert Lea—though you may have heard of Red Wing, Minn., for that is where the United States' new ambassador to Denmark, Mrs. Eugenia Anderson, comes from.

May be you haven't heard of Borger, Tex., or Newton, Iowa, or Swisshome, Ore., or Susanville, Calif., either. So what? Well, these are a few of the towns scattered over the country where CIO members and their families live and work—and where the CIO's Congress of Women's Auxiliaries is carrying on activities.

Of course it is in big industrial centers such as Detroit, Pittsburgh, Chicago and Akron that the large part of the CIO's members and their families live, but the small places taken together run into big numbers, too, and it is in these places that the organized activities of the womenfolk of CIO members seem to thrive particularly well.

BUT MAYBE you don't know much, if anything at all, about the CIO's Congress of Women's Auxiliaries and what they do, be it in big or little communities.

This isn't strange, for the CIO Women's Auxiliaries are modest and even a bit shy and don't make much fanfare about their activities. They go quietly about their business, which is to support and interpret the CIO's program to the wives of CIO members and to other groups in the communities where they live.

The CWA has around 7,000 members at present and is growing rapidly. In the past six months 14 new local auxiliaries affiliated with the national organization. The largest groups are in Michigan and Ohio and are auxiliaries of the Auto and Steelworkers unions. The Oil Workers auxiliaries in the Southwest, West and East also come close to the top in number of members.

The CWA's president is Mrs. Lillian Sherwood of Grand Rapids, Mich., wife of David R. Sherwood, International representative of the CIO Auto Workers since 1940. Sherwood is a member of Nash-Kelvinator Local 206, which he helped organize in 1936.

Mrs. Sherwood was elected president of the CWA at the convention held in Cleveland last month concurrently with the National CIO convention. She succeeded Mrs. Faye Stephenson, who did not run for re-election. Shortly after her husband joined Local 206, Mrs. Sherwood became active in auxiliary work.

MR. LILLIAN SHERWOOD

She was a charter member of an auxiliary of the UAW which disbanded during the war because the members started to work in factories and joined the UAW locals where they worked, along with the men. She is now a member of the Kent County (Mich.) CIO Council Auxiliary, which she helped organize in 1945.

THE CWA's secretary-treasurer is Mrs. Bertha Perrin, of Warren, Ohio. She was first elected at the 1948 convention held in Waterloo, Iowa, and was re-elected at the Cleveland convention in November. She has been president of the Women's Council of the Ohio CIO since it was organized in 1939.

"I came into the CIO in the Little Steel Strike of 1937, in Warren, Ohio," Mrs. Perrin says, "taking charge of the kitchen and commissary for 18 months. I organized our first CIO auxiliary while we were on strike."

Mrs. Perrin's husband has worked for Republic Steel for 26 years, and was a committeeman of his local for a number of years. Like his wife, Perrin is an ardent CIO booster.

CWA executive board members, elected at the Cleveland convention are: Dolly Wilson, Lansing, Mich.; Irma Treharne, Youngstown, Ohio; Charlotte Sillers, Washington, D. C., and Wilma Maroda, Pittsburgh, Pa.

The CWA, which was set up in Detroit in November 1941, is patterned after its parent organization, the CIO. It holds annual conventions, usually at the same time as the CIO, to which delegates are sent from national and local auxiliaries, and from state and city women's councils.

The convention elects national officers and draws up a program for the coming year. Delegates also attend some of the sessions of the regular CIO convention, and their newly elected officers are introduced to the CIO delegates from the platform.

MEMBERSHIP in the local auxiliaries is open to wives and other women relatives of CIO members. A CWA organization pamphlet addressed to "Mrs. CIO Housewife" reveals the outstanding aims of the organization, in a series of questions:

"Do you want to keep in step with your husband? Do you want a better life for yourself and your family? Do you want your husband to have greater job security and high wages?

"Do you want to assure your children a good education? Do you want a good home at a price or a rent you can afford? Do you want your family to have wholesome food, proper medical care and clothing? Do you want an assured, adequate income in illness and old age?"

MRS. BERTHA PERRIN

By organizing CIO members' wives, the CWA hopes to help the unions their husbands belong to get these things. The means they use to do it are many, but a large part of their work has to do with political activity.

"We must prepare now for the crucial elections of 1950," is one of their present slogans. Getting people out to register and vote, explaining important political issues to their members and neighbors, taking an active part in community welfare and legislative activities are a few of the things auxiliaries do.

THE CURRENT copy of the CWA Newsletter issued by the National organization from its headquarters at 2123 Market St., Warren, Ohio, gave an idea of the variety of CWA activities:

In Borger, Tex., the CIO Women's Auxiliary gave a "pie supper" to help furnish their kitchen.

In Minnesota, the State Auxiliary Council reported renewed social and political activities in Albert Lea, Red Wing, Keewater and other towns in the state.

In Ely, Minn., CIO women served coffee and doughnuts to strikers on the picketline.

In Ohio, the Mahoning Council also reports serving coffee, doughnuts and apples to pickets.

In Lansing, Mich., a group which meets in the various members homes, ran a raffle to raise money to send a member to a union conference.

In Newton, Iowa, the auxiliary gave cigarettes and candy to wounded veterans at the hospital.

In Grand Rapids, Mich., a group of CIO women engaged actively in PAC, found that two-fifths of the women they interviewed were not registered.

'For CIO Program'

"It is our sincere belief and wish that all our auxiliaries in the coming year can improve in numbers, continue the good work they are doing and strive to make our women's organizations outstanding in the parent body," stated the current CWA Newsletter.

"We can do this if we continue our efforts in the future as we have in the past. May you all continue in the good work, always giving thanks to a Higher Being who makes all good things possible on this earth.

"We all together are building a new and great CIO of tomorrow. We must stand together in unity and fight for the program of the CIO."

New Loyalty Hearing Board Set Up For Defense Workers

LABOR and management groups often complained in the past about the "military arbitrarinees" employed in the handling of disputed cases involving the loyalty of industrial workers and contractors employed in secret defense production.

Now the Defense Dept. has come up with something designed to avoid such complaints in the future. It's the Industrial Employment Review Board, established after consultation of Defense officials with representatives of labor and management.

Defense officials say the board will speed up the handling of disputed cases and give the accused real opportunity to present a defense of accusations made against him.

The charter of the board provides:

- The accused will be provided with a specific statement of charges "insofar as consideration of security permits."
- The accused will have an opportunity to be heard in person, to be represented by counsel (union representatives or otherwise) and to cross-examine government witnesses.

"IT'S RIGHT HERE—on the inside of the inside coat pocket," says Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers, who's referring to the label of his union. The picture above was taken as Potofsky launched the $500,000 Amalgamated Union Label Campaign. The union is using magazine and newspaper advertising and radio and television programs to popularize clothing made by ACW.

Md.-D. C. Council Asks Increase In State Income Tax Exemptions

THE MARYLAND and District of Columbia Industrial Union Council convention at Hagerstown, Md., adopted a resolution instructing council officers to strive for increases in state income tax exemptions. The council requested that the exemptions be boosted from $1,000 to $1,500 for individuals; $2,000 to $3,000 for family heads and $400 to $800 for each dependant.

The group also passed resolutions regarding changes in the workman's compensation laws which would provide for:

1) A labor representative on the Compensation Commission.
2) An amendment to compel employers to carry insurance with the state rather than with individual companies.
3) Increase weekly benefits.

The delegates urged passage of an unemployment compensation law which would provide for labor representation on the administration board, increase the weekly benefits and liberalize existing laws to meet the critical unemployment situation in Maryland by extending payments from 26 weeks to one year.

Also passed was a motion urging that welfare laws be amended to enable employable persons who are unemployed to receive aid when their compensation is exhausted.

It was stressed that labor should have representatives on all boards, committees and commissions whose functions affect the welfare of working men and women.

Plans were laid for an intensified PAC drive among CIO members in Maryland and the District.

The group indorsed the entire CIO program and voted to make its constitution conform with recent changes in the constitution of National CIO and rules for industrial union councils.

The following officers and executive board members were elected: Pres. Frank Bender, Secy-Treas. Charles Della, Vice Presidents Harry Castle, Nettie Mahafey, Joseph Craig, James Gildea, and Audrey Smid.

CIO, AFL Are Represented On Free Trade Unions Board

ON DEC. 7—eighth anniversary of Pearl Harbor—a new democratic international labor organization came into being in London, England.

Supported by union organizations in close to 40 nations, with a membership of nearly 50 million workers, the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions was set up with a constitution and program to fight for democratic rights and advancement for workers in every section of the globe.

The new organization, committed to a strong anti-Communist philosophy, is expected to win quickly leadership of labor in world affairs away from the now Communist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions.

CIO was represented at the 10-day meeting in London by a 10-man delegation. Pres. Philip Murray, who was unable to attend the conference, was elected a member of the 20-man executive committee.

Murray was also elected one of the ICFTU's seven vice presidents, as well as a member of its seven-man emergency committee.

Four CIO officials were elected to the new organization's General Council. They are: Pres. Walter Reuther of the United Auto Workers; CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood; Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the United Steelworkers, and Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers Union.

Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey and Elmer Cope, CIO's European representative, were named as substitutes for Murray on the committee.

AFL Pres. William Green was also elected to the executive group, with Secy.-Treas. George Meany and Irving Brown. AFL representative in Europe, similarly named as his substitutes.

J. H. OLDENBROEK, secretary of the Intl. Transport Federation, was elected permanent Secretary-General of the ICFTU without opposition. He will be the organization's top full-time official. Paul Finet of Belgium, who presided over the London conference, was elected president.

Headquarters of the ICFTU will be located in Brussels, Belgium.

Press dispatches from London indicated that the British Trades Union Congress and Oldenbroek had desired the British capital as the headquarters site, both American groups and many of the European unions favored Brussels.

ELECTED: J. H. Oldenbroek of the Netherlands, who was elected Secretary-General of the new Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Other members of the executive committee, in addition to Murray and Green, are: Canada—Pat Conroy, Canadian Congress of Labor, and Percy Bengough, Canadian Trades & Labor Congress; France—Leon Jouhaux; Denmark—Eller Jensen; Belgium—Paul Finet; Germany (western zones)—H. Bockler; Italy—Giulio Pastore; Great Britain—Arthur Deakin and Vincent Tewson; Chile—Bernando Ibanez; Peru—Francisco Aguirre; West Indies—R. Bradshaw; Africa—Marcus Grant; Japan—E. Kato; India—Deven Sen; Lebanon—K. Heydayat.

ONLY TWO large union organizations outside the Communist-controlled section of the world are not affiliating with the new federation. They are the confederations of labor in France and Italy, both of which are Communist-led.

Two of the three largest Catholic union groups in Europe voted to affiliate with the new organization. The French Confederation of Christian Unions abstained from voting for the new constitution, which would have indicated affiliation, but the Christian union groups in Italy and Belgium both voted adherence.

Admittance of the Catholic union groups had been an issue early in the convention, but was at least partially cleared up by an American-sponsored compromise. That formula provided for acceptance of those unions in the new organization on condition that they sever connections with their own European federation within two years.

THE organizational charter calls on world labor to coordinate the defense of free trade unions against any campaign "aiming at their destruction or at the restriction of their rights"—or at the subjection by "totalitarian or other anti-labor forces."

CIO's delegation to the London meeting included Pres. Walter Reuther of the Auto Workers; CIO Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood; Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the United Steelworkers; Vice-Pres. Herbert Payne of the Textile Workers Union; Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers Union; Michael Ross, CIO director of international affairs; Elmer Cope, CIO European representative; Isadore Katz, counsel of the textile union; and Guy Nunn of the UAW-CIO.

PAUL FINET of the Belgian Federation Generale (right) who served as president of the London conference was elected president of the Intl. Conference of Free Trade Unions. He is shown talking with Vincent Tewson, general secretary of the powerful British Trades Union Congress, who, with Arthur Deakin, was elected to represent British unions on the executive committee of the ICFTU.

PRES. WALTER REUTHER of the United Auto Workers (right) served as chairman of the CIO delegation. He is shown clasping hands with Pres. William Green of the AFL (left) and Arthur Deakin, of the executive council of the British Trades Union Congress.

TWO CIO DELEGATES—Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers Union (left) and Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers (center)—are talking with H. A. Middleton of the British Honduras General Workers Union.

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD (right), CIO vice president and director of organization, who was born in Yorkshire, England, is pictured chatting with Fred Dowling, Canadian delegate to the London conference.

Story The Press Ignored:

Utility Holding Breakup Benefited Stockholders

By NATHAN ROBERTSON

THE DAILY newspapers have almost completely ignored one of the biggest stories that has broken in Washington recently—the drafting of legislation to break up the giant monopolies into smaller companies.

It also has ignored another big story—that the experience of the Securities and Exchange Commission in dissolving the huge public utility holding companies has resulted in a big break for the stockholders in those companies. Their securities are worth much more today than they were 14 years ago when the law was passed ordering them broken up.

There is a close connection between these two stories which the daily newspapers have played down. Both stories were broken by the Celler Committee of the House, which has been investigating monopolies. And the new legislation—for breaking up the big industrial giants—is a direct copy of the legislation enacted by Congress 14 years ago which has been so successfully operated.

In other words, the Celler Committee now has legislation—based on 10 years of successful government experience—for breaking up big monopolies into smaller companies for the good of the country and even for the benefit of the stockholders in these companies.

THIS IS RATHER big news, even to a hardened old Washington correspondent. But it didn't get into the newspapers—at least the newspapers most of us read. It was important enough to be thoroughly covered by the financial and trade papers that businessmen read. They know all about it. But the general public—which would benefit most if the legislation were enacted—has not been told about it.

The most extraordinary thing about this is that the newspapermen were present when the story broke. But they preferred to write their stories not about this bill—but about the testimony of other witnesses, the president of one of the big insurance companies, who denied, of course, that there was any danger in big business and warned the Federal government to keep its hands off the insurance companies.

There wasn't any real news in this—big businessmen and insurance men had been saying the same thing for days. But the reporters knew what their parents preferred—and they wrote their stories that way.

Just as one example of how the press handled the story—which broke before the Celler Committee Dec. 1—is typical. The Washington Post's lead said:

"President Thomas I. Parkinson of the Equitable Life Assurance Co., urged the Federal Government yesterday to keep hands off the insurance business."

The Post story then went into detailed coverage of what Parkinson had said, and even reviewed what Charles E. Wilson, president of General Electric, had said along the same line the day before. But it did not mention the new legislation until the last paragraph of a column-long story. It did not disclose that the proposal was based on the successful experience of the SEC. The average newspaper reader—even if he got down that far—got no idea of the story or of its significance.

THE Washington Times-Herald, a Chicago Tribune puppet, reported that Rep. Wilson (D., Tex.) had announced he would reintroduce legislation to make labor unions subject to the anti-trust laws. But the T-H found no room for any mention of the bold new suggestion for curbing industrial monopolies.

Whether or not the newspapers get excited about the new legislation, it is safe to predict that the proposal will be the subject of serious debate in the coming days and years. It was carefully prepared by a brilliant young professor of economics from Michigan State College—Dr. Walter Adams—at the request of Chairman Celler (D., N.Y.).

It provides a practical way to do something many liberals long ago abandoned hope of ever being able to do—unscramble the big industrial concentrations of power that have been built up in this country.

Only a few days earlier the SEC had submitted a report showing how successful the Public Utilities Holding Company Act had been in breaking up gigantic aggregations of power. The report showed that instead of hurting investors in these companies, they had benefited from tremendously increased market values on their securities, and so had the public.

In other words, the propaganda put out by the companies when Congress was battling over the legislation—that it was a "death sentence" for the companies—was pure bunk. This experience suggests that if Congress enacted Adams' bill stockholders of big industrial companies like GE and GM and DuPont would likewise benefit, as well as the country generally.

ADAMS' BILL was accompanied by a report from Howard J. Trienens, who teaches anti-trust law at Northwestern University, that the Public Utility Holding Company Act was legally and practically the model for use in breaking up big companies under the anti-trust laws. He noted that the Utility Act was itself modeled on the procedure followed by the Supreme Court in breaking up the Tobacco trust in 1911. So altogether the procedure has been used by the government for almost 40 years.

Trienens testified that "the accomplishments of the SEC in administering the Utility Act call for a reexamination of the assumption that the task of breaking up industrial combinations is so 'inherently difficult' that it should be discarded as impracticable." He said the Supreme Court decisions on that law also leave "little doubt of the validity of any legislation designed to provide more effective enforcement of the Sherman Act dissolution policy."

Noting that by 1948 the Utility holding companies had divested themselves of $11 million dollars worth of subsidiaries, Trienens said the experience of the SEC "furnished many useful precedents that should be considered in dealing with analagous problems arising under the anti-trust acts."

Thus, the Celler Committee, after much fumbling of the ball, has finally built a good case for trying to break up the big industrial empires. But the man on the street will never know about it if he depends for news only on his daily newspaper.

A third big monopoly story which has been ignored by much of the daily press was a report by Chairman O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.) of the Congressional Economic Committee, showing that insurance companies are "cornering" most of the nation's risk capital—leaving small business out in the cold. O'Mahoney showed that the life companies have increased their holding of people's savings from about $14 billion in 1930 to $48 billion in 1948.

The insurance companies, O'Mahoney reported, now have as much of the nation's savings as are invested in government bonds. He warned that this was evidence of the formation of a "collectivist" economy in this country not controlled democratically by the voters—but by self-perpetuating managers of business who are responsible to no one but themselves.

CWA Charges Unfair Practices To Bell

THE CIO Communications Workers has instructed its 34 divisions holding contracts with the Bell System to file unfair labor practice charges with the Nat'l. Labor Relations Board against the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. and its subsidiaries.

The union says the telephone system violated the Taft-Hartley act last month when it unilaterally upped pensions, but to a level below union demands, while the union was in negotiations with several companies.

The CWA bargains with the Bell system companies, including AT&T, the ruling company, on an industrial basis, Union Pres. Joseph A. Beirne pointed out while making the union complaints public.

He said that after various company spokesmen told the union it would be impossible to better the system's pension plan now, union negotiators all over the land were suddenly informed that pensions paid would be increased. Moreover, he said, drafts of the new pension program, identical to the last comma, suddenly appeared as if by magic all over the nation, and the new plan was in operation five days before the union was informed.

Beirne said it was clear that AT&T, not the individual subsidiary companies, controls negotiations. He said he hoped the NLRB would either order AT&T to stay out of subsidiary negotiations entirely or come into them openly. He asserted that the union would fight the issue to the Supreme Court if necessary.

BEIRNE SAID nobody would refuse the pension increases granted by the Bell system. But he declared that "if a company has the right to improve pension provisions unilaterally, it also has the right to decrease those provisions. If it can capriciously modify pension benefits up or down, it can do the same with wages, hours of work or other conditions of employment without consideration of the union representing the employes.

"If allowed to go unchecked, such actions would mean the complete destruction of collective bargaining in America."

In modifying the present plan, the Bell system increased the minimum pensions for workers retiring at 65 from $50 a month, less one half social security payments, to $100 a month less all social security payments. Employes retiring before age 65 will get a minimum of $75. Longevity requirement is 20 years. Beirne said there were ways to induce a man to retire before he was due a full pension.

Bell workers, who have had pensions since 1913, feel that now is the time for them to take the lead again in pensions, Beirne declared, since in the past they have accepted low wages because of the pensions. Accordingly, they are demanding a minimum of $100 a month with no deductions at all for social security payments. The union represents 306,000 workers in the Bell System.

One-Day Institute On Politics Dec. 17

"Politics and Politicking" by organized labor will be analyzed by leading union officers, government officials and political experts at a one-day institute sponsored by the Labor Education Division of Roosevelt College in Chicago, Dec. 17.

The Institute will discuss the need for effective political action by labor, its influence on legislation, effect on voters, how labor is organizing for political action in 1950, and how our lawmakers make up their minds on issues affecting labor.

CIO speakers will include John Edelman, Textile Workers legislative representative and Tilford Dudley, assistant PAC director.

Reports To SEC Proposed To Curb Monopoly Abuses

THE HOUSE Monopoly Investigating Committee closed its hearings for the year Dec. 1, after receiving the draft of far-reaching legislation modeled after the Public Utility Holding Company Act to break up big and monopolistic industries.

The legislative draft was presented by Dr. Walter Adams, assistant professor of economics, Michigan State College. It was the first specific program spelled out in detail to the committee for expanding and strengthening the present anti-trust laws.

Adams proposed that all corporations which control 10% or more of the production of any product, or with assets in excess of $25 millions, be required to file with the Securities & Exchange Commission detailed reports on their corporate structure and operations.

The Commission would study each industry separately to determine whether it needed to be broken up into smaller units to provide greater public service, more efficiency, and better competition.

ADAMS, explaining that his legislation closely followed the procedure for breaking up public utility holding companies under existing legislation, said "it is not a death sentence for Big Business as such" but "is directed instead against the abuses of size."

"To accomplish its objective of maintaining or establishing effective competition," Adams told the committee, "the bill sets up several general—yet very concrete—standards which are to be applied in a selective, case-by-case approach by a competent administrative authority—subject at all times to judicial review."

Dr. Walter Adams
Would Tame Trusts

The Michigan State professor said his legislation was based on the belief previously presented to the committee that "if the size and power of many of our industrial giants remains unchecked, if we continue to allow the Big Three's and Big Four's to dominate many of our important industries, our system of free competitive enterprise stands in danger of destruction."

ADAMS called the provision for registration with the SEC "one of the most crucial provisions of the bill" because it would "at least provide us with data necessary to ascertain the relation between size of firm and efficiency of operation in different industries."

Except for Chairman Celler (D, N. Y.), members of the committee greeted Adam's proposal with great coolness. Rep. Keating (R, N. Y.) said it would result in "government control of all industry." And Rep. Wilson (D, Tex.) said it would make the SEC both prosecutor and judge. But Celler told the witness the proposal would be studied by the committee.

The constitutionality and workability of Adams' proposal was attested by Howard J. Trienens, instructor of law at Northwestern University. He said the public utility holding company law had shown it was "feasible to break down the size of industrial giants."

AMA Levies $25 Annual Dues To Fight Health Insurance Bill

WATCH FOR a renewed tirade against national health insurance.

You'll probably be hearing and reading frenzied appeals in ever-increasing number from now on, urging you to help save the nation from being engulfed by Socialism or Communism via the road of "bureaucratic medicine." Here's why.

The American Medical Association has just levied a $25 annual dues assessment on its 145,000 doctor-members to be used mostly to fight the health insurance legislation now pending in Congress. With $3,625,000 a year coming in, the AMA is prepared to fight in a big way.

The proposal as recommended by the board of trustees was approved last week by the AMA's policy-making body, the House of Delegates, at its semi-annual clinical meetings in Washington.

THIS IS THE first time the AMA has ever levied dues on its members. The $25 assessment of last year which caused such a storm of controversy was supposed to be only a special "voluntary" assessment, although medical societies and doctors opposed to the AMA's method of fighting national health legislation who refused to pay it claimed pressure was brought on them to force payment.

Now by amending its constitution to add the $25 annual dues assessment, the AMA makes its payment compulsory upon threat of expulsion from membership.

Members belong to the AMA through their membership in state and county medical societies. The AMA has been supported by the $12 annual subscription to its "Journal" and the proceeds from advertising in the magazine which yield a lush income.

An interesting side light of the sessions was the formal announcement of the resignation of Dr. Morris Fishbein, editor of the AMA's Journal and the association's spokesman for 37 years. AMA's board of trustees reported that arrangements had been made "for adequate life-time remuneration for Dr. Fishbein."

The report failed to mention just what this remuneration was, but a New York Times reporter said it had been learned from high AMA authority that he "will receive $15,000 a year for life and a $50,000 insurance policy, in addition to a regular pension to which all long-time staff members of the AMA are entitled."

Two Sides To Story

One of the star speakers for the American Medical Association this month is a British physician, Dr. Eric Lyburn, who is ballyhooed as having left his native country because he couldn't stand the British Health Program. AMA neglects to tell Dr. Lyburn's audiences that at the time he left Britain he was facing prosecution on charges of running unethical ads about his clinic.

DR. AUSTIN Smith succeeds Dr. Fishbein as editor of the AMA's Journal and nine technical journals. Dr. Richard J. Plunkett of the AMA Journal medical staff is managing editor of the nine specialty journals. The popular magazine "Hygeia" will be called "Today's Health" beginning with the March issue.

AMA leaders at the House of Delegates' sessions were very cocky about their chances of defeating the national health insurance bill. Dr. Ernest E. Irons, AMA president, told the delegates that "the nation is being led down the road to socialism," and that the AMA must "prepare for a renewed assault on medicine and free enterprise."

Dr. Elmer Henderson, chairman of the "education" committee set up to fight health insurance, said a decisive struggle lies ahead to determine not only the fate of medicine "but whether socialism is to engulf all America."

He warned that the fight would be won or lost in next session of Congress or in the 1950 congressional elections, and urged a "grass roots" drive against the health bill.

Reporting on the funds spent this year in the anti-health insurance fight, Henderson told the doctors that about 80% of the membership came across with the $25 assessment, contributing some $2¼ millions in all. The report stated that a million dollars was spent for campaign literature, with 55 million pieces distributed; about $139,400 for organization work, and $209,000 for operational expenses.

Dr. Louis Bauer, chairman of the board of trustees, spoke in opposition to the bill introduced by Sen. Pepper (D., Fla.), to aid medical education, which passed the Senate but struck a snag in the House.

One of Dr. Bauer's objections concerned a provision for grants totalling $5 million for building medical school facilities. The board's report called this "potentially dangerous to academic freedom of medical schools."

Longshore Halls Ruled Illegal

DESPITE THE FACT that both employers and the CIO Longshoremen on the parific coast are in favor of continued operation of hiring halls, an NLRB examiner has ruled that the halls violate Taft-Hartley.

Irving Rogosin, the trial examiner, held that while the hiring hall system in itself was not in conflict with the law, the halls were being managed in such a way as to discriminate against longshoremen who were not members of the CIO union.

It is expected that the union will carry the fight against the ruling to the NLRB and—if necessary to the Supreme Court. That court will likely be asked to rule on the same issue in another maritime dispute before then—in the case of CIO Maritime Union and the hiring halls operated by it on the Great Lakes. Last spring an NLRB trial examiner held that the NMU hiring halls were illegal.

His decision was sustained by the board and on last July 1, the Second Circuit Court of Appeals upheld the board. The NMU has until Dec. 21 to file a writ of certiorari for review of the case by the Supreme Court.

Despite court tests, labor is looking for Congressional action to legalize hiring halls. A Senate subcommittee on labor-management relations is making a study so that the facts may be presented to Congress as soon as possible.

Buckmaster Urges Better Pension System

Hudson Bay Eskimos strangled their old people and the Hottentots used to leave their "worn out" citizens in the desert to die.

Civilization presumably has advanced much since those days, but the U. S., as a nation today, does only a little more than some of the old tribes toward taking care of those who have grown old.

That's what Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the CIO Rubber Workers told the Natl. Industrial Conference Board recently in New York.

Buckmaster quoted statistics to back up his charge and then added:

"Union members and all American workers are more than statistics and more than machines producing dollars for corporate tills. They want the small but necessary comforts of the home and they want them now—not in some happy hunting ground of the future."

Under the present social security law, he said, "full benefits will not be realized for more than 17 years. Even then the full benefits will be available only to that small fraction of the population who will have had an average yearly income of $3000 for 30 years, starting in 1937.

"Anybody who is now 50 years old will never be able to receive the full benefits even if the social security program, as it is presently constituted, were to be expanded today.

"So, 17 years away, for a few fortunate people, there are misty promises of a small measure of security . . ."

His own union and other CIO unions are meeting this problem in two ways, Buckmaster said.

"We are presently urging and we are obtaining the inclusion of pension programs in our collective bargaining agreements with employers."

"We are also urging in the legislative halls in Washington and throughout the nation an expansion of Federal old age insurance plans, which are now inadequate in coverage and benefits.

"We sincerely hope that our efforts engender an enlightened attitude on the part of American business and the Federal government so that we may all work together for a broad program of adequate retirement benefits for the American people."

36 CIO Members Complete Course

Thirty-six CIO members were among the 106 students who have been awarded certificates for completing courses given during the term by the Labor Education Division of Roosevelt College in Chicago.

The courses completed were Public Relations and Labor Journalism, Effective Speech, American Labor History, Economics for Collective Bargaining, and Time and Motion Study.

The Labor Education Division will announce its new winter program in the near future. Information about courses held in the College and available to unions in their own halls may be obtained by contacting the Labor Education Division of Roosevelt College, 430 So. Michigan Ave., Chicago.

Survey Shows Serious Shortage Of Teachers, School Buildings

THERE IS a serious shortage of both teachers and buildings in public school systems throughout the country, a survey just completed by Natl. Education Association shows.

Four major findings of the report are:

1. About 90,000 teachers, or one in 10, hold emergency or temporary certificates.

2. In 45 of the 48 states there is a "considerable" or "very large" shortage of rural elementary teachers. Thirty-seven states have similar shortages in the cities.

3. In more than half the states there is a "very large" shortage for city elementary schools. There is a similar shortage for rural schools in one-fourth of the states.

4. Average teacher's salary this year is $2985, which has a pre-war purchasing power of $1760.

Things are a little better than last year, though, because of "strenuous efforts by state legislatures, local school boards, organized teachers, and the public" the survey reveals. It concludes that "much remains to be done."

TWUA Will Ask Pensions For 25,000 Carpet Workers

DEMANDS FOR pensions and a wage increase will be made by 25,000 carpet workers who are members of the CIO Textile Workers.

That announcement was made by Jack Rubenstein, TWUA carpet and rug division director. He said that the present contract, which runs until June 4, 1950, allows reopening on both wages and pensions on 60 days notice. Rubenstein said that meetings will be arranged soon with the companies so that union demands may be presented.

The present contract was signed without a wage increase last June because of the unsettled condition of the industry, he said. It permitted TWUA to reopen discussions on wages and pensions after a three-month wait. If no agreement is reached the union is free to strike. As an alternative, wages but not pensions may be arbitrated.

Major companies covered by the agreement include Bigelow-Sanford (Thompsonville, Conn. and Amsterdam, N. Y.); Alexander Smith (Yonkers, N. Y.); A. M. Karaghuesian (Freehold and Roselle Park, N. J.) and Mohawk (Amsterdam, N. Y.).

High Court Upholds Right To Work Law

THE U. S. Supreme Court has sustained the constitutionality of the Arkansas "right to work" law.

The high court upheld the conviction and one year sentence of CIO members Roy Cole and Louis Jones, two Negroes arrested in connection with a strike at a Southern Oil Co. plant in December, 1945, near Little Rock.

The two men were indicted on charges of using force and violence to prevent a non-striker, Otha Williams, from entering the plant.

When Walter Pickett, a picket, attempted to discourage Williams from crossing the ine, the latter killed him with a pocket knife.

Poice arrested three men who were on the picket line, none of whom engaged in the fight. The killer has never been apprehended.

THE INDICTMENT charged that Cole, Jones and Jesse Bean "did, acting in concert with each other, promote, encourage and aid such unlawful assemblage." At the time of their arrest they were not accused of engaging in violence.

The question involved is "where mous opinion, in which Justice Douglas did not participate, ruled:

The question involved is "where one is convicted of promoting, encouraging and aiding an assemblage the purpose of which is to wreak violence. Such an assemblage has been denominated unlawfully by the Arkansas Legislature, and it is no abridgement of free speech or assembly for the criminal sanctions of the state to fasten themselves upon one who has actively and consciously assisted therein."

Under Arkansas' O'Daniel Act, enacted in 1943, a picket line on which violence occurs is "unlawful" and anyone participating in the line at the time is guilty of a felony.

IT WAS under this provision—the law's section 2—that the men were convicted by the lower court.

When the case was appealed to the Arkansas Supreme Court, the conviction was upheld—not on the grounds cited by the Circuit Court, but based instead on Section 1, which makes the use of force and violence illegal in efforts to prevent strikebreaking.

Thus, State Supreme Court Judge Ed. F. McFaddin, in upholding the conviction, misquoted the lower court's findings and found the defendants guilty of something with which they had never been charged.

Noting this discrepancy and seeking a test of the law's constitutionality, the CIO appealed to the U. S. Supreme Court for a review. The High Tribunal in March 1948 reversed the conviction on these grounds and threw the case back to the state court for a rehearing.

The case had been before State Court Judge McFaddin three times. Each time he repeated his previous misquotation of the original charge. In the second hearing however, he did acquit Bean on the grounds of insufficient evidence.

The appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court followed the State Supreme Court's fourth denial of an appeal from the lower courts.

Right-Wing Candidates Win In TWU's Local 100

TRANSPORT Workers Union Local 100 in New York City celebrated the first anniversary of the national unions' housecleaning of left-wing elements by electing incumbent Matthew Guinan as president and other right-wing candidates for top offices in an Honest Ballot Association election.

Guinan polled 12,140 votes to Philip Bray's 4,693.

The right-wing victory was significant in that it came almost one year from the date of the Chicago convention at which the national union cracked down on Communists and fellow travelers.

Other officers elected were: Ellis Van Riper, secretary-treasurer; Mark Kavanaugh, recording secretary; Patrick Mahedy, first vice president; John Hamilton, second vice president; Daniel Gilmartin, third vice president; and Frank O'Connor, fourth vice president.

A total of 29 administration candidates and six independents were elected to the executive board.

"This victory," said Guinan, "represents the last step in the battle that began at the Chicago convention last December. Local 100 now has top officers free of any left-wing elements and it can go forward unhampered by political ideology to win better wages, hours and working conditions for its members."

Union Set For Strike At Wilson

POSSIBILITY of a strike against Wilson & Co., meat packers, heightened as some 400 stewards and officers of CIO Packinghouse worker local unions from seven Wilson plants met at Des Moines to map out a program for winning a contract with the company.

The Des Moines conference called for the immediate raising of a strike fund and empowered a national negotiating committee to "have full power to take all steps necessary to secure a satisfactory contract."

The Wilson locals have been without a contract since the nation-wide meat strike in the spring of 1948. During the walkout, Wilson cancelled its contract with the union and has blocked efforts to negotiate another. Wilson is the only major meat packing company that does not have a contract with UPWA.

At present the NLRB is conducting hearings on charges of unfair labor practices filed against the company for having killed its contract without prior notification.

IN ADDITION, the UPWA has filed suits in the U. S. District Court at Chicago for $1,100,000 damages to Wilson workers who were discharged or cut down to lower paying jobs as retaliation for alleged strike activities.

Since 1948 some 300 Wilson workers have been fired for union activity while others were intimidated from being active union members, union leaders said.

Attempts by the company to drive the union from its plants were crushed last year through a series of NLRB elections in which Wilson workers voted overwhelmingly to stick to the UPWA. Some of the elections margins were as high as 16 to one.

MAJOR OBSTACLE in reaching an agreement now is the company's insistence on super-seniority privileges for the 1948 scabs.

UPWA Pres. Ralph Helstein told the Des Moines conferences that "to accept this proposal would be to dishonor our responsibility to the Wilson workers."

Backing the UPWA, the CIO convention at Cleveland has urged the consuming public and all members of affiliated unions not to buy Wilson meats or products "until that company treats its employes with fairness and decency by signing a union contract."

Rigged Coffee Mart Likely Boosted Price

AN 80-YEAR-OLD retired government clerk got his annuity check the morning of Dec. 1, cashed it at the corner bank, and went into the nearest chain store to buy some eggs and Borden's coffee.

As he told it to Sen. Guy Gillette (D, Iowa), he walked to the coffee shelf, found the clerk marking out the 42c price on the jars, and substituting 51c.

"My annuity doesn't change, but that's a pretty steep price change for coffee sitting on the shelf," he told Gillette, whose subcommittee is investigating the recent steep rise in coffee prices. The elderly man, who volunteered to appear, presented the coffee jar top as "evidence."

A Washington housewife sent in a can of coffee from another local supermarket, with four price stamps on it—markups from 55c to 60c while the can rested on the shelves.

For every cent that coffee prices are raised nationally, it's costing the U.S. consumers $20,000,000, Sen. Gillette pointed out.

AS THE subcommittee, and its counsel, Paul Hadlick, tried to get at the bottom of the sudden soaring coffee prices, the evidence pointed more and more to manipulation of the coffee market either by the Latin-American coffee-producing governments represented in the Pan-American Coffee Bureau, or to some smart speculators in the U.S. who bought a big hunk of the coffee supplies, at low prices, and then spread the "scare" that supplies would be short.

The Pan-American Coffee Bureau may be in effect a cartel, controlling flow of supplies and prices of coffee, Hadlick speculated. The subcommittee has asked spokesmen for the bureau to meet with them, but the attorney for the bureau claims "diplomatic immunity" for its members.

Meanwhile, though, questioning of government experts brought out this:

1. The rumored "failure" of the Brazil crop, major source of coffee, is likely untrue. The U.S. Embassy in Rio de Janeiro cabled in November that it "hazards forcast that 1950 harvest will exceed 1949 by one-half million to a million bags."

2. A report from Nicaragua received by the Commerce Dept. indicated that the sudden near-doubling of coffee prices this past fall was "unanticipated." In fact, a major part of the Nicaraguan crop had already been sold at the earlier low prices.

3. There already has been a drop in coffee buying in retail stores, according to the counsel for the Retail Food Merchants' Association, and Commerce Dept. Marketing experts pointed out that a further drop can be expected as housewives turn to cheaper beverages—tea, cocoa and the like.

4. Pres. John C. Gardner of the New York coffee and Sugar Exchange—the only such agency in this country—blamed housewife hoarding for the continued rise of retail coffee prices. He indicated that restaurant owners and individuals were buying three and four months' stocks of coffee. Counsel Hadlick pointed out that this was unlikely, since the average family used about a pound a week, and there were no evidences of buying in 15-or-20-pound quantities.

5. Newspapers were also blamed by Gardner, though he conceded that the big advertisements taken by the Pan American Coffee Bureau in the daily press might have helped start the splurge of scare stories. Pan-American's advertising budget in the U.S. in 1948, Hadlick brought out, included $2 millions paid by the Brazilian interests alone, with 10c a bag levied on coffee exports from each member country to run the bureau.

Joe Ball Issues Newsletter

"What happened to Joe Ball, who was retired as a U. S. Senator from Minnesota in the 1949 election?" asked the current issue of Capital Comment, publication of the Natl. Democratic Committee.

"He is now publishing a Washington newsletter on management-labor," Comment continued. "He describes his venture as a 'weekly analysis, interpretation and prophecy' on labor relations.

"The former labor-baiting Senator continues to work as a lobbyist for the American Association of Ship Owners, and still does odd jobs for Gerard D. Reilly, the lawyer who testified last spring that it was he who actually wrote the Taft-Hartley Act.

"Ball's latest venture is backed by the Natl. Research Bureau, Inc., of Chicago and needless to say is addressed to management and not to labor."

Farmers' Union To NAM: Slash Budget, Hurt Business

TWO MILES-APART views of what role the federal government should play in avoiding booms and busts were presented Dec. 1 to Sen. Paul Douglas' Congressional subcommittee studying the question.

A healthy, vigorous and elert federal government looking out for the interests of its citizens, will step in whenever private business forces fail to keep the economy on an even keel, Washington representative Russell Smith of the Natl. Farmers' Union told the Congressmen.

Speaking for the Natl. Association of Manufacturers, William J. Grede, a Milwaukee manufacturer, and Harley Lutz, Princeton professor, called for a $10 billion cut in federal spending to balance the budget—regardless of the consequences on the Administration's social program.

Questioned by a skeptical Sen. Douglas (D., Ill.), Grede and Lutz even called for a balanced budget in times of depression by means of increased sales taxes. Douglas commented that this was a proposal for increasing taxes on the things people must have to live. He said it would curtail consumption and deepen the depression.

DOUGLAS AND Lutz agreed however, that tariffs should be lowered. But, prompted by NAM officials in the background, Lutz quickly added that in expressing this viewpoint he was not speaking for the NAM.

Speaking for the Farmers' Union, whose economic views have generally paralleled those of organized labor, its representative warned that "a drastic decline in employment and economic activity will render almost insuperable the question with which this subcommittee is dealing."

Anticipating the NAM's views, the Farmers Union spokesman warned the Congressmen:

"It is not enough simply to compare present national budgets with pre-war national budgets and call for economy without regard to the size of the public debt and the carrying charges of that debt, the expansion of national income that has occurred in the same period, and the immense increase in production upon which that national income is based."

RECOGNIZING this, "a government budget in the range of those of the past several years is almost unavoidable," Further, "a drastic reduction in expenditures probably would mean a decrease in business activity which in turn would lead to lower collections from taxes and a reduction in revenues below the point actually desired by Congress." From here, we could effortlessly move into "a genuine and serious economic decline."

Congress "should concern itself more with the allocations made to different types of expenditures from present budgets, and to the impact of taxation upon individual incomes and upon business activity, rather than to what we believe would be futile attempts to return to national budgets far below present levels," the Farmers' Union urged.

A study of the relative ability of states and the federal government to regulate and tax "very large financial concentrations" which often are nationwide was urged on the subcommittee. Such a study should look into the whole field of federal programs of financial aid to the states, it was added.

Wisconsin CIO Stresses PAC, State Legislation

WISCONSIN CIO Council mapped a fighting political action program at its twelfth annual convention in Milwaukee.

Steps to be taken to increase PAC work will include:

1. Circulation at the plant gates of four weekly messages before PAC collection is started in the plants.

2. A registration drive in every plant to be followed by a check-up a month later to find out how many persons have registered.

The group decided that Pres. Herman Staffes should devote half of his time to his council job so he could direct the intensified PAC program. He had been giving much of his time to his duties as president of UAW local 75.

The state legislative program adopted by the convention included:

1. Repeal of the 1947 act barring utility strikes.

2. Transfer of the Wisconsin Employment Realtions Board to the Industrial Commission and further modifications of the Wisconsin Employment Peace Act.

(Repeal of Taft-Hartley and reenactment of the Wagner Act also were requested.)

3. State investigation to ascertain the state's building needs.

4. Passage of a law to permit voters to make a free choice of candidates regardless of party affiliations.

Key speakers included CIO Councils Dir. John Brophy, State Senator Gaylord Nelson and Rep. Andrew Biemiller.

Brophy said that while many newspaper stories stressed the left-right aspect of the National CIO convention, the positive aspects of the CIO program were largely overlooked in the press. The Wisconsin CIO, like other state councils, should play a large role in carrying out that program by fighting for good state labor laws, he said.

Brophy, who is chairman of the CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation, also outlined the CIO conservation program, which was approved by the National CIO convention.

The council passed a resolution which indorsed a program to provide control of timber cutting practices so that the state may regain its rank as a leading producer of timber.

Also recommended was the appointment of a non-partisan advisory committee whose members would be selected from leading persons in the state who are interested in conservation.

Up for election were the secretary and all of the state board members. Five of the six incumbent board members were re-elected and John M. Sorenson, incumbent secretary-treasurer was returned to office.

Make-up of the board insures CIO's stand on basic issues in the state and indicates a stronger CIO has come out of the convention.

Civil Liberty Survey Under Way in 50 Cities

AMERICA'S 50 leading cities will be able to check their civil liberties status Dec. 15 as the result of an American Civil Liberties Union survey now being conducted, ACLU Dir. Roger N. Baldwin announced.

The survey is being carried out in connection with the Union's celebration of the 158th anniversary of the ratification of the Bill of Rights.

The questionnaires, which have been distributed to city officials, industrialists, labor leaders, newspaper editors, and representatives of minority groups, deal with such subjects as:

Interference with public or mass meetings, censorship of motion pictures and licensed newsstands, racial segregation of any kind, interference with peaceful picketing, academic freedom, loyalty oaths for public employes, and legality of evidence secured through wire-tapping.

At the time that the ratings are made public, Baldwin said, plans will be disclosed for the Union's preparation of a "model Bill of Rights" for cities.

"While progress is being made to secure civil rights on the federal and state front, nothing has been done to guarantee those basic freedoms on a city level," he said.

He added that the civil liberties survey now being conducted would offer assistance to the Union in plotting the city-wide Bill of Rights code.

N. J. Council Gets Set For '50 Elections

THE 600 DELEGATES representing 250,000 CIO members in New Jersey who attended the 11th annual convention of the State CIO Council last week at Asbury Park, N. J., spent most of their time on political action.

After hearing reports on the major successes of 1948, the convention immediately launched into the task of paving the road for the election of five more liberal congressmen in 1950.

Carl Holderman, Textile Workers Union, who was re-elected as New Jersey CIO Council president for the sixth successive year, introduced as "exhibit A" of CIO-PAC victories, Stephen J. Moran, Steelworkers, the state Council's executive secretary. Moran was elected last year to the Newark City Commission.

In his speech Moran cautioned the delegates to guard and preserve the independence of PAC. "We must not permit ourselves to become the appendage of any party," he said. He told the delegates that prospects of getting CIO support would inspire liberal candidates from both the Republican and Democratic parties in the state.

Pres. Holderman said that "the CIO's Political Action Committee is at its peak influence in New Jersey. With the support of every CIO local in the state, we can not only return to Congress the three new liberals whom we elected in 1948, but two additional liberals as well."

The three freshmen representatives whom the CIO supported in 1948 had "perfect voting records" in the first session of the 81st Congress, Holderman declared.

The convention urged local unions in New Jersey to "adopt" units of the new anti-Communist CIO electrical union. Pres. Holderman asked the delegates to "extend every possible" aid to the new group.

CIO Secy-Treas. James B. Carey told the delegates of the IUE's fight in the courts to win control of UE groups whose members want to join the new anti-Communist union.

The convention voted to:

- Amend its constitution to give each Local Industrial union in the state individual representation on the State CIO Executive Board.
- Prohibit any state CIO officers from engaging in business enterprises which might result in exploitation of his office.
- Welcome Division 55 of the Communication Workers, representing 13,000 telephone operators, into the State Council.
- Indorse the program of the CIO Community Service Committee.
- Commend the New Jersey CIO's educational program under which spokesmen from both labor and management lead discussions in high school classes.

Tampa AFL Backs TWU Bus Strike

FORTY gun-toting members of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen have acted as strikebreakers in the month-old CIO Transport Workers strike at Tampa, Fla.

William Grogan, TWU vice pres., reported that the Brotherhood members "armed with pistols and special permits" went through the lines after the strike had been in progress for 26 days.

The same day the Tampa Times carried a paid advertisement signed by officers of the Central Trades and Labor Assembly of Tampa, AFL, expressing full support of the strike. The Labor Assembly represents 25,000 workers.

Grogan said that between 35 and 40 drivers have been reporting for work since the company resumed operations several days ago under an emergency order from Mayor Curtis Hixon. All but three are members of the Brotherhood, he said.

THE 152 MEMBERS of the CIO Transport Workers union are firm against returning to work under present conditions, he added.

The union is asking for a wage boost which would bring the scale more in line with wages paid bus drivers in other Southern cities.

Early in the strike the company offered the union 3c an hour increase. Gov. Fuller Warren termed the offer "insulting."

Picketing Upheld By Cal. Court

No court can issue an injunction prohibiting peaceful picketing, Judge Andrew R. Schottky ruled in Superior Court at Los Angeles. AFL members had picketed the Roosevelt building despite a previous Superior Court injunction and certain pickets, through a misunderstanding, had violated the original court order. Judge Schottky denied the right of injunction directed against peaceful picketing, and maintained the pickets who violated the order were not in contempt of court.

Memorial To Broun

In memory of Heywood Broun, founder of the CIO Newspaper Guild, the New York City Guild is arranging a Broun Memorial Art Collection for its clubhouse. The club asks for the loan of any Borun mementoes, photos, art works, books or any other items.

Czech Labor 'Frozen'

The Communist-controlled municipal council in Prague, Czechoslovakia, announced recently that workers in heavy industry will be frozen in their jobs. The move it necessary, they said, "to supply needed manpower and increase production in essential industries."

Organizationally Speaking

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

(In the absence of Vice-President Haywood, who is attending the London conference for the establishment of a free world trade union organization, his column is compiled from field reports.)

Typical of field reports concerning the IUE-CIO were the following:

CINCINNATI, OHIO: CIO Reg. Dir. R. J. Davidson reports, "I held a staff meeting of all of the International Representatives and Council Officers in and about the Dayton and Cincinnati area, and out of this meeting was able to rally the support of all of the International Representatives and Council Officers in this area for a strong campaign against the left-wing UE. In the Cincinnati area the Formica Local 757, the Norwood Heeking Can Co. Local 729, and the Allis Chalmers Co. Local 765 voted to disaffiliate from the UE and affiliate with IUE-CIO."

NEW JERSEY: CIO Reg. Dir. Ewald Sandner reports, "My assistant, James P. Sweeney, attended a meeting of the executive board of General Electric Local 455. Local Union by majority voted to affiliate with IUE-CIO. CIO Field Rep. Jack Rosen reports that he met with the members of Local 435 Walker Turner, Plainfield, N. J., which passed a resolution in favor of IUE-CIO affiliation."

OHIO: CIO Reg. Dir. Sam Sponseller reports "the membership of Local 721, White Sewing Machine Co., Cleveland, Ohio, voted 248 to 2 to disaffiliate from the UE and affiliate with the IUE-CIO."

CIO Field Rep. John P. McGivern reports that in an election at the Canton Division of the Ohio Power Co., the workers voted as follows: CIO Utility Workers 161; independent 106; no union 27.

CIO Reg. Dir. James J. Leary reports that in an NLRB election held at the Central Bag Co., Kansas City, Mo., the workers voted 90 to 49 in favor of the CIO Textile Workers. The organizational work was handled by Howard Berge, business agent for the Textile Workers Joint Board, Kansas City, Mo.

CIO Reg. Dir. W. A. Copeland reports that in an NLRB election held for the editorial departments of the combined Montgomery, Ala., Advertiser-Journal, the workers voted 20 to 14 for the CIO Newspaper Guild.

CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda reports that Local 3029 CIO Steelworkers won in a union shop election at Gardner-Denver Manufacturing Plant, Denver, Colo., as follows: eligible 647; 535 for union shop; 56 against.

H. D. Lisk, Georgia State Director, CIO Textile Workers, reports that the employes of the Crompton Highland Mills, Griffin, Ga., voted 427 to 229 to retain the TWUA-CIO as their bargaining agent. The election was conducted by the NLRB as a result of a decertification petition.

CIO Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that the CIO Rubber Workers won an NLRB election at Kresco Mfg. Co., Los Angeles, Calif., by unanimous vote. International Rep. E. E. Spencer was in charge of the campaign. The CIO Auto Workers won an NLRB election at the Easton Grinding Co., Los Angeles, Calif., by better than 90% majority. UAW Rep. Dick Cartwright was in charge.

Adolph Germer, CIO Woodworkers' director of organization, reports that in an NLRB election held at the Camp Manufacturing Co., the workers voted 157 to 41 in favor of IWA-CIO Intl. Rep. Kenna W. Snyder was in charge of the campaign.

Some Words Called Pact Trouble-Makers

Words and phrases present one of the most baffling problems in drawing up labor contracts, according to John A. Lapp, Chicago arbitrator and author of several books on labor arbitration.

Some of the phrases that cause trouble, he told a labor-management group recently are: ability to perform the work, physical fitness, relative ability, efficiency and various combinations of these words.

Hard Work Can Elect 25 Congressmen—PAC

HARD WORK can elect at least 25 additional liberal congressmen in the 1950 elections, international union PAC representatives concluded in Washington last week following the second of a regular series of bi-monthly gatherings.

Taking note of the fact that "off years" generally produce a slump in the vote which results in the election of anti-labor congressmen, the PAC workers in charge of political action in their respective organizations agreed one of the major jobs next year will be to counteract that trend.

"If we get out and get our people registered and make sure they know what the issues are when they get to the polls on election day," commented PAC Dir. Jack Kroll, "we can keep the good congressmen we have now and elect at least 25 additional members of the House."

ALSO STRESSED was the PAC dollar drive which will start shortly after the first of the year.

PAC Comptroller George Rettinger set the goal of the PAC dollar drive at the solicitation of each CIO member for his contribution.

Generally, work in approximately 166 congressional districts next year was outlined as the primary job.

Study of the record of the first session of the 81st Congress was coupled with practical consideration of CIO membership in the various congressional districts to produce the conclusion that as of the present time the major political action work by labor will take place in the 166 areas.

Final selection of the main battlegrounds will be made shortly after the end of the second session of Congress.

First attention, it was agreed, should be given to the Southern states where the primaries, most of which come early in the year, are the equivalent of election.

No candidate with a bad record should be unopposed in the primaries, it was agreed, even though the opposing candidate might have a slim chance of winning.

Young liberals, it was reported, are in many cases anxious to run against entrenched Dixiecrats, and the PAC representatives expressing the feeling that whatever labor support could be mustered in those districts should be given such people.

The liberal Southerners, Kroll said, should have an opportunity to vote for a candidate who represents their views and CIO-PAC should help in every way it can to give them that opportunity.

CONTESTS IN which there is only one candidate, it was stated, "are not elections within the meaning of the American tradition of free and open elections."

In addition to congressional races, preliminary plans were laid for the 36 senatorial races in 1950.

In all cases plans involved means of making sure that CIO members are registered and eligible to vote, that they are informed of the issues in the campaign and that successful PAC dollar drives are conducted in order that there will be sufficient funds to finance the contemplated political activity.

In the congressional districts earmarked for attention, it was pointed out, about half of the incumbents will probably be supported by the CIO while half of them will be opposed on the basis of their records thus far.

INDORSEMENTS of candidates are made in the congressional districts involved by the congressional district political action committees.

Proposals of Senator Bricker (R, O.) and others for an open alliance between Republicans and Dixiecrats were discussed by the union PAC representatives and there was common agreement that the proposals were merely to "make legal" the "marriage of convenience" that had already taken place.

"They've got so many little offspring running around I guess they decided it's time to give them a name," commented one of the PAC workers.

Curran Will Discuss CIO Program

CIO'S program, policies and outlook will be explained to a national radio audience next week by Joseph Curran, head of the Natl. Maritime Union and vice-president of the CIO.

Curran will be heard over the Columbia Broadcasting System network on Saturday, Dec. 17, from 3:45 to 4:00 p.m. EST. He will be interviewed by Dwight Cooke. a CBS public affairs expert.

The Curran interview marks CIO's debut this season on the weekly CBS "Cross-Section" program in which labor, management and farm organizations present their views on important matters of the day. The show will be broadcast every Saturday afternoon until July at the 3:45 p.m. spot, and key CIO figures will be interviewed by Cooke at various times during the six-month period.

"Cross-Section" is a sustaining program, and sometimes is broadcast at different hours on local stations. Local CBS stations can tell you when the "Cross-Section" program will be broadcast in your community.

In cases where the local CBS outlet does not plan to carry the series, enough interest shown by labor groups may induce station officials to run the program.

NAMusic Goes Round And Round But It Comes Out Anti-People

TWO THOUSAND members of the Natl. Association of Manufacturers swarmed into the ornate main ballroom of New York's Hotel Waldorf Astoria last week for their annual convention.

As in previous years, it was a beef-and-growl session against labor and the New Deal, the Fair Deal and the welfare State. And, as usual, some of the country's most reactionary politicians gave vent to their pent-up feelings about the CIO and Pres. Truman.

A key attraction this year was Sen. John Bricker—the "other" Republican senator from Ohio. His speech was in the form of a question: "Will We Spend Our Way to Socialism?" As might be expected, his talk was an angry "yes" to that question.

Bricker, elected in the 1946 Republican swing, charged that a "lack of a healthy ethical outlook" is responsible for "the poisonous political alliance which now exists between greedy national labor leaders and the present administration."

AS IN OTHER years, the NAM heard customary speeches that Big Business men should find a formula for "winning back the loyalty of their workers." This year the speech was given by Lee H. Bristol, head of the Bristol-Myers Co., which makes both hard soap and soft soap.

Bristol said industrialists had failed to sell themselves to their workers, and as a result workers have accepted a "lot of political bunk that solves none of their problems but robs the worker of everything he holds dear." Bristol's remarks referred to the Fair Deal program.

MEANWHILE the NAM News, weekly magazine of the big business organization, made clear that the CIO is still under Communist influence, so far as NAM's thinking is concerned.

"Communism is out in the CIO—at least the kind that looks toward Moscow," the NAM News opined. "But radicalism is in and very much alive."

"The program of the CIO leadership calls for virtually complete domination of American economic life by a government which it means to control through 'political action'," the NAM News concluded.

Citing a number of planks in the CIO legislative program, which generally parallel the Administration's own program, the NAM paper decided:

"These items are the building blocks of Communism. The CIO leaders call them elements of the 'welfare state'."

On the other hand, Clarence B. Goshorn, New York advertising executive, told the NAM convention that the terms "welfare state" and "statism" are "scare words" which should be banished from the public mind.

It's all pretty confusing.

Does Satevepost Fiction Stop At Editorial Page?

The Saturday Evening Post, which publishes some good fiction and better cartoons, came up with a sour editorial last week.

THE TROUBLE: New York voters elected Herbert Lehman to the Senate, instead of GOP's John Foster Dulles.

THE SATEVEPOST ARGUMENT: New Yorkers rejected "facts" and "freedom"—as presented by Dulles and Dewey; they chose "federal pap" — as represented in the Fair Deal program of Pres. Truman and Sen.-elect Lehman.

THE SATEVEPOST CONCLUSION: It's worried that maybe democracy is committing suicide. The Republican Party's "one hope is an out-and-out fight against the Fair Deal. That is also the nation's hope. At the moment, it is a not too confident hope."

THE SATEVEPOST SOUR-GRAPES: Dulles lost to Lehman by only 196,000 votes.

THE CIO NEWS ADVICE: Get your dollar to PAC, to help insure liberal victories in 1950.

Australians Fare Better, Survey Shows

THE AUSTRALIAN worker can buy more food for an hour's labor than a working man in any other country, according to a study recently completed by the U. S. Dept. of Labor. The American worker comes second on the list.

Using 100 for the United States as a base index, the study of the food purchasing power in 19 countries from October 1948 to April 1949 showed the following:

Australia, 109; United States, 100; Norway, 88; Canada, 84; Denmark, 80; Great Britain, 71; Sweden, 69; Finland, 52; Israel, 51; Switzerland, 51; Czechoslovakia 48 (official prices), 14 (black market); Ireland, 45; Chile, 36; France 35; Hungary, 33; Germany (Bizonia), 32; Italy, 24; Austria, 23; Russia, 18.

Canadian, British and Scandinavian workers, according to the study, which was made by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, can buy 70 to 90% as much food with an hour's earnings as U. S. workers, while in Russia they must work four to seven times as long as an employe here for the same amount of food.

Weekly Wages Fall

Weekly earnings for the 11.4 million production workers in the nation's manufacturing establishments average $55.26 in mid-October, decreasing about half a dollar from the September level, reports the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics.

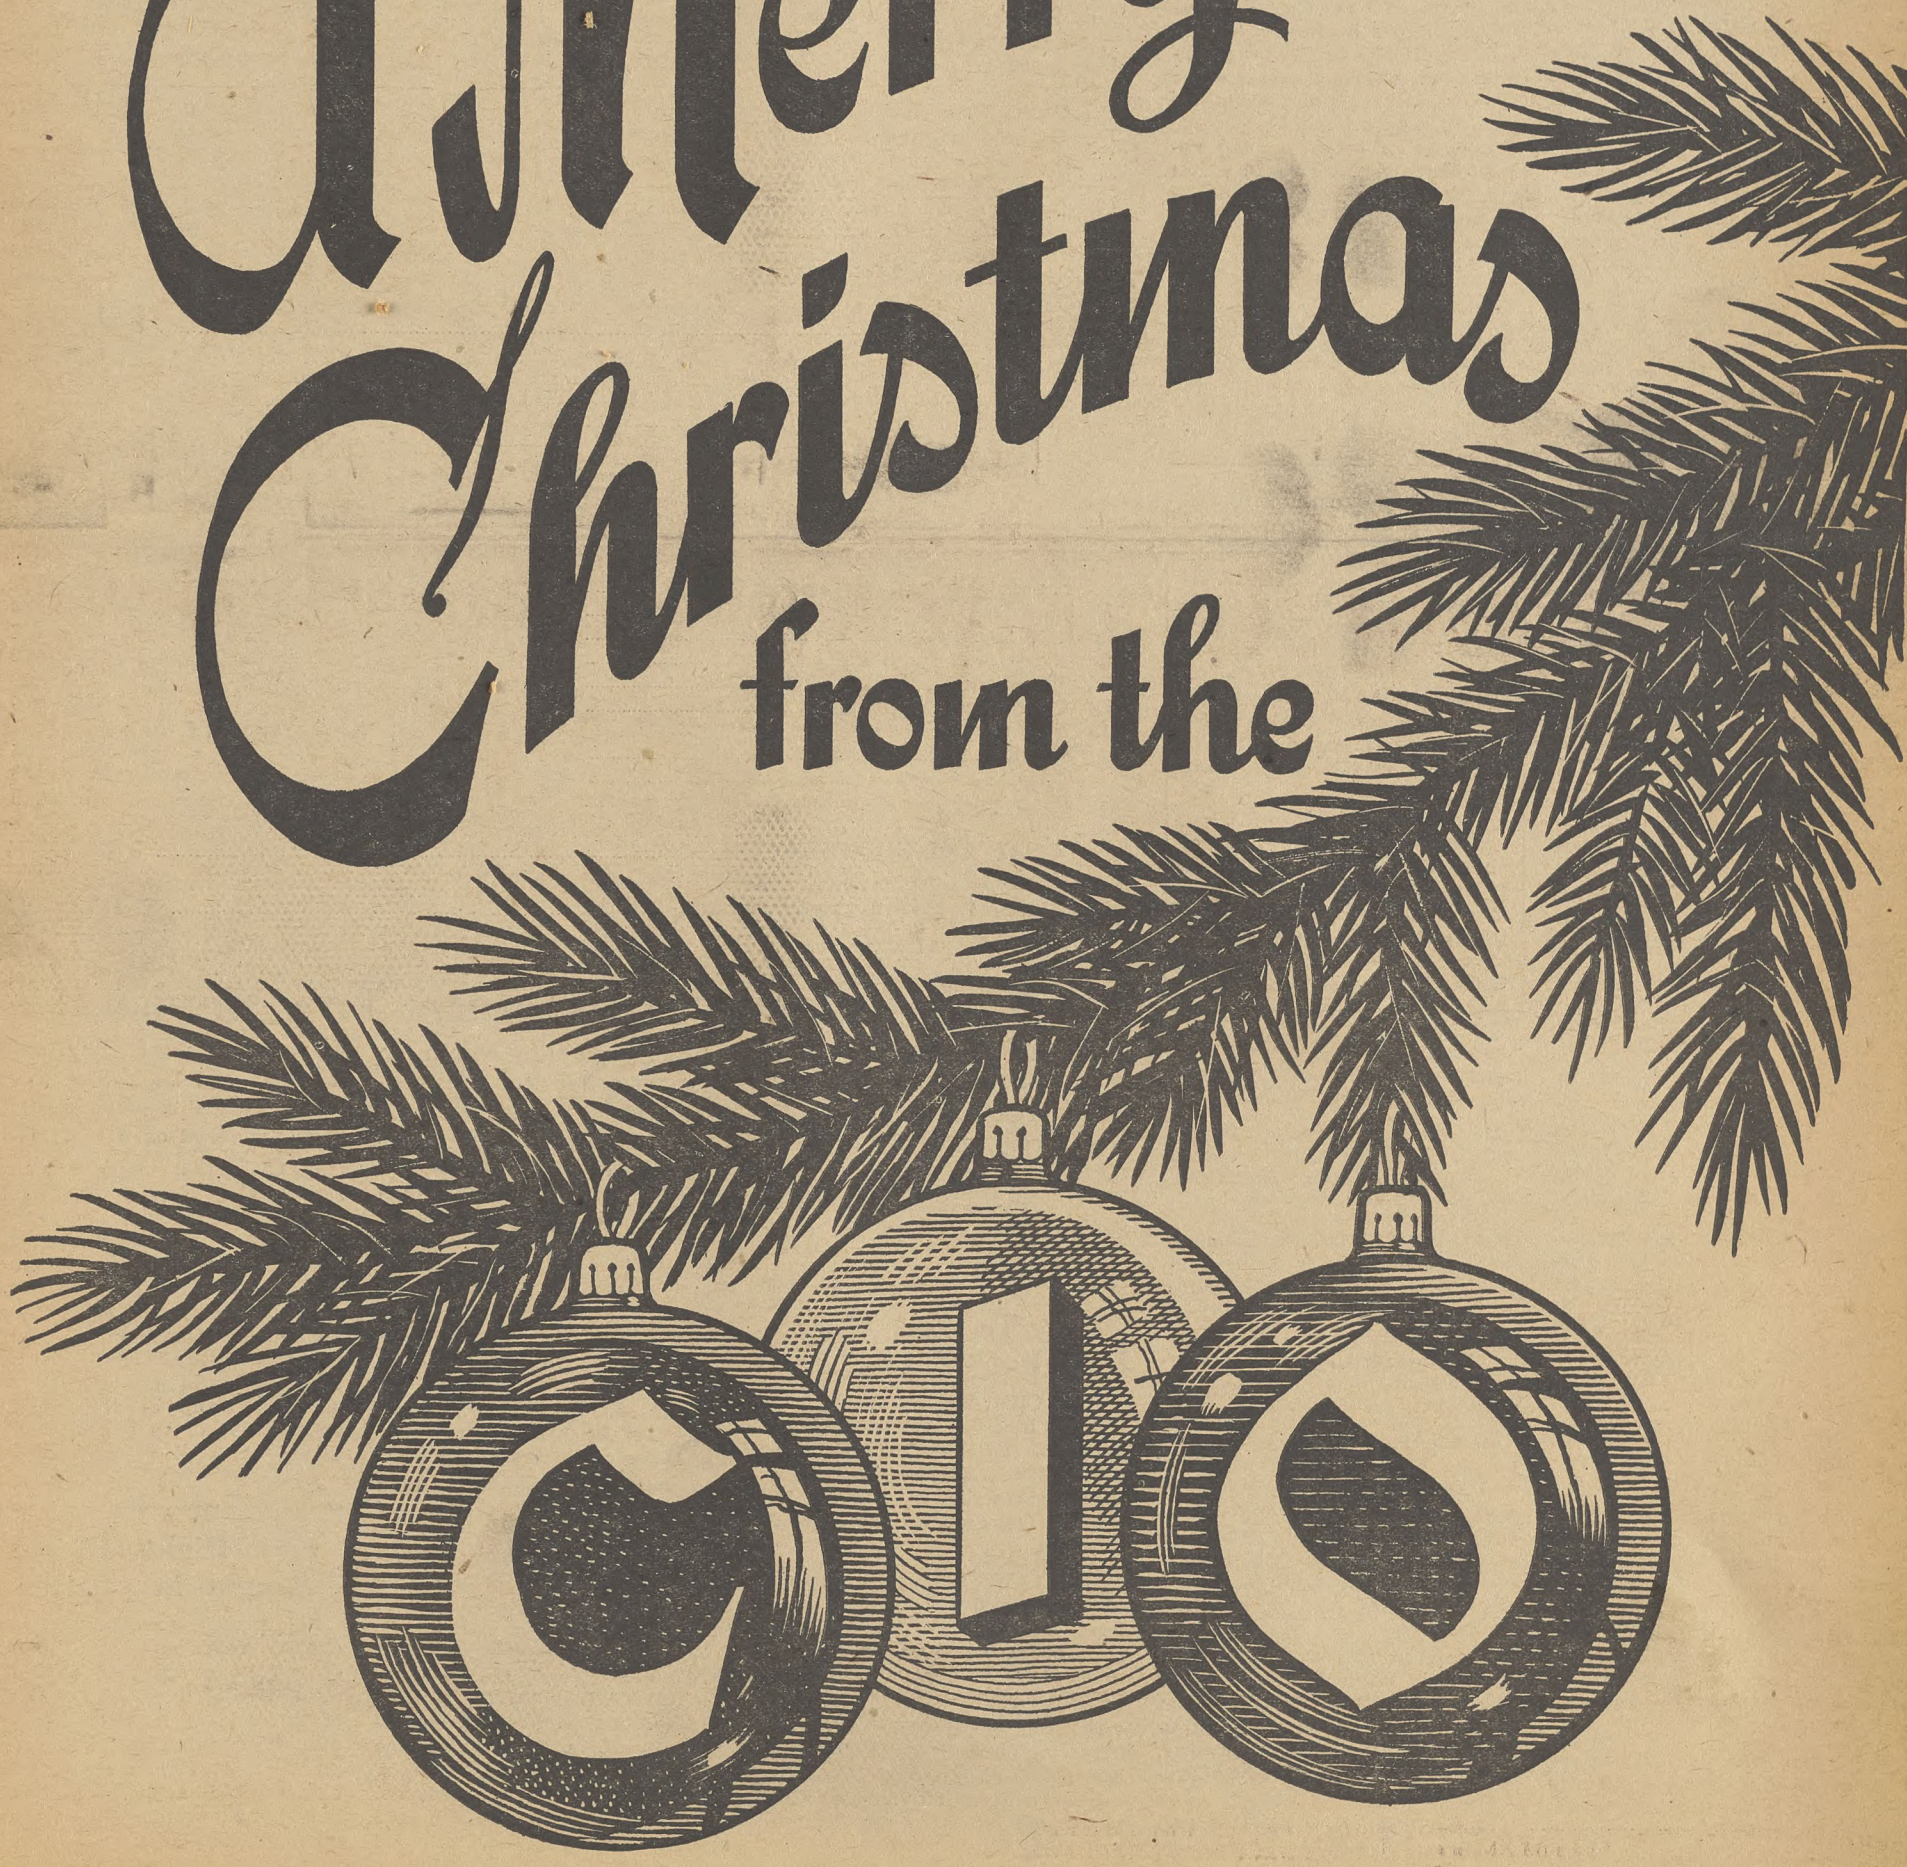
A Merry Christmas from the CIO



CIO Qualifying Under T-H Law

THE NATIONAL CIO has financial resources of $1,480,317.07—about 25c for each CIO union member throughout the country.

The figures were made public this week in the form of two financial statements, which appear in adjoining columns.

Publication of the figures in this manner is part of the process by which the national CIO—acting on instructions of the Executive Board meeting in Cleveland last month—puts itself in "compliance" with the Taft-Hartley Act.

Pres. Murray, Secy.-Treas. Carey and the nine vice-presidents are also filing non-Communist affidavits in their position as CIO officers. All of this group, with the exception of Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood, had already signed the affidavits as officers of their various unions.

The organization's resources of nearly one-and-a-half million dollars represented an increase of $157,000 during the year ending last Sept. 30, the auditor's report showed.

DURING THAT 12-month period, the CIO received $3 540, 815.40 in per capita tax from national unions and organizing committees; $93,091.36 from dues and initiation fees forwarded from local industrial unions; and $6,835.50 in dues from state and local industrial union councils.

Other CIO revenue came from sales of The CIO News; from sales of pamphlets and organizational supplies; and from interest on investment securities. From these three sources, the national CIO received about $150,000.

One of the expenditures listed in the report was for the Southern organizing campaign, for which the CIO earmarked about $708,000 in per capita tax. Over half a million dollars was expended for salaries, travel expense and subsidies to unions and organizing groups.

Expenses of operating the national headquarters came to about $945,000; and operation of CIO's many regional offices came to over half a million dollars.

Anti-CIO Group Keeps Two Off UFW Board

PRES. MORRIS PIZER and the right-wing members of the CIO United Furniture Workers executive board have leveled charges that anti-CIO forces on the board are attempting to prevent an honest expression of membership support for National CIO policy by unseating pro-CIO members.

Pizer cited the cases of two right-wing supporters who were denied seats at the recent GEB meeting in New York.

George Meacham, Portland, Ore., local 1090, had been elected to the GEB in July 1949 by unanimous vote of the board but was unseated at the New York meeting on a constitutional technicality by a vote of 15 to 10.

This vacancy had been caused by the resignation of George Turner, also of Local 1090.

GEB member Jack Hechstadt charged that Meacham, who represents a local of 600 members, was removed from the board solely to prevent him from voting for UFW support of CIO policy.

IN ANOTHER action, combined forces of Secy.-Treas. Max Perlow and Organizational Dir. Ernest Marsh prevented the seating of Roy Johnson, who had been nominated to the board by Rockford, Ill. Local 707, which has more than 1200 members.

Johnson's local, like Meacham's has supported national CIO policy.

The left-wing majority on the board complained in a resolution of the "arbitrary and dictatorial expulsion at the CIO convention of the United Electrical Workers and the Farm Equipment Workers without even so much as a hearing." Alleged raiding action by right-wing unions was termed "cannibalistic."

Pizer said the old familiar cry of "autonomy" was frequently heard during the three-day meeting as the majority members on the board urged rank and file to "democratically decide what their program and policy shall be and who shall lead our union."

He said the lefties further stated, "We will fight to stay in the CIO with honor and autonomy."

THE PRO-CIO GEB minority accused the left-wing group of "disgraceful and undemocratic maneuvers" which they predicted will be rejected "in indignation" by the membership of the international union at the Chicago convention early next June.

In a letter to UFWA members on the repudiation of Meacham and Johnson, right-wing members said that the two were denied their rightful places by "the very people who shriek the loudest about democracy and the necessity of letting the membership decide."

The letter was signed by GEB Members Walter Carson, Carl Curtis, Eugene Wysocki, Sam Sloan, Fred Stefan, Jack Hechstadt, Tom Binnall, Jack Schwartz, George Meacham and James Cerefecci.

A resolution in support of CIO policy was voted down 14 to 10.

UFW Local Votes To Support CIO

Local 450 of the United Furniture Workers has voted unanimous support to Natl. UFW Pres. Morris Pizer's resolution in support of CIO policy, according to Business Agent Eugene R. Wysocki. He said the resolution will be submitted to a referendum vote of the entire UFW membership.

Local 450 at Cleveland, Ohio, is an amalgamated local of about 1100 members employed at the American Box Co., Auer Register, Grand Industries, Cleveland Metal Bed, Hauserman Co., Parsons Engineering, Smeed Box and Zimmerman Co.

N. J. Council Asks State Tax Revision

PREDICTING state revenue needs of $69 million during the coming fiscal year, the New Jersey State CIO has recommended the levying of a tax on the net profits exceeding $10,000 per year of all corporations operating within the state "at a flat rate set somewhere between 4 and 7%.

Testifying last week before the State Tax Policy Commission at a public hearing at Trenton, Harry Kranz, legislative director for the state CIO, revealed that CIO estimates, based on 1949 profits, indicate that a 4% tax on profits over $10,000 would yield about $40,060,092, while a similar tax of 7% would produce $71,060,-661.

Kranz divided state revenue needs for the 1950-51 fiscal year into three categories.

In the first, totaling $18 million "to cover deficits," were items of $6 million to repay funds borrowed from the highway department this year to balance the budget and $12 million to meet the estimated 1950-51 deficit.

The second category, totaling $23 million "for additional expenditures," included $17 million for additional state-aid to education; $3 million more for old-age and relief grants; and $3 million for state employe pay increments.

The third category, totaling $28 million "for tax equity," included $15 million to repeal the cigarette sales tax and $13 million to repeal the existing corporate franchise tax based on net worth.

Declaring that now is "the time for revising New Jersey's antiquated tax structure, for providing adequate revenue to meet our state's needs, for aiding our hard-pressed municipalities and their real estate taxpayers and for providing tax relief for the needy, not the greedy," Kranz warned that this could not be done "by increasing any of the existing state taxes" or by any new sales taxes.

UPA To Take Over Detroit UOPWA Local

The CIO Paperworkers will shortly issue a charter to employes of the R. L. Polk Co., Detroit, Mich. The workers have been represented by local 26, United Office and Professional Workers.

August W. Bahr, UPA representative, said the request came from Polk workers "who want no part of a communist-dominated union but want to stay in the CIO."

UOPWA officers have been ordered to appear before a CIO trial board in Washington, D. C., to answer charges of violating CIO policy and following the Communist Party line.

Civil Rights Clause Sought in Charter

Representatives of labor unions, church groups and social welfare organizations appeared before a committee of the St. Louis Board of Freeholders to urge inclusion of a civil rights clause in the proposed new city charter. The clause would bar discrimination in hotels, restaurants, theaters and other public places.

CIO Asks Congress To Probe $4-a-Ton Steel Price Rise

U. S. STEEL'S announcement of average $4-a-ton increase in the price of steel brought forth an explosion of bitter comment.

Some of the sharpest words came from Sen. C. O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.) who called Big Steel's price action "inflationary" and "not justified." He indicated that the Congressional Joint Committee on the Economic Report—which he heads—may soon hold hearings to find out why U. S. Steel thought price boosts were needed now.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray withheld comment.

But a CIO economist, testifying before the O'Mahoney Committee a few hours before Pres. Ben Fairless of U. S. Steel made his price announcement, said he was "appalled" by the rumors of new increases in steel prices.

EVERETT KASSALOW, executive secretary of the CIO Full Employment Committee, told the Senators and Congressmen:

"We are simply appalled by the rumors of pending steel price increases.

"Here is a situation where leading steel corporations made almost unbelievable profits in their last full quarter before the strike, and they are now operating at even higher levels of capacity. Yet, on the pretext that material costs are up, they are getting ready to bilk the public again.

"We earnestly request the Joint Committee to look into this scandalous situation. After all, it is less than three months since a federal fact-finding board concluded that in the light of the tremendous steel profits, price reductions—not increases—were in order."

Fairless' announcement—which is expected to set a pattern throughout the industry—admitted that the price increase would take care not only of present increases in costs but some which are still "approaching."

U. S. Steel will rake in more than $60 million in additional revenue as a result of the price boost.

AN ECONOMIST familiar with steel industry price and wage problems pointed out that U. S. Steel probably has increased its rate of profits, as a result of sharp decreases in the price of scrap steel. The price of scrap had dropped from $43 a ton to $19, and is now back at about $27. This decrease represents a tremendous saving for the corporation.

U. S. Steel's profits amounted to about $200 million in 1948—after taxes—and were running at even higher rates through most of 1949. Thus the increased cost of operations resulting from the union-negotiated pension and welfare plan are practically offset by the corporation's huge 1949 profits.

Sen. O'Mahoney charged that the steel industry as a whole and U. S. Steel in particular "are enjoying extraordinary profits exceeding even those of the record year of 1948.

"In the face of this amazing record of earning power, I feel definitely that there should be no steel price increase at this time. The industry will be acting against its own interest and against the interest of all American business if it persists."

"Dora, I've been mulling it over and I think we can see our way clear to getting that new chair after all."

Md. To Study Unemployment

AS SUGGESTED by Pres. Frank Bender of the Maryland-DC CIO Council, Gov. William P. Lane, Jr., of Maryland called a special session of the Assembly to discuss ways to meet the unemployment situation in the state.

In a letter to Lane, Bender suggested that the Assembly also amend existing laws to enable employable persons who are unemployed to receive aid when their compensation benefits are exhausted. An emergency appropriation of $300,000 will be asked to aid individuals in this group.

In addition, Bender asked that the legislature increase the period of compensation payments to unemployed persons from 26 weeks to one year.

Criticizes AMA

The Des Moines, Iowa, CIO Council does not let the grass grow under its feet. The news of the $25 assessment levied on the 143,000 doctor members of the American Medical Associations to fight the National Health Insurnce bill was scarcely out before the Council went on record condemning the action.

ESSAY CONTEST WINNER is Helen Rodina, Kenosha, Wis., high school senior. The daughter of a farmer, Helen won the contest sponsored by the Wisconsin CIO, by writing that unions have helped the economy by preserving the balance between profits, wages and prices.

Rent Decontrol Spells 'Political Poison' In Utah

ADVOCACY OF rent decontrol is "political poison"—or so it is indicated by information gathered by the CIO Housing Committee.

Out in Utah, Gov. Bracken Lee, a Republican and real estate operator, urged mayors to send him decontrol resolutions.

Mayor Perry of Ogden was in such a hurry to get his decontrol resolution to the governor that he "forgot" to hold the public hearing required by law, the CIO committee reported.

When this was called to his attention, Perry held a hearing, at which decontrol was strongly opposed by labor and war veterans. The resolution was then sent to Gov. Lee, who signed it. Controls were lifted in Ogden.

Then, on Oct. 26, Mayor Perry, seeking to remain in office, was defeated in the primary.

Mayor Collard of Provo, Utah, removed rent controls. He isn't mayor any more.

Mayor Minor of Logan, Utah, joined the decontrol parade. He isn't mayor any more, either.

The mayoralty election at Salt Lake hasn't been held yet but in the recent by-election for city commissioner posts two strong advocates of rent control won handily.

Rent control became a major issue in the mayoralty campaign down at Atlanta, Ga., in September.

Mayor William A. Hartsfield backed rent control. His opponent, Charles Brown, landlords' candidate, "pussyfooted on the issue," the CIO Committee reported.

Hartsfield is still mayor.

Murray Pledges CIO Support In Struggle With Wilson

CIO PRES. PHILIP MURRAY has pledged full support of the National CIO and all its affiliates to the efforts of the CIO Packinghouse Workers toward winning a union contract with Wilson & Co.

Murray's pledge was announced shortly after the union had signed contracts with the other leading meat packers.

In a letter to Pres. Ralph Helstein of the Pakinghouse union, Murray said: "I am sure that each and every structure of CIO, its affiliated international unions, its councils, its regional directors and staff will give freely and quickly of their time and effort in support of the urgent cause of the United Packinghouse Workers of America."

Although the union is certified by the NLRB as bargaining agents at seven Wilson plants, the union has been unable to negotiate an agreement with the company.

No contract has been in effect between Wilson and the union since the spring of 1948, when the company canceled its contract during the nation-wide meat strike.

NEGOTIATIONS for a new contract with Wilson broke down when the company insisted on giving super-seniority privileges to strike breakers.

Super-seniority was termed by Murray as "an issue of greatest concern to all of organized labor."

"The packinghouse workers," he continued, "deserve the immediate cooperation of every one of us lest certain conditions be forced upon them which might be seized upon as a precedent throughout anti-labor circles in American industry."

Commenting on the union's "Don't Buy Wilson" campaign, Murray noted: "Now the men and women of this courageous union are quite properly asking the sympathy and aid of CIO members everywhere.

"They are conducting a nation-wide 'Don't Buy Wilson' campaign so that the added force of millions of consumers enrolled on the side of right and justice may bring the Wilson company to see the light of reason."

Packing Union Signs Morrell

The CIO Packinghouse Workers have signed a contract with John Morrell for 4000 workers in Topeka, Kan., and Ottumwa, Iowa, similar to contracts with Armour, Swift, and Cudahy. Wilson & Co. is now the only major holdout. Under the Morrell contract the union gets a three-day notice of any change in job or production standards and has the right to challenge.

Timken Strike Ends As Union Wins Two Disputed Points

THE 10,000 Steelworkers ended their 38-day strike at the five Timken Roller Bearing Co. plants after the union signed a contract closely paralleling the Bethlehem formula. The plants are located in Ohio.

The chief issues which had blocked agreement were the methods involved in computing pensions and a union-proposed improvement in the health and welfare insurance program which the company has financed for several years. Union won on both counts.

Pensions will be computed on the basis of the employes' average earnings during the preceding 26 bi-weekly pay periods rather than on the 10-year period specified in the Bethlehem contract.

THE SETTLEMENT provides a $100 minimum monthly pension, including social security, at age 65 after 25 years of service. Employes do not contribute to the pension fund.

Benefits for sickness and accidents are increased from a flat $20 weekly to larger payments on a sliding scale, ranging up to $60 a week. Amount will depend on employe's earnings and will average $28 weeky.

Surgical benefits up to $150 are provided. The hospitalization plan will operate under the Blue Cross ward principle.

In addition to a $2000 company-paid life insurance policy covering workers during their period of employment, each retiring worker with 10 years or more of service will receive a paid-up $1000 policy.

And Still There Is No Peace

Commies Who Took Over Czechoslovakia Of Same Stripe As Those Who Took Over Local Trade Unions

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THE BOMB bay door opened and the mightiest explosive yet designed by man hurtled downward toward teeming Hiroshima.

A few days later another atom bomb was sent on its destructive mission—and Nagasaki became a shambles.

Japan soon capitulated. Then we in the U. S., along with millions all over the globe, hailed the ending of war and the beginning of an era of peace.

More than four years have passed since V-J Day—and still we have no peace.

In Washington and in many other places World War III is discussed as if it were inevitable.

And so we are spending billions for defense.

BLAME FOR the unrest, the conflict, the bloodshed that followed World War II must be placed principally on the doorsteps of one nation—Russia.

It was Russia which "liberated" Czechoslovakia against the will of the Czechs, which sent armed forces into Greece, which tried to take over Jugoslavia.

It was Russia which imposed the Berlin blockade and it was Russia which vetoed the United Nations into virtual ineffectiveness.

The Reds tried to take over in Italy, tried to take over in France and did take over in China.

In these conquests and attempted conquests the Communists used most of the totalitarian tactics which Hitler, Mussolini and Tojo employed only a few years earlier.

And yet the Commies in this country, who follow the Russian line without deviation, have the nerve—the guts—to pose as champions of freedom and democracy.

LEADERSHIP of the CIO is being castigated these days because the organization set a housecleaning in motion at its recent national convention.

Philip Murray and his colleagues are being called dictators by men and women who never question the policies of a dictator called Stalin.

And some of the so-called liberals who profess to be anti-Communist are now saying that, perhaps, the CIO set a dangerous precedent when it cracked down on the lefties.

To those sitting on the sidelines and watching the fray the situation may be amusing.

To those of us in the battle most of the criticism is downright disgusting because it is based on lies or on the phony assumption that the Commies aren't really bad boys.

AS CURIOUS as it may seem, there are persons in the U. S. who seem to believe there are two types of Communism—the type practiced by the Russians and the type practiced by some Americans.

That's a bit like believing there are two types of democracy—one which provides freedom and self-determination and one which doesn't.

Communists the world over are controled by the Russian government. It's the same for the Reds who took over Czechoslovakia and the Reds who took over Local Union No. 384 in the U. S.

Both are working for the same thing. Both get their instructions from the same place. Both have the same contempt for the will of the people.

YES, IT'S been more than four years since V-J Day and still we do not have peace in the world.

We're spending huge sums on armament—either in the hope of preventing war by a show of strength or in anticipation that Russia will actually draw us into armed conflict.

The headlines tell about the struggle in China and in Europe. It's a struggle between giant forces—between nations, blocs of nations, between opposing ideologies.

We read about the "super" atom bomb, the new jet planes, the guided missiles.

We either shudder with fear when we think about it or try to shrug the matter off.

Don't get the idea that the "cold war" is being fought by the generals and diplomats alone.

A small but important part of it is being fought in the union halls of America. It's a battle in which everybody who believes in democracy should engage.

Those Building Blocks

The NAM News, which never, never says anything praiseworthy about the CIO and its activities, ran true to form in recent comments about the CIO's legislative program.

It cited certain planks in the program and then declared.

"These items are the building blocks of Communism."

How utterly ridiculous!

But how typical of an organization which has long attempted to hang the Red tag on anything progressive—on anything it opposes.

The NAM News, if it is to be taken seriously, could cause a bit of confusion by such foolish comments.

The CIO at its 1949 convention took a forthright stand in opposition to Communism and set in motion machinery designed to kick the party liners out on their ears.

These actions were widely reported by the press and radio and the public undoubtedly got the impression that the CIO wasn't kidding.

The NAM News "explains" this away by saying:

"Communism is out in the CIO—at least the kind that looks toward Moscow."

And then it makes that "building blocks" crack.

The inference, of course, is that the CIO has created a brand of Communism of its own which is different from Communism as it is generally known.

We, of course, cannot read the minds of NAM News staff members but we have a sneaking suspicion that they hope to hang a convincing Red tag on many of the things the CIO advocates.

If so—and if the idea catches on generally—we can imagine what it will be like when the NAM publication or some newspaper carries a headline saying:

"Communist-Minded CIO Kicks Out Last of Commies."

Oh, brother!

Sixteen Reasons For Repealing T-H

By MAURICE J. TOBIN

Secretary of Labor

(Sixteen reasons for the repeal of Taft-Hartley are given in these excerpts from an article by Labor Secy. Tobin, which contains a summary of his views already given to Congress but brings them up to date.)

AS I TESTIFIED before the Congress, the Taft-Hartley Act has served to restrict the exercise by workers of their right to organize and to bargain collectively. The law was the product of anti-labor bias and hysteria. As Senator Aiken stated on the floor of the Senate on May 12, 1947:

"It is a wonder that members of the Senate can hold their tempers and vote on the bill according to their best judgment because we have been subjected to the most intensive, expensive and vicious propaganda campaign that any Congress has ever been subjected to.

"I do not refer to the propaganda campaign of labor unions, although I hold no brief for that. I refer to a propaganda campaign which has cost well into the millions of dollars. I should not be surprised if the total amount spent in this campaign would amount to $100,000,000.

"I told the Senate last spring that the single March advertising campaign in the newspapers against labor by the National Association of the Manufacturers cost $2,000,000 and that statement has not been contradicted as yet, although it was made a year ago."

THE TAFT-HARTLEY Act must be repealed by the Congress. As The Christian Science Monitor stated in an editorial published on January 17, 1949:

"A lot of water has rolled under the bridge since the wave of big strikes and the framing of the Taft-Hartley Act in 1946 and 1947. A few widely held assumptions have been swept down the stream of experience. It ought to be clear by now that American workers, by and large, want to join unions and do so of their own free will; that, by and large, the rank and file dictate the acts of their leaders and back them up, and that, with very few exceptions, American labor doesn't like political strikes or Communist machinations any more than do Americans in general."

The truth of these statements was attested by the votes of workers in union shop elections conducted by the National Labor Relations Board under the Taft-Hartley Act.

This act has brought confusion to the field of labor relations, limited the scope of collective bargaining, unnecessarily injected the government into labor disputes, and abridged the rights of workers. Among the basic defects of the act are the following:

1 The act's banning of union security agreements mutually beneficial to both labor and management for a period of over 100 years.

2 The special emphasis placed by the act on the use of injunctions to settle labor disputes.

3 The act's removal of the Conciliation Service from the Department of Labor.

4 The broad discretionary power placed by the act in the general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board, making him virtually "a labor czar."

5 The act's provisions for numerous elections which keep employer-employe relations in a constantly unsettled condition.

6 The act's outlawing of peaceful picketing in many situations.

7 The act's restrictions on the check-off.

8 The act's denial of the right to vote in NLRB elections to economic strikers.

9 The act's provisions for employers' petition for representation elections.

10 The act's restrictions on health and welfare funds.

11 The act's surrender of federal jurisdiction where state laws are more restrictive on union security.

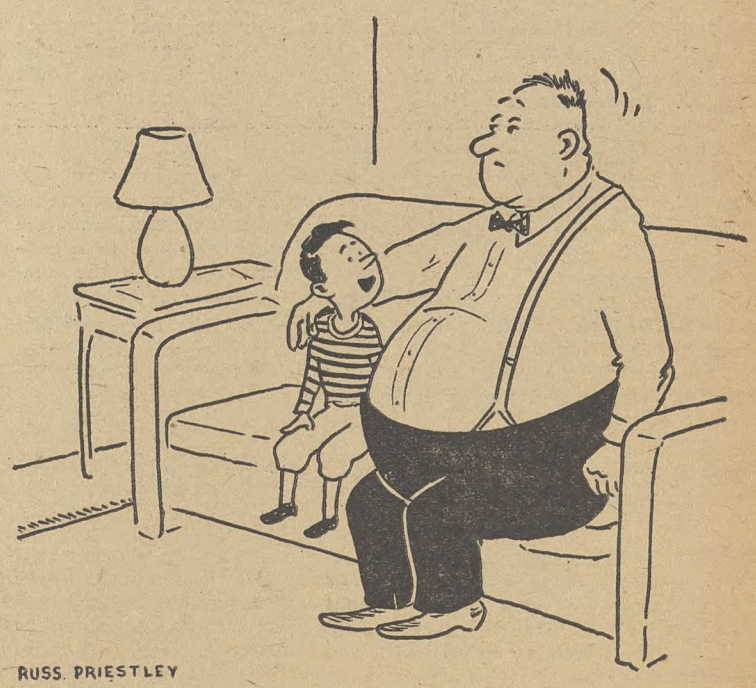
12 The act's broad ban on political contributions and expenditures by labor organizations.

13 The act's provision for damage suits against unions.

14 The act's indiscriminate outlawing of all secondary boycotts whether justifiable or not.

15 The act's provision for mandatory injunctions against certain unfair labor practices.

16 The act's elaborate and inflexible procedures including an 80-day waiting period enforced by injunction in emergency disputes, combined with the prohibition against recommendations by boards of inquiry to assist the parties to settle such disputes.



RUSS PRIESTLEY

"You're my favorite uncle 'cause your not always wanting me to sit on your lap'."

More Than One 'Damyankee' Involved

A TOP OFFICIAL of a CIO union once read a completely phony letter to a radio audience and helped win an NLRB election.

It caused some of the mill workers to chuckle. It made others ask themselves this question: "Now just who is the damyankee?"

It helped stem an overwhelming anti-union tide and knock into a cocked hat that thing often called "regional prejudice."

It helped a lot when help was needed.

And the union official made no pretense that the letter was genuine.

SEVERAL YEARS ago a "typical Southerner"— if there is such a thing—was placed in charge of an organizing campaign at a Southern mill.

About half the men sent in to aid him spoke with soft drawls. Among the others were men from such places as Jersey City, New York City and Pittsburgh.

Despite the half-and-half set-up townspeople who opposed unionism were soon talking about "those fellows from up Nawth who came down here to tell us how to run things."

The mill owners, who had decided to fight the CIO, soon began making capital of the situation.

The Northerners quickly became favorites of many of the workers but the company was able to generate considerable resentment against them.

AS THE ELECTION date drew near the company really began fanning race and religion prejudices.

Talk about "damyankees" was supplemented by talk about "those damn foreigners in the CIO."

The organizers quietly beat down the race prejudice by pointing out that the president of the company was born in Europe and that it was wrong to criticize or condemn a person because of his birthplace.

They were having difficulty, however, in selling the idea that they really weren't "strangers" from "up North" who were interfering with purely local matters.

Even the more friendly mill workers kiddingly referred to some of the organizers as "those fast-talking yankees."

ABOUT 10 DAYS before the NLRB polls were to open the company began sending its employes "love" letters—as they were termed by those who wanted a union.

These messages pointed out that the mill had "been good to" its workers and that it had met standards used in organized mills.

Then the company really cut loose with a scorcher—a letter blasting the CIO for sending Northerners into the South to "cause trouble among contented workers."

A quick check by the organizers convinced them they would lose votes unless something was done to counteract the "damyankee" appeal.

A "council of war" was held and it was decided that a union leader should go on the air and explain the CIO's position.

A CLICKING typewriterd could be heard as the radio program went on the air. Then the union official told his "secretary" he wanted to send a letter to the president of the company.

He dictated:

"This is to Mr. ————, president of ———— ———— —— at New York City.

"Dear Mr. ————:

"This letter is being written in behalf of your employes at ———— because they are unable to make the long trip up North to New York City to talk with you personally . . ."

He mentioned New York City at least a half dozen times before the letter was completed.

Edwin A. Lahey Calls

Saul Alinsky's biography of John L. Lewis should be called "John L. Lewis as Seen by John L. Lewis," according to Edwin A. Lahey, whose column is reprinted here through the courtesy of the Chicago Daily News:

I'VE BEEN CLIPPED. Four dollars for Saul Alinsky's book, "John L. Lewis." I'd like a refund. The book runs 372 pages. That's too much material just to glace a ham.

It seems to me that there are two outstanding facts in the life of Lewis:

1 He has a love of self that was not even surpassed by Adolf Hitler.

2 As president of the United Mine Workers of America, Lewis was an arrogant, seedy and grandiloquent bum, who could neither build a strong union nor cope with the coal operators until Roosevelt and the New Deal came along to help him.

Put these facts together and they spell nuts to Saul Alinsky and his mealy mouthed apologia for one of the most outrageous fakers of our era.

TWO HATES DOMINATE the mind of Lewis in the evening of his life, hatred for Franklin D. Roosevelt and hatred for Phil Murray.

The hatred for Roosevelt became solidified one day in January, 1940, when Roosevelt laughed at a preposterous proposal made by Lewis. The proposal was that Roosevelt take Lewis as a vice-presidential candidate in his third-term campaign.

Through his literary dog-robber, Alinsky, Lewis now offers a denial of this story. I wouldn't believe the denial if Lewis gave it under oath. Why didn't he deny the story while Roosevelt was still alive?

Lewis' hatred for Phil Murray has a very simple foundation. It began when Murray declined to act as a puppet for Lewis after he succeeded Lewis as president of the CIO.

In attempting a rationale of the two great hates of the aging Lewis, Saul Alinsky very wisely pads out the book with statements from Lewis himself, as if to avoid responsibility for his hero's megalomania. The book actually should be called, "John L. Lewis, as Seen by John L. Lewis."

BUT ALINSKY HAS had to write quite a bit of the book himself, and in this task he has displayed a slyness and mendacity that I find hard to forgive.

In the sneakiest fashion imaginable, Alinsky even works in the canard that Phil Murray is a priest-ridden man, who can't make a trade-union decision without taking the problem to the confessional. This is the most contemptible thing in this whole spurious book. It is done so deftly that Alinsky can and will deny that he intended to imply any such thing.

You have to know Alinsky's history to appreciate the hypocrisy involved here.

Alinsky, a professional do-gooder in the stockyards neighborhood, rode into the presence of the great on the coattails of Bishop Bernard J. Sheil of Chicago. I rather think that the packinghouse workers and other CIO members for whom Bishop Sheil fought so courageously in their organizing days would like to know whether he approves of his protege's collaboration with Lewis in the character assassination of Franklin D. Roosevelt and Phil Murray, both good friends of the bishop.

One final observation. The slyest aspect of Alinsky's book is the announcement on the cover that it is "An Unauthorized Biography." All I'll concede on the basis of this declaration is that Lewis didn't put Alinsky on the mine workers' payroll while he was writing the book.

All Sections Represented

Chairmen of IUE-CIO convention committees represented all sections of the new union's jurisdiction.

Head of the Resolutions Committee was Fred Kelley of Local 201, Lynn, Mass. Harry Block, for many years an associate of Chairman Carey at the Philco local in Philadelphia, headed the important Constitution Committee.

Michael Fitzpatrick of Local 601, Westinghouse, at Pittsburgh, headed the Officers Report Committee; Dallas Smith, of the GE local at Fort Wayne, was chairman of the Rules & Order Committee, and Joseph Hawkins from Westinghouse in Mansfield, Ohio, headed the Credentials Committee.

IUE Local Wins Strong Pension Plan At Philco

THE NEGOTIATING committee of the IUE-CIO Philco Local 101—smeared as "company unionists" and "sell-out artists" by the UE—has won for its membership a strong pension plan.

The precedent-shattering agreement in the electrical industry, coming less than six weeks after the formation of the IUE, "clearly demonstrates the aggressive bargaining pattern being followed by the new legitimate union in the electrical field," IUE leaders said.

Approved by the Philadelphia local's Representative Board and by the membership at a meeting Monday, Dec. 12, language of the agreement is being worked out by union and management officials.

James B. Carey, chairman of the IUE administrative committee, hailed the agreement as "epoch-making." Blasting the UE for its failure to win similar gains, he said, "UE's officers and staff were too busy carrying out the orders of the Communist Party to learn how to win benefits for their members.

"I am deeply gratified by this victory of Local 101, not just because it is my own home local—though that naturally makes me proud—but because this offers a beacon light to all other workers in the electrical, radio and machine industry."

An unique feature of the contract is severance pay, which will be paid in event of either discharge or resignation. This is believed to be the first time that this severance provision was obtained in any large industrial plant.

IN ACCORDANCE with the understanding reached with Philco management after a one-week strike last May, the plan follows the CIO pattern on pensions. Philco has agreed that if its 8½c hourly contribution under the plan is more than sufficient for $100 pensions for 65-year-old employes with 25 years' service, the balance of the money may be disposed of in any other fashion the union chooses.

Another benefit to come from the surplus in the fund over pension payments will be provision for death benefits. In the event of an employe's death, the bonds held in his name would go to his family.

PRINCIPAL provisions of the agreement are as follows:

1. The plan is non-contributory, financed entirely by the company.
2. The company agrees to a 10c-an-hour package, of which 1½c is to be credited to improvements made after the strike in May.
3. The company begins 8½c hourly payments on Jan. 1, 1950.
4. Normal retirement age is set at 65 and minimum payments set at $100.
5. The company agrees to allow maximum severance and death benefits feasible after pension payments.
6. Management of the pension trust will be in the hands of an equal number of management and labor representatives.
7. An as yet un-named proportion of the money will be invested in Government bonds in the worker's name.
8. No changes will be made in the provisions of the pension plan until January 1, 1955, except by mutual agreement.
9. In the event of an increase in Social Security payments and benefits, the company will reduce its payments to the fund in the amount of the increase in its tax payments to the government.

APPROVE: Membership meeting of IUE-CIO Local 101 votes to approve the contract, which gives workers a strong pension plan. Prior to the membership meetings, the local's representation board gave its OK to the agreement.

PLEASED: John Graham, a member of IUE-CIO Local 101, is one of those who stands to benefit soon from the pension plan of the Philco contract. Sixty-eight years old, he has 19 years' seniority at the Philco plant.

'It's Simply Arithmetic'

ALL OF THIS is "simply arithmetic," Economist Henry B. Arthur of Swift & Co. told the Senate subcommittee investigating the "spread" between prices paid the farmer and prices the housewife pays for farm products, as he placed before them page after page of tables showing the "low" profits claimed by Swift during recent years.

Earlier in the hearings, Chairman Guy Gillette (D, Iowa) had said the finger of blame for high food prices points to the processors, like Swift, and other big meat packers, and the giant baking companies.

Probing into Swift's figures, Gillette said that "as a farmer, I'm interested in the fact that your profit for $200 worth of hog that you buy has doubled since 1938."

Between 1946 (when OPA was killed) and 1947, Swift's profits as a percent of net income to capital investment doubled it was brought out at the hearing.

During the same two years, the big companies in meatpacking greatly outdistanced the little fellow in profits reaped, according to the Swift economist figures. For the biggest six, profit rate rose from 10.9% of net worth to 14.6% in one year; for the 613 companies with net worth under one million dollars, profit rate declined from 32.8% to 26.3%.

NLRB Sets Dates For Hearings On Petition For GM, Westinghouse Representation Pol

THE NLRB is finally getting into action on the disputes arising between the six-weeks old CIO International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers and the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, recently expelled by the CIO convention.

The NLRB's first fact-finding committee set up for a major company in the electrical industry was to start hearings in Dayton, Ohio, on Dec. 19, with a trial examiner hearing testimony affecting the affiliation of General Motors workers at five large plants.

Dayton was chosen for the hearing, according to NLRB Regional Dir. John A. Pennello, because 20,000 of the 26,000 workers involved are located in the Dayton area.

The board consolidated five petitions from IUE locals for the hearing. They include General Motors Frigidaire Division and GM Delco Products at Dayton; GM Appliance Division at Rochester, N. Y.; Delco Remy Division at New Brunswick, N. J., and the Packard Electric Division, Warren, Ohio.

Hearings on Westinghouse Corp.'s petition for a union election involving 40 of its plants throughout the country have been ordered for Dec. 28 in Pittsburgh. Approximately 55,000 electrical workers will be involved.

The IUE in one of its first actions claimed to be "the true bargaining representative" of the workers who had belonged to UE, and petitioned the NLRB for quick action so their standing could be legally recognized.

Striking Newark Local Says It Was Denied UE District Strike Funds; Now In IUE

IUE-CIO LOCAL 445, on strike at the Natl. Union Radio Corp., Newark, N. J., since Sept. 30, has a story to tell.

It is the story of an alleged sell-out, on account of the treatment which officials of Local 445 say honest trade union members "can expect from political racketeers of the Communist left." Here is the story as told by the local's leaders:

Contract negotiations with the company broke down at the end of September, and the local went on strike. On Oct. 2, company leaflets outlining a "final" offer from management were distributed. The company called for wage decreases up to 25% and elimination of the morning rest period (this in a plant with 80% women workers).

With these union-busting conditions thrust upon them, the local's opposition to management stiffened, and members settled down to what they knew would be a long, tough fight.

THE FIRST move they made was application to the UE District Defense Fund for financial aid. They were told they could not get strike benefits—from a fund into which they had contributed for years — unless they agreed to let UE district officials handle the negotiations. The local rejected the conditional "assistance" offered by the UE, asking only for the money to which they thought they were entitled. UE refused.

Local 445 officials then became the targets of a UE campaign to discredit them in the eyes of the membership, a campaign which failed completely. With the revocation of the UE Charter at the CIO convention in Cleveland, Local 445 voted unanimously to join the new IUE.

Representatives of the local then went before the IUE organizational convention in Philadelphia to ask for contributions from participating delegations. Hampered by legal tie-ups, and for the most part without operating funds because of injunctions obtained by left-wingers, the delegates gave pledges—to be honored as soon as their funds are unfrozen.

THESE circumstances prompted the leaflet-happy UE to begin another smear campaign Their line was that James Carey and the convention had failed to support the Newark strikers, when the truth was that IUE locals couldn't help themselves, apart from aid to sister locals in trouble—because of the legal tactics used by the self-same propagandists.

That's the picture at Local 445. Seven hundred and fifty workers are out on strike, and in a bad way. Leaders say they could have taken the easy path; they could have gone along with the Commies, but they didn't. They are up against a fight on two fronts: against the Commies and against the employer.

They say it ought to be a lesson for people who still think the lefties are good unionists.

CP Unhappy Over CIO Split

THE Communist Party indicated officially last week that it's very unhappy about the CIO.

What the Communists liked least was the decision of the CIO convention to expel the old electrical workers union and to set up constitutional barriers against other Communist-dominated national unions.

The Communist views were set forth in four long articles in the Daily Worker. They were written by John Williamson, the Party's labor secretary, who along with 10 other leaders was recently convicted of conspiracy to teach overthrow of the government by force and violence.

The split in the CIO took place because of some pretty involved international politics—if you accept the Williamson view of things. According to the Communist-dominated unions developed at the CIO convention because:

"AMERICAN imperialism, in seeking to dominate the world, is encountering greater resistance from the workers and people of Europe and Asia . . . The CIO convention was a command performance for the State Department."

If these "commands" are news to CIO leaders and convention delegates, they'll also be interested to know that their action against the CIO's sharp-talking "Moscow wing" was "the logical conclusion of their efforts to split the trade unions abroad to further Wall Street's foreign policy . . ." CIO members may likewise be surprised to hear that "the splitting policy became imperative to bolster the Murray-Reuther class collaboration role in a period of developing economic crisis."

(The alleged class collaboration at Cleveland took place while some half-million steel workers were out on a bitter strike—the only "class collaboration" of which took place when the steel companies signed on the union's terms.)

WILLIAMSON has nice words to say for the UE and other left-wing unions in the course of his articles, which fill up about four pages of Daily Worker newsprint. He also raps the left-wing boys gently over the knuckles.

The left wingers at the CIO convention won Party congratulations for not walking out—they "stayed and slugged it out on each and every issue," just as the authoritative Daily Worker had urged them to do.

But they were dressed down, mildly, for their "one major weakness—they did not bring forward boldly their wage policy and the record of the gains they had won."

EVEN THE UE, which had been the strongest of the left-wing unions, caught a little of the devil from the Party's labor boss.

"It would have strengthened the fight of all the unions under attack, and especially the crucial fight for the UE membership itself," Williamson said, "if the UE delegation had stayed throughout the convention and fought every inch of the way on the convention floor."

Williamson promised outrightly that other left-wing unions which face fact-finding investigations by the CIO hearing committees to Communist domination, "will utilize even these hearings to fight against the expulsions.".

Although obviously pretty pessimistic about the future of the left-wing bloc of union leaders within the CIO, the Communist leader predicted there'll be no new labor organization.

UOPWA Court Action Merely Delays Hearing

THE UNITED Office & Professional Workers of America, charged with consistent following of Communist policies, was to come up before a CIO hearing board Dec. 19.

The UOPWA hearing had originally been scheduled for last Thursday, Dec. 15, but was temporarily postponed after the union went into federal district court to seek an injunction against the proposed hearings.

No injunction had been handed down when the CIO News went to press.

A hearing on similar charges of Communist domination filed against the United Public Workers was also postponed when counsel for that union indicated at the last minute that they, too, would seek a federal restraining order. It was later agreed by UPWA lawyers that they would not seek an injunction of their own, but would wait for the court's judgment in the office union case.

No definite date has yet been set for the Public Workers hearings.

The two unions and their presidents were due to appear before a CIO hearing committee composed of Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers; Pres. Joseph Beirne of the Communications Workers; and Pres. Harry Sayre of the Paper Workers.

In New York, announcement of hearings on the same charges of Communist domination was made in the cases of two other unions.

The Mine Mill & Smelter Workers and its leaders were asked to appear before a second CIO hearing committee on Jan. 4, and the Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers case will be heard on Jan. 6. The proceedings will also be in CIO headquarters in the nation's capital.

The committee to hear charges against the two organizations is made up of Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers; Pres. Joseph Curran of the Natl. Maritime Union; and Secy.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the United Auto Workers.

In addition to the cases involving the four national unions, charges of following Communist policy and or flouting CIO policy have been lodged against the California Industrial Union Council. Hearings in that matter were to open Dec. 19 in Washington before a committee consisting of CIO Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood; Vice-Pres. John J. Moran of the Communications Workers; and John Brophy, director of industrial union councils.

HEARINGS on the UOPWA were postponed from Dec. 15 when counsel filed the injunction request in federal district court in Philadelphia. Named as defendants were Emil Rieve, head of the hearing committee and president of the textile union; and George Craig, CIO regional director in Philadephia.

Craig has had no connection with the CIO Executive Board's decision to investigate the various left wing unions and was not involved in any way in the hearing procedure. Rieve was named apparently on the mistaken theory that he was a resident of Philadelphia—though he has not lived there for six years.

CIO attorneys, in a lengthy brief studied with numerous court decisions, argued that the Philadelphia federal court had no jurisdiction in the case—since office union headquarters are in New York and CIO's national office is in Washington. The CIO brief also argued that the complaint does not cover actions arising under the Constitution or federal statutes.

The hearing procedure, as outlined by Rieve several weeks ago, provides for closed meetings, with no lawyers present. William Steinberg, head of the American Radio Association — who filed the charges against the office union and nine other left-wing CIO affiliates — and other witnesses will be present to press charges; and officers of the UOPWA will be given time to present their defense.

The hearings are closed to the press and to the public.

State CIO Heads Set to Fight for Legislative Plans

By BOB SENSER

THERE'S A saying that as an organization grows older, it loses its energy and grows conservative.

Will this happen to the CIO? Not if a group of men who attended a three-day meeting in Chicago can help it.

Forty-six CIO officials from 30 states got together for the Annual Conference of State Industrial Union Councils. Most of them are presidents and secretary-treasurers of their state councils, and thus have key roles in implementing CIO policy — which means turning convention resolutions into full-blown, living realities.

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey sounded a ringing call for continued militant action in the "great sacred work' of the labor movement.

"CIO's mission," Carey said, "is to be the spearhead for all that is right and decent, to go on fighting even when we receive a bump now and then. We will continue to act as the conscience of our country, because no other group can do as much on questions of racial discrimination, on questions of improving economic conditions, on questions of sound political action.

"We are not going to sit back and think that some other group will do this. It's our job."

That was the overall theme of the conference. CIO Councils' Dir. John Brophy, his assistant, Anthony Smith, and other CIO staff men spelled out the program on civil rights, housing, full employment, foreign relations, unemployment compensation, wage and hour laws, and other legislation.

Sitting around a big U-shaped table, the state officials informally swapped experiences, and made off-the-record disclosures of what their strategies would be during 1950.

"I'm looking for the best year yet," said Maurice McElligott of the Illinois Council. "We're rid of practically all the internal bickering with the so-called left-wing, and now we can really concentrate on our constructive program."

William Lavelle, assistant director of the CIO Legislative Dept., reminded the officials that in 1950 they would have to renew many old battles in Congress. On the top of the list of legislative "musts" he placed Taft-Hartley repeal and civil rights legislation.

He also pointed out that 1950 will bring at least two fights with the real estate lobby—first in January when funds will be needed for the Office of Housing Expediter, and then again later in the year before the rent control law expires.

Tilford Dudley, assistant Natl. PAC director, said that the CIO will continue to push for the Truman health bill. "Many doctors think it's too radical, but I've found that once they get the real facts on it, they often change their minds."

George L-P Weaver, director of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination, warned that by tossing out Communists from office, the CIO has assumed an additional responsibility.

"The Communist Party," he explained, "has planted in the minds of many people the mistaken idea that they are the primary defenders of the rights of all people. We have to demonstrate in a conclusive manner just how hollow their purpose is in civil rights, as well as in other trade union issues."

He urged that in pressing for state fair employment bills and other legislation, the councils get together with the AFL, the League of Women Voters, Americans for Democratic Action, Y.W.C.A., the Natl. Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and other non-Communist liberal groups.

Weaver praised the Indiana Council for its work in convincing Indiana legislators they should pass a law forbidding segregation in Hoosier schools.

Brophy, as chairman of the CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation, said that CIO leaders should whenever possible pay more attention to long-range planning. "We ought to take time out to think more about such matters as city decentralization, world-wide conservation problems, industrial planning."

He emphasized that these subjects are not as lofty as they sound. "Our CIO members," Brophy said, "are in the forefront of those who suffer from big city crowding. Our CIO members are among the first to suffer when there is a shortage of anything. They're among the first to suffer when anything goes wrong because of bad planning in our economy.

"Workers have a tremendous stake in industrial life, and they should have more of a say about what happens in it."

Illinois CIO Maps Civil Rights Drive

TOP PRIORITY for a civil rights drive was pledged by the seventh constitutional convention of the Illinois CIO Council.

The drive so far has met some "temporary setbacks," Abe Brussel, general counsel for the group, told 450 delegates in the three-day Chicago meeting.

"But victory will be ours," he added. "Fair employment eventually will be law in the United States, and it will be law in Illinois. We've been leaders in that fight, and we'll continue to be, both on the state and national levels."

Besides supporting FEPC and other civil rights legislation, the convention urged members not to participate in leagues and tournaments of the "lily-white" American Bowling Congress, and praised CIO leaders for pushing a law suit against ABC for its Jim Crow policies.

SPEAKER after speaker at the convention brought home the point that civil rights and other liberal measures won't happen just by passing resolutions. "Political action" was the most popular phrase — and topic — at the convention.

"We've been active so far in elections for legislative and executive offices," Tilford Dudley, assistant director of the national PAC said. "We've also got to get busy on the judicial level."

The convention found that the Illinois Supreme Court was a good place to start. Delegates called for the selection of candidates "who, in addition to their other qualifications have an adequate understanding of the problems of labor in our modern society." A resolution charged that the Illinois high court's thinking stems back to 1870, when the present outmoded Illinois constitution was adopted.

In its political program, the convention asked concretely for: higher salaries for state legislators and state officials (in order to attract able persons); an end to U.S. Senate filibusters; elimination of the electoral college and substitution of a "direct election" for president and vice-president; abolition of the present Congressional seniority system "by which wisdom is stifled and age takes precedence over ability."

Affiliates were urged to negotiate for primary and general election days as paid holidays.

JOSEPH GERMANO, Steelworker district director and president of the Illinois council, said that the saving of Farm Equipment and Electrical Worker memberships for CIO is not just the job of the Auto Workers and the new International Union of Electrical Workers, respectively. "It's the job of every man in this convention," Germano said.

The convention gave "wholehearted support to UAW-CIO and IUE-CIO."

Germano in his keynote speech criticized "fair weather friends" of the CIO, and cited persons whom the CIO had supported in the 1944 election.

Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) drew the criticism of Dudley who characterized him as "good, honest, intelligent" but "misguided."

BOTH GERMANO and Sec-Treas. Maurice McElligott were re-elected to office for the coming year. Duane (Pat) Greathouse, regional director of the UAW, was named vice president, replacing Philip Weightman, former Packinghouse Workers vice president. Weightman declined the nomination on two grounds: (1) his home local at Swift & Co. is no longer a council affiliate and thus he isn't eligible, (2) he is now on the national CIO staff, and thus he doesn't have time to devote to the vice presidency.

Defeated in his bid for an executive board post was Louis Goldstein of the Fur & Leather Workers, one of the 10 unions awaiting trial on charges of following the Communist Party line.

While the six other board nominees said briefly "I accept," Goldstein took the platform for a speech and for about 15 minutes talked about "autonomy within the CIO." He got so wrapped up in his speech that he forgot to accept, and the chairman had to question him on his intentions as Goldstein was leaving the platform.

Goldstein received only a handful of votes.

Adlai E. Stevenson, governor of Illinois; Martin H. Kennelly, mayor of Chicago; Samuel Cardinal Stritch, Archbishop of Chicago, and Frank Annunzio, director of the Illinois state department of labor, also spoke at the convention.

Just Routine Call, But—

How a routine call to a precinct police station unexpectedly turned up the startling news of the attempted murder of Walter Reuther is told by Robert M. Yoder in a recent issue of the Saturday Evening Post.

"A bored but conscientious United Press man in Detroit," Yoder wrote, was making a series of routine phone calls one night, to the morgue, fire department, hospitals, precinct police stations, etc., to see if anything was doing.

All had the same old answer, "nothing doing," except one police station, where the sergeant added as an afterthought that a squad was out checking some kind of mixup, doubtless minor.

The UP man happened to know "one newsworthy resident of the street the sergeant mentioned—the labor leader, Walter Reuther." So he phoned Reuther's home and asked: "What happened around there?"

"They shot Walter through a window in the kitchen," he was told.

That's how the UP, Yoder wrote, "was 15 minutes ahead with a bulletin on the attempted assassination, in a quiet home, of one of the country's most strategic union leaders, and one of the biggest Detroit stories of the year."

Mrs. FDR's Book Shows She's A Real democrat

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

"I have the rare privilege and great honor of presenting a gracious lady, one of God's nobel women, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt," CIO Pres. Philip Murray said in introducing the wife of the President of the United States as a speaker at the 1944 CIO convention in Chicago.

The delegates gave Mrs. Roosevelt a tremendous ovation when she finished speaking, as they had done the year before when she made her first CIO address at the national convention in Philadelphia.

Today, Mrs. Roosevelt is a private citizen, but if she were again to speak before a CIO convention, there is no doubt that she would get just as big a hand as she did when she spoke as the President's wife in 1943 and 1944.

For Mrs. Roosevelt is a distingushed woman in her own right. The fact that she happened to be the wife of a great American President made it possible for millions of Americans who might not otherwise have heard of her to find it out.

THE YEARS since FDR's death in 1945 have offered convincing proof that Phil Murray's description of Mrs. Roosevelt did not turn out to be just platform applesauce.

His sentiments have been echoed countless times since throughout the nation and to the far corners of the world. No other American woman has been held in higher public esteem in her lifetime.

She has also had powerful enemies and although the storm that used to rage over her head has died away and she has been left in comparative peace to persue her official work with the United Nations and to write her syndicated column, there are still many who have no idea why she is regarded as a great woman and an outstanding figure of our times.

The answer can be found in Eleanor Roosevelt's new book, "This I Remember," in which she tells the story of the years she spent in the Governor's mansion in New York and in the White House.

THE BOOK has been widely acclaimed by critics as adding invaluable first-hand material to the history of our times, and contributing to a better understanding of one of the nation's greatest and most controversial figures.

Mrs. Roosevelt is not a literary genius. There are no breath-taking descriptions or lovely flights of the imagination in the book. It keeps at a pedestrian pace. And yet it has a unique flavor and color all its own.

Sometimes this comes from the strange mixture of Mrs. Roosevelt's concern with housewifely affairs and her wise observations about affairs of state. Such matters are not commonly combined in books dealing with the important public events that Mrs. Roosevelt tells about, and the effect is a bit startling at first.

But as the story unfolds you come to realize more and more how important a part the personal and household persuits of the First Lady play in political life. It just hasn't been written up adequately before.

How Mrs. Roosevelt managed the White House and behaved at teas and receptions; how and where she went and everything she did in fact, was often used as political criticism against the President.

AS A GUEST SPEAKER at the Natl. CIO convention held in Chicago in November 1944, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt is given a cordial welcome by CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

Mrs. Roosevelt relates with amusement some of the criticism she received. One letter from a woman said:

"Instead of tearing around the country, I think you should stay at home and personally see that the White House is clean. I soiled my white gloves yesterday morning on the stair-railing. It is disgraceful."

Mrs. Roosevelt explained that the stairs were wiped every 15 minutes on such occasions, but that the great crowd of people passing down the stairs kept the rails soiled.

ANOTHER letter took her to task because the squirrels on the White House ground did not look well. Mrs. Roosevelt made inquiries from the zoo about the squirrels and when told that they were being fed too many peanuts by visitors, she arranged for them to get the supplemental diet the man at the zoo recommended.

As these stories and others she tells show, Mrs. Roosevelt treated all criticism she received, however petty or malicious, with courteous concern. This was an important part of her unusual conception of her duties and responsibilities to the public as the President's wife.

For Mrs. Roosevelt takes her democratic principles seriously. No sign of snobbery slips out unaware in her narrative. She is a natural-born democrat who has instinctively lived up to what she believes even when moving in circles where such ideas were regarded with marked distaste.

Many she met in those circles regarded it as a new and cockeyed theory that the government had a responsibility to the people.

Others she associated with in high government circles were fake liberals who had the habit, when professing to believe in some progressive government measure for the benefit of the people, of defending their opinion apologetically by explaining that in the long-run the measure would benefit the well-to-do.

MRS. ROOSEVELT is no phony liberal. Her honesty, courage and sincerity ring true in "This I Remember." She sticks up for her ideas vigorously, although always with courteous consideration for her opponents, and insists on living up to what she believes, in spite of sneers or well-meaning protests. She had no opposition from her husband on this score.

Once she scandalized certain elements by giving a garden party at the White House for girls from a reform school in Washington, most of whom were Negroes. Another time she shocked the White House staff by bringing an army private, whom she met casually at the railroad station, home to lunch at the White House.

There is nothing in Mrs. Roosevelt's book to add to the hate and bitterness now rampant in the world. No chatty stories spiced with malice are related.

However, she herself was many times the victim of slanderous gossip cooked up at cocktail parties or other high society gatherings and spread throughout the nation by a few shoddy columnists who would stoop to anything for a story.

Some of these garbled tales are cleared up in her book frankly and without bitterness. You can almost see her intelligent eyes crinkle in amusement as you read her account of them.

ONE OF THE outstanding qualities of Mrs. Roosevelt's book is her kindly and tolerant judgment of people. "This I Remember" is rich with penetrating character studies of prominent figures on the national and international scene as observed through the eyes of a wise, fair-minded and intelligent woman.

Although Mrs. Roosevelt was born to the purple, a daughter of a rich and famous American family, niece of one former president and wife of another, and had great cultural advantages all her life which would seem to have given her much confidence in herself, she confesses that she has remained shy most of her life.

This may help explain why she was able to observe people with so much detachment and wise discernment. If she had been an aggressive woman, very sure of herself, and concerned with pushing her own ego forward, she could not have seen so much.

SOMETIMES her remarks resemble the sensible and shrewd observations heard from the lips of clever working class mothers who have learned their wisdom the hard way.

Mrs. Roosevelt is not a Pollyanna by any means. She does not say nice things about people indiscriminately and her preferences stand out plainly, but she tempers her criticism with an explanation of what happened to the people she tells about to make them what they were or do what they did.

One of her most unflattering comments, perhaps, concerns some of the "cabinet wives" who were totally untouched and bored by Mrs. Roosevelt's efforts to get them interested in such dull subjects as the slums of Washington. Her good friend, Mrs. Elinor Morgenthau, was an outstanding exception.

Of all the people Mrs. Roosevelt writes about, the portrait of the clever, hard-working and intensely loyal Louis Howe, the "gnome-like" man who loomed so large in the life of both Mr. and Mrs. Roosevelt, stands out most vividly. He crops up frequently in the book, for his fine hand was behind some of President Roosevelt's most important early policies.

(Mrs. Roosevelt says Howe called his faithful secretary, "Rabbit," probably because she hopped around in such a lively fashion fulfilling his wishes, and "looked so gentle and defenseless.")

Even after his death in 1936, Howe's influence continued to be felt. Mrs. Roosevelt writes that after Howe died, "Franklin never had a political adviser who would argue with him and still give him unquestioned loyalty." Comparing Howe with Harry Hopkins later, she says, "my husband found some of the companionship and loyalty Louis had given him, but not the careful analysis of each situation."

Although Mrs. Roosevelt feels that she made few new friends during the years in the White House, she did really get to know well some of the renowned visitors in spite of the formal atmosphere under which they met.

(Even the family's dogs, until Fala came, couldn't take the White House atmosphere, says Mrs. Roosevelt.)

MRS. ROOSEVELT feels that the fact that she was a "worrier" who was afraid something might go wrong at social affairs often kept her from relaxing and enjoying herself as a hostess as much as she might have.

In her portrait gallery are both full length and miniature studies of an odd mixture of personages, ranging from kings, queens and other foreign notables, to labor leaders, big shots in U. S. industry and government, stage and screen actors and actresses, young radicals and plain Americans.

An error somehow slipped into Mrs. Roosevelt's account of some of the notable women she met. She mentions "the late Mrs. Mary McLeod Bethune, educator and head of the Negro Youth Division of the National Youth Administration."

Mrs. Bethune is very much alive. Several weeks ago she appeared in the news when Pres. Truman presented her with an award for outstanding humanitarian work, upon her retirement from the presidency of the National Council of Negro Women which she founded.

MRS. ROOSEVELT was not content merely to meet people, however. She went constantly to see things for herself, visiting slums, hospitals, penal institutions, coal mining areas and other depressing places, always calling public attention to the evils or inadequacies she found.

Her comings and goings about the United States, and during the war, to Europe and the Pacific, aroused constant criticism and much more or less good-natured kidding. "Here comes Mrs. Roosevelt," became a national joke.

A very large part of "This I Remember" naturally deals with the life and characteristics of her husband, his policies and advisers, and the important events so vital to the welfare of America which he helped mold. It is her intelligent and first-hand observations of these matters that will make Mrs. Roosevelt's book valuable source material for historians for many years to come.

CIO members who read the book will discover that Eleanor Roosevelt is a woman working people can understand.

Reuther Sees French Policy Aiding Reds

THE FRENCH government is directly or indirectly playing into the hands of the Communists.

That was the charge made by Walter P. Reuther, head of the CIO United Auto Workers, at a press conference in Paris. He visited the French capital shortly after the end of the Free World Labor Congress in London, where he was a leading member of the CIO delegation.

"I am unable to understand how the French government can freeze wages and not prices," Reuther said. "This is intolerable and as long as it continues, will be a help to communism in France."

Reuther's comments echoed the sentiments of French workers, who have been agitating for a more equitable national policy. Prices have far outstripped wages and caused severe hardship to French workers and their families.

"One of the reasons why the Communists are so strong in France, where they have virtual majority control of unions, is that French industrial workers in particular are not getting their fair share of the national wealth," the UAW leader said.

ASKED FOR a comparison of European and American union thinking and actions, Reuther suggested that "one of the real weaknesses of the European unions is that they are continually fighting against ideological windmills.

"In our struggle against Wall Street reaction, we have learned something about fighting capitalism in a practical sense. Our program is as progressive, if not more so, than any European one; it is simply not based on ideological issues but on humanitarian ones."

Reuther voiced concern that French workers are not receiving their fair share of Marshall Plan aid to France.

"The theory that if you give enough at the top, it will trickle down to the bottom is all wrong," he said. "We shall have to drill some big holes in the bottom."

Big Church Group Will Fight Bias

A church council representing 28 million Protestants has voted to help Negroes fight racial segregation. The Executive Committee of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ, meeting in Atlanta, voted to intervene before the U. S. Supreme Court in the case of a Texas Negro who wants to study in a white state university.

(In Washington Rep. Sam Hobbs (D, Ala.) filed a brief with the Supreme Court asking it to uphold racial segregation in a railroad case.)

AFL Union Back TWU

BRT Head Reprimands Tampa Strikebreakers

SOME MEMBERS of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen who have been acting as armed strikebreakers in the Tampa, Fla., bus strike have been severely censored by BRT Pres. W. P. Kennedy in Cleveland.

The six-week-old CIO Transport Workers' walkout against Tampa Transit Lines has received the indorsement of the executive board of Tampa AFL Central Trades and Labor Assembly.

In a telegram to local BRT officials, Kennedy declared, "Brotherhood members are not permitted to interfere with the strike by contracting organization, Transport Workers Union and Tampa Transit Lines, or enter service while strike continues. Those doing so are subject to penalty provided in our law."

L. P. Alford, local chairman of BRT Tampa Lodge 851 declared the action of the drivers in returning to work "is unauthorized by our brotherhood.

"The Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen recognizes the TWU as the bargaining agent for the employes of the Tampa Transit Co. and those who are members of the BRT should adhere to and abide by the rules of the bargaining agent.

"We (Local 851 members) feel to a man that these people are a discredit to our organization."

He said the strikebreakers had asked his office to get permission from national headquarters to return to work "but they were denied such authorization and were told to acquiesce to the instructions of TWU officials."

But operations have remained on a skeleton basis since the BRT members returned two weeks ago. Between 35 and 40 drivers are reporting for runs under an emergency order from Mayor Hixon, according to Tampa newspapers. The company claims one third of the normal schedule has been maintained during peak hours. No effort has been made to operate the buses after dark.

Meanwhile, circulation of a handbill bearing the Communist Party indorsement of the strike was repudiated by CIO Reg. Dir. Charles L. Cowl of Tampa who said, "CIO wants nothing from the Communists, except to be left alone.

"It was obviously a last-ditch attempt to attach the Communist stigma to the CIO in Florida," Cowl declared. "There is absolutely nothing the CIO wants from the Communist party—and this means members, sympathy, financial aid or moral support," he added.

TWU is seeking to have wages increased from $1.10 to $1.35 an hour and to have adjustment of grievances involving toilet facilities and lunch periods on long runs. The company has repeatedly turned down the union offer to submit the issues to an impartial arbitrator.

Hillman Foundation Plans News, Radio, Fiction Awards

TRUSTEES of the million dollar Sidney Hillman Foundation, named after the late president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers have allocated $42,500 for scholarships, grants-in-aid, merit awards and other prizes for 1950.

A $10,000 grant-in-aid was made to the social science department of the University of Chicago, covering a two-year period, to make a thorough analysis of school and college textbooks for the purpose of rooting out the teaching of prejudice and discrimination.

For the first time, in 1950, the foundation will set up Hillman prize awards, which will be an annual event, in daily and labor journalism, the national magazine field, radio and television, fiction, theatre and motion pictures.

Five hundred dollars each will be awarded for the best series of newspaper articles, the best editorial, the best magazine piece, the best radio or television broadcast, the best work of fiction, the best play and film "dealing with a labor theme and honestly portraying the labor struggle."

Jacob S. Potofsky, president of ACW and the Foundation, said that $1,000 has been set aside for the annual Hillman award for meritorious achievement, the recipient to be announced later.

The Foundation has voted $18,000 in scholarships for 1950, to be distributed as follows:

Brandeis University, Waltham, Mass., $2,000; Howard University, Washington, D. C., $2,000; New School for Social Research, New York City, $2,000; New York State School of Industrial and Labor Relations, Cornell University, Ithaca, N.Y., $2,000; Roosevelt College, Chicago, $5,000, and the Chaim Weizmann Institute, Rehovoth, Israel, $5,000.

For the Sidney Hillman Tool Fund in Israel, which helps rehabilitate refugees and turn them into skilled artisans, $5,000 was appropriated. Another $5,000 was set aside for the annual Hillman lecture series, the lecturers to be announced later.

Learners' Rates To Be Revised

To meet the new situation created when the 75c minimum-wage law goes into effect Jan. 25, 1950, Labor Secy. Maurice Tobin has taken steps to revise learners' rates in the textile and hosiery industries.

Employers in the textile industry have asked Wage-Hour Administrator William R. McComb to decide whether hourly rates under 75c should be allowed for learners. Under the law, the Wage-Hour Administration can set a lower rate, with strict limitations on the number of learners who can be employed, and the length of time they're considered learners. Hearings on the proposal will take place Dec. 19.

For the hosiery industry, McComb has proposed a minimum rate from 59c to 71c, depending on the occupation of the learner, with learning periods up to 480 hours (three months) and up to 960 hours (six months) depending on the occupations and previous experience of the learner. No more than five per cent of the working force could be classified as learners except where it's proven new plants need a larger number.

Kroll Sees Victories In South, West

A politically resurgent South and Far West will give the Fair Deal 20 additional Congressmen in 1950, Jack Kroll, chairman of the CIO Political Action Committee, predicted at a general executive board meeting of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers in Atlantic City.

Kroll, who recently toured those sections, said that liberal forces would pick up six additional seats in the Senate.

The Amalgamated board, with Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky in the chair, promised all-out aid to CIO-PAC's voluntary dollar drive in the 1950 political contests.

Kroll, who is also an Amalgamated vice-president, said he was told by local labor, farmer and liberal forces in Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Virginia and elsewhere in the South that resentment is growing rapidly against the coalition of Dixiecrats and "Northern, reactionary Republicans."

"I was told," he informed the Amalgamated board, "that a number of Southern Dixiecrats would be retired from the House and Senate because they parade as Democrats and vote like Republicans."

THE CIO-PAC chairman predicted the development of a real two-party system, in the South, consisting of Democrats and "Dixiegops."

Kroll cited the voting record of Rep. James Davis, Fifth Georgia District, as an example of those who run as Democrats and vote as Republicans. During 1949, he said, Congressman Davis, he was told in Atlanta, voted 35% with the Democrats, and 65% with the Republicans.

Of his own State, Ohio, Kroll reported:

"If all the people, who disagree with Bob Taft's domestic and foreign policies, register and vote, he is a defeated man."

Farmers, labor and the liberals are all opposed to the re-election of Sen. Taft, he said.

EVERYWHERE he went, in the South as elsewhere, he found unified labor political action, on every local and state level, among the CIO, AFL and the Railway Brotherhoods. He said that labor's political unity would be even more solidified in 1950.

Frank Rosenblum, Amalgamated secretary-treasurer, announced that the entire Amalgamated organization is being mobilized to raise voluntary PAC dollars for 1950.

Hyman Blumberg, Amalgamated executive vice president; Vice Presidents Murray Weinstein, Louis Hollander, Anthony Froise and Abraham Chatman cited labor's election victories in New York City and State this year. Similar reports were heard from Vice President Charles Weinstein, Philadelphia, and other board members who said the Fair Deal forces would go on to even greater victories in 1950.

Robeson Records Shunned in Prague

Paul Robeson is hailed by the Commies in Prague, Czechoslovakia as a hero. But as a musician he rates well below trumpeter Harry James. A concert of James records jammed a hall to overflowing, but Robeson records in the same hall were heard by a half-empty house the same day.

Ruttenberg On Hoover Plan:

Let's Not Sacrifice Efficiency For Savings

STANLEY Ruttenberg, CIO director of Education and Research, last week urged the Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report not to put a false emphasis on savings in telling of the benefits to be obtained by re-organization of the Federal government.

Despite Ruttenberg's warnings, speakers at the conference, including both Dr. Robert L. Johnson, President of Temple University and committee chairman, and former President Herbert Hoover, stressed savings which could be affected by the Hoover Commission report.

Ruttenberg told the conference held by the committee in Washington last week:

"The committee should emphasize to the public the necessity for reorganization of government activities, the need for improved efficiency and elimination of waste and duplication, and leave to Congress the determination as to how much money can be saved through these operations."

HE REMINDED his audience: "At no point in the reportings of the commission can there be found estimates of the amount of savings that would ensue from the adoption of the recommendations."

Ruttenberg said that "instead of having actual dollar savings it might be found more advisable to have more and better service for the same amount of dollar expenditure. . ."

He said that the commission's recomendations that the Labor Dept. be strengthened and that a Welfare Dept. be created were of particular concern to the CIO.

The first session of the 81st Congress strengthened the Labor Dept. by increasing its appropriation and by transferring the U. S. Employment Service and Unemployment Insurance Bureau to the department, but the CIO at its Cleveland convention called for additional Congressional action to increase the usefulness of the agency.

Congress rejected Reorganization Plan No. 1 to create a Welfare Dept., which President Truman submitted.

"IT WAS unfortunate," Ruttenberg said, "that an important group such as this committee did not intervene in support of the Hoover Commission's Report. We sincerely hope and trust that the committee will join with us in strongly urging Congress to put into effect these recommendations."

Lewis G. Hines, special representative of the AFL, also called for the enactment of these two recommendations.

There were "three areas," Ruttenberg said, where "small but highly worthwhile economies" may result from adoption of Hoover Commission recommendations. He listed these as:

"1. Avoidance of overlapping in maintenance and operation, such as the National Defense Establishments.

"2. The stabilization of personnel to minimize the waste due to excessive turnover. This could be the reintegration of personnel management with general management.

"3. The elimination of competition in public works construction projects, such as the current problem between the Army Engineers and the Bureau of Reclamation.

Education Two-Way Street, Says Packing Union Aide

LOUIS F. KRAINOCK, newly appointed education director of the CIO Packinghouse Workers, hopes to develop "an education program with muscles."

Formerly a CIO organizer in the south, a Marine lieutenant, a teacher and a TVA official, Krainock is dead set against the notion that education directors tell union members what they have to learn.

"Education works both ways," he said between long drags on his pipe. "We plan to use the knowledge and experience of the packinghouse workers in the UPWA program. The people who work in the plants know more about their own problems than anyone can tell them.

"Our job," he continued, "is to pool that knowledge, shape it up and pass it on to the rest of the union members. An education program with muscles is what I hope to develop. In other words, the program should help build the union if it is to be worth anything."

KRAINOCK WHO was appointed recently by the UPWA executive board to head up the union's educational work, is a native of a coal mining town in central Illinois, and was virtually born into the labor movement. His father was an early organizer for the Mine Workers Union and the bitter 1921 mine strike made a vivid impression on young Louis' mind.

The late Van A. Bittner, director of the CIO Organizing Committee, appointed Krainock as an area director immediately after his discharge from the Marines in 1946. He worked on the union drive at the atomic energy plant at Oak Ridge, Tenn., and organized throughout the central part of the state in behalf of various CIO unions.

Krainock enlisted as a Marine private in 1942, and was commissioned first lieutenant from the ranks. As a combat platoon leader, he saw heavy action at the Marianas and at Saipan, where he was wounded and sent back to the States.

WHEN HE recovered from his wounds, he was assigned to Camp Lejeune, N. C., where he worked on developing teaching techniques and visual aids for teachers. He was also an instructor on tactics and organization. Later he was detailed to Marine headquarters at Washington, where he supervised an employes' training program.

Before his military service, Krainock spent seven years with the Tennessee Valley Authority at Knoxville, Tenn., starting as a messenger when the project first began and reaching the position as senior administrative assistant in charge of personnel training programs.

Secy. Snyder Indirectly Slaps Monopoly Control

By DONALD WOODS

A STRONG argument for federal regulation of big, highly concentrated industries where there is evidence of monopoly control was made to President Truman, by Commerce Secy. Sawyer, indirectly, in a report last week on the need for regulation of transportation industries.

Sawyer's report dealt entirely with transportation, but the principles he spelled out for measuring the need of regulating such industries apply with equal force to all American industry—particularly the heavy goods industries which are dominated by a few big companies—such as steel, electrical equipment, aluminum, and automobiles.

The most important guide-post in determining whether an industry should be regulated, Sawyer said, was whether it would contribute to "preservation for the using public of adequate, low-cost and nondiscriminatory service."

"Decisions with respect to the extension or relaxation of regulatory controls," the cabinet officer added, "should be made on the basis of the net and ultimate effect upon the transportation user. A second standard is that, in those cases where free competition is possible, competition is more likely than regulation to produce the maximum service at the lowest possible cost."

FREE COMPETITION, Sawyer added in a footnote, means a situation "in which activities of any industrial supplier of service have only a negligible effect upon the total volume of service rendered and the price which is charged. The best example in the transportation field is tramp shipping."

Sawyer's report was the greatest boost yet provided for current efforts in Congress to do something about the bigness in business.

What this cabinet officer, who has been known as a conservative, said, in effect, was that where a few big companies dominate an industry there is not free competition and there should, therefore, be federal regulation.

Spelling out what he was talking about in terms of the transportation industries, Sawyer said:

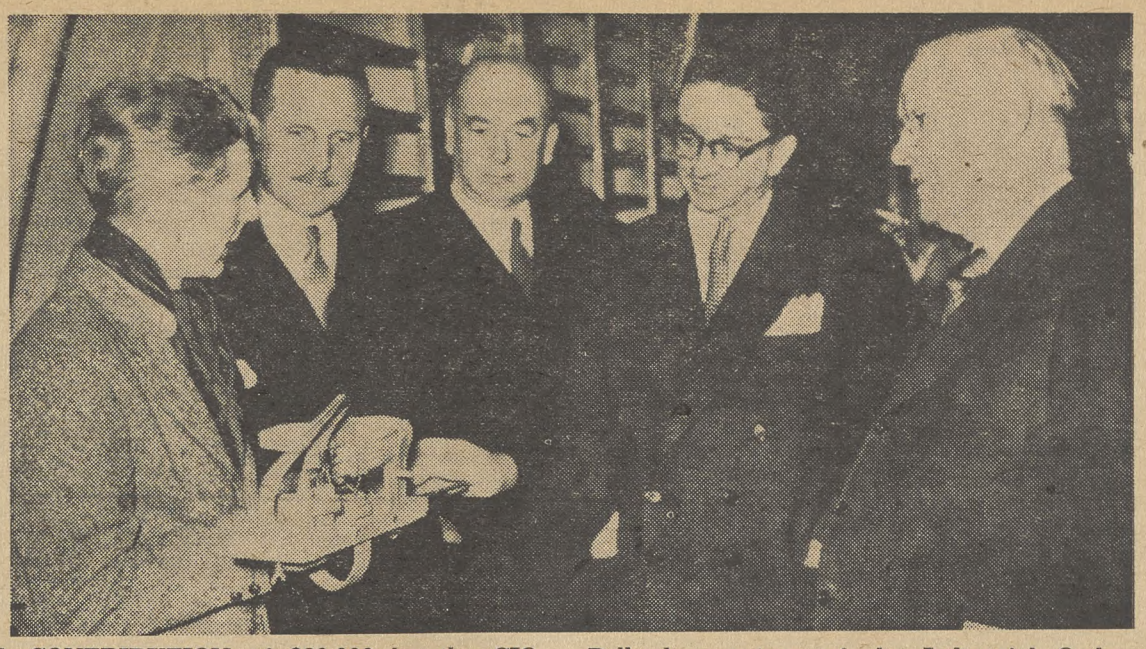
"Translating these general statements into concrete terms, it is obvious that with federal and state governments providing airways, highways, and waterways, the prospect of effective competition among air carriers, highway carriers and waterway carriers is far more real than in the case of railroads or pipelines where entirely new facilities of great cost would be required if additional competitors entered the field.

"In the case of air carriers, highway carriers and water carriers, often all that is needed to create additional service is to supply additional planes, trucks, ships, or barges. Such facilities as railroads and pipelines come much closer to being natural monopolies from the standpoint of particular shippers who use the service than do other carriers where the basic facilities are available to all. Accordingly, continued regulation of these types of carriers is justified in the public interest.

"A lesser degree of regulation may be required in the case of other types of carriers where a greater degree of competition is likely to prevail. It is possible, for example, that in the absence of regulation by the ICC, competition between truck lines might in and of itself furnish to the user of trucking services all the protection he needs against exorbitant rates and inadequate service, although rates would undoubtedly be less stable and protection against loss less sure than under regulation. Many users of railroad services, particularly if they are located on a single railroad, have no such protection through resort to competing railroads and must accordingly be protected through regulation."

SAWYER ALSO reported to the President that federal regulation of industry was much more practical and effective in industries where the number of companies to be regulated was small, than in industries where there were a great many competing companies, such as in trucking.

The Commerce Department, which under proposed government reorganization plans would have control of transportation agencies, proposed in Sawyer's report a reexamination of the effectiveness of regulatory control over railroads and pipelines by the ICC.



A CONTRIBUTION of $80,000 by the CIO Community Services Committee helped make possible the Industrial Orthopedic Society Rehabilitation Center near Bedford, England, which was opened recently. An instructor at the center (l.) is explaining some modern equipment to visitors (l. to r.): Julius C. Homles, American minister in London; Percy Pollard, secretary of the Industrial Orthopedic Society; Pres. Harry Martin of the CIO Newspaper Guild, who is ECA information director in Paris and special adviser to Ambassador at Large Harriman, and AFL Pres. William Green. The AFL contributed jointly with the CIO to the project, which aids industrial workers in need of treatment.

Haywood Hits Fascist Spain

STRONG condemnation of the fascist government of Spain was voiced by CIO Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood at the recent Free World Labor Congress in London.

A member of the CIO delegation to the 10-day meeting, which set up the new Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, Haywood told the 250 delegates:

"We will resist any attempt to bring about recognition of Franco, and we will support any attempt to restore democracy to that country.

"Rest assured, my Spanish brothers, that your fellow workers in the United States will stand with you."

The ICFTU went on record "as opposing the granting of any assistance to Spain until such time as democracy and full trade union rights have been restored, and the workers are once more able to make their contribution to the country's recovery."

The ICFTU also opposed bringing Spain into the Marshall Plan or Atlantic Pact programs.

"Like all fascists, the Spanish Falangists cannot be regarded as reliable partners for the democracies of the world, and should therefore not be included in any pact of mutual assistance," the resolution said.

Co-op Conscious

Britain is much more co-op conscious than the United States. One fourth of its civil population is registered with co-op societies for milk, sugar, butter and cheese; almost one-quarter for bacon, and more than one fifth for coal. The societies are expecting even greater percentages for 1950.

Organizationally Speaking

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

(In the absence of Vice-President Haywood, who went to the London conference for the establishment of the Intl. Conefedration of Free Trade Unions, his column is compiled from field reports.)

Driving toward the objective of 100% membership of all eligible employes, members of the Mountain States Division of the Communications Workers of America last month staged a campaign which netted 900 new members.

Typical of the organizational difficluty faced by the CIO's newest affiliate, the campaign reached out into towns, villages and isolated areas throughout the Rocky Mountain region.

CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda reported that workers who never before had met a CIO member are now enrolled in CWA-CIO. Officers of the division are LeRoy Purdy, President; Duke Smith, Vice-president; and Helen Newton, Secretary-Treasurer.

CIO Reg. Dir. George DeNucci reports that in a representation election held for the cafeteria workers of the General Motors Corp., Columbus, Ohio, these workers voted 2 to 1 in favor of the UAW-CIO. In a union shop election held at the Jaeger Machine Co., Columbus, Ohio, the workers voted 265 for the USA-CIO and 79 against.

CIO Reg. Dir. Fullerton Fulton reports that in a representation election held at the International Harvester plant, Minneapolis, Minn., the workers voted 84 to 16 in favor of the UAW-CIO.

CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda reports that a consent election was held at the Wyco Pipe Line, Casper, Wyo., and the workers voted as follows: eligible 32; Oil Workers-CIO 22; Central State Petroleum Union Independent 4; and no union 6. The organizational drive was carried on by Intl. Rep. George E. Jenkins.

CIO Reg. Dir. Edward McCrone reports that in a representation election held at the Dunkirk Silver Smith Co., Meriden, Conn., the workers voted 24 to 1 in favor of the Playthings, Jewelry and Novelty Workers-CIO. CIO Field Rep. William Quill was in charge of the campaign.

CIO Reg. Dir. Loren J. Houser reports that in a representation election held at the Sherman White & Co. Creamery, Lafayette, Ind., the workers voted 29 to 4 in favor of the Packinghouse Workers-CIO. This campaign was conducted by Dir. Paul Elston of the Packinghouse Workers, and the CIO Regional Office.

United Rubber Workers District Director Floyd Gartrell reports that the URW-CIO won a representation election by a unanimous vote at the Kresco Manufacturing Co., Los Angeles, Calif. URW Field Rep. E. E. Spencer was in charge of the drive and was resposible for the unanimous vote for the URW-CIO.

UAW-CIO Reg. Dir. C. V. O'Halloran reports that the UAW-CIO won a representation election by a 90% majority at the Eason Grinding Co., Los Angeles, Calif. Intl. Rep. Dick Cartwright was in charge.

A strong majority for the United Furniture Workers-CIO Local 262 was scored in a union shop authorization vote at the San Francisco (Cal.) Simmons Plant. The vote was 848 to 26.

'Too Inexperienced'

Some employers just can't resist the temptation to write letters to their employes during an organizing campaign.

Wright Rubber Manufacturing Co. moved into Houston, Texas, with a plant employing 260.

CIO Organizing Committee representatives were met with eager response from Wright employes. A petition was filed.

Management apologized for its low wages in a letter to its employes. It said the workers were "too inexperienced"—yet loaded them down with additional work.

"We're not experienced enough to get regular pay, but the company wants us to do the work of two experienced men," the employes answered.

An election was held by NLRB. The vote: CIO Rubber Workers 182, IAM 37, "neither" 23.

Rent Control Law Is Upheld

The 1949 rent control law is constitutional, the Suprene Court has ruled, 8 to 0. That means that at least until June 30, 1950, there will be this protection for tenants from the greed of landlords.

The court reversed a decision by Federal Judge Elwyn R. Shaw, in Chicago, holding the 1949 rent law unconstitutional because he said the "local option" provision was an illegal delegation of congressional authority.

Union Membership At Peak In Britain

Total membership of British trade unions reached an all-time high at the end of 1948, passing the nine million mark. This is the third succesive year, says the Ministry of Labor, that the figure has exceeded previous records.

Estimated number of persons in civil employment in September of this year were a little more than 22 million. The total working force, including the unemployed, the armed services, and those on leave, numebred about 23 million.

Women comprised only some 1.7 million of the total trade union membership.

British Labor Wins 35th Contest

For the 35th straight time the British Labor Party has won a by-election caused by the death or retirement of a Labor member of Parliament. George Craddock, Labor candidate, defeated John L. Windle, conservative, 23,335 to 19,313, in the contest for the vacant seat in the South Bradford District.

Battle For Fair Deal Re-opened On Capitol Hill

IN ONE OF the most important Congressional hearings for many years, the Truman Administration has thrown its full resources into a battle to help the nation's 10 million families making less than $2000 a year.

Labor Secy. Tobin, Assistant Commerce Secy. Blaisdell, and Acting Federal Security Administrator Thurston carried the ball for the Administration in hearings before Sen. Sparkman's (D, Ala.) subcommittee of the Joint Congressional Economic Committee.

Tobin dramatized the plight of the 10 million families and 6 million individuals living on less than $2000 a year by noting that a special study last year by the Bureau of Labor Statistics showed it cost a family of four from $3000 to $3450 to live modestly in a big city today. A large number of the 10 million families concerned live in such cities.

Blaisdell and Tobin both testified that the main attack on poverty is through maintaining a high and expanding national economy as charted by the full employment law. But they both called for additional supplemental measures, most of them already a part of President Truman's Fair Deal program.

THIS SEEMED to infuriate Rep. Rich (R., Pa.), a member of the committee. He asked how the government could help the small families if the government continued to have deficits and went broke. He accused Blaisdell of advocating continued deficit financing.

Blaisdell replied that whether he favored deficit financing depended upon the conditions. He noted that Congress (the Republican 80th) had created the deficit by cutting taxes at a time when he opposed such action. Now, he said, he would prefer a balanced budget, but whether it could be achieved in the light of the demands on government here and abroad he could not say.

Sparkman denied Blaisdell had advocated continued deficit spending. Rich insisted he had. Blaisdell flatly contradicted the Congressman, asserting: "I have not."

Sen. Flanders (R., N. H.), a more moderate Republican, noted that Senator Sawyer had been quoted as being on Rich's side of the fence on deficit financing. Rich asked whether the Administration would carry out Sawyer's views. Sparkman reminded him that was up to Congress, not the President.

TOBIN PRESENTED the committee with statistics on the estimated cost of modest living for families of various sizes in big cities. It varied from $1500 to $1800 for one person to $3700 to $4400 for a family of six persons. Only the single person could live decently on $2000, which left all the city families among the 10 million below par. He called the figure $2000 a conservative one for defining low-income families.

Among the additional steps necessary to protect the low-income families, Tobin said, are:

More adequate unemployment insurance with additional allowances for children: more adequate old age insurance benefits for older workers; national health legislation to strengthen unions and collective bargaining.

Blaisdell outlined a program not only for government, but for business. He said business could make a real contribution to the problem of low incomes by passing on the gains from technological advance through higher wages and lower prices, and by regularizing employment, particularly in the seasonal industries.

The Commerce Department's greatest contribution, Blaisdell said, was in promoting regional developments like TVA, which he noted has shown more economic progress than the rest of the country.

THURSTON said Federal aid to education (approved by the Senate, still pending in House), "would be a long step toward wiping out the inequities which are still a blot upon our principle of equal educational opportunity."

"The nation's investment in child health and welfare services is too little and too late," Thurston argued, adding that more funds should be made available for basic research into why some children develop serious emotional and behavior problems which will affect their earning power and social adjustments all through their lives.

Some estimates, which shocked the Congressmen, are that out of every classroom of 30 children, "three are destined to spend part of their lives in a mental hospital," Thurston said.

Many public health services programs, operating with federal and state funds, are doing a good job, but the performance varies from place to place, Thurston continued. Bills to extend public health programs, and to aid more workers to enter medical and nursing schools are now before Congress, Thurston said.

"A national health insurance plan," he told the subcommittee, "by bringing medical care within reach, in conjunction with rehabilitation services, should substantially cut down the loss of earning capacity because of ill health and disability. And this in turn would reduce the number of families whose low income is attributable to this cause."

Rep. Rich's Beef

Reporters could hardly believe their ears when, at a hearing on low-income families' problems, Rep. Rich (R., Pa.) said out loud that he was in favor of making every employer in the country pay into a health insurance fund to cover his workers.

(Rich's frequent query is, "Where's the money coming from?")

Questioned later, Rich straightened them out. Of course, the hard-shelled economy advocate hastily reassured them he's not for that outlandish socialized medicine idea of President Truman's

But he runs a couple of textile mills back home in Pennsylvania, and he doesn't like the way his Congressional colleagues passed a 75c minimum wage bill that hits his mills, while all around the town the merchants and exempted manufacturers are free to pay what they like. "If I have to pay it, why don't they all," he asked plaintively.

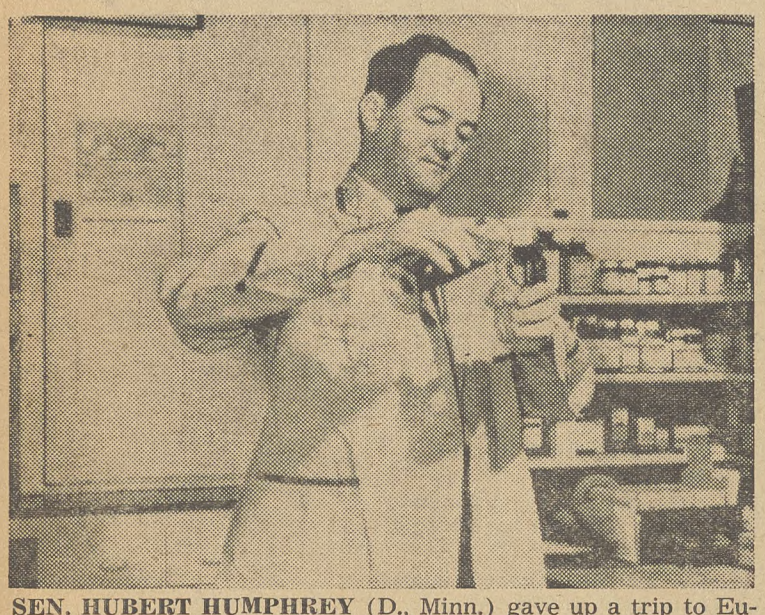
P.S.—Rep. Rich's mills used to pay 40 cents an hour minimum, until Congress raised the minimum, according to the CIO Textile Workers.

Dearborn Co-op Opens New Food Center

Mayor Orville Hubbard of Dearborn, Mich., joined the Fordson Co-Op the night it opened its new and enlarged food center. Tommy Thompson, president of Ford Local 600, CIO Auto Workers, called the event "another milestone in the progress of the working people." Lee Romano, vice-president of the local, pledged support also.

Five hundred neighbors crowded into the store the opening night. Sales for the first two days totaled $5300.

Motor City Co-Op meanwhile announced an agreement with Crown Furniture Co. of Dearborn and Detroit for liberal price concessions to co-op members and union members. A full-page ad in the Sunday issue of the Detroit Times, carrying the indorsement of the AFL and CIO, announced the agreement.



SEN. HUBERT HUMPHREY (D., Minn.) gave up a trip to Europe when his father died Nov. 25 and has since then been helping out in his old trade as a pharmacist at his father's drug store in Huron, S. D. Above, he fills a prescription. Work behind the cosmetics and jewelry counter has convinced the Senator that many federal excise taxes should be removed.

Education, Yes—But Enforcement, Too

While the Anti-Trust Division is willing to cooperate wholeheartedly in any effort to educate the public in what's in the nation's anti-monopoly laws, the new "educational" campaign will have no effect on the activities of the Justice Dept. in enforcing the anti-trust laws, Assistant Attorney General Herbert A. Bergson told the Senate Agriculture subcommitte investigating food prices.

He said that the suit against A&P would result in lower prices for the housewife, and also reported that a pending suit against Bowman Dairy of Chicago involves what Committee Counsel Paul Hadlick called "kickbacks" totalling $355,000 to A&P for milk purchased between July 1942 and March 1948. It is such discriminatory rebates that the Justice Dept. would try to prevent in the future, Bergson explained, through its suit to break up the A&P empire.

Five Proposals Are Made To Protect Workers' Health

FAR-REACHING proposals for strengthening the protection of the health of workers on the job was drawn up by the industrial health advisory committee for the U .S. Public Health Service at a meeting.

Union representatives took an active part in the sessions. The labor members of the committee are: Harry Read, executive assistant to CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey; Nelson Cruikshank, director of AFL social insurance activities; Dr. Lee Price, director of the Union Health Center of the AFL Garment Workers.

Paul Scharrenberg, veteran AFL leader and now director of the California Dept. of Industrial Relations, also is on the committee.

The Public Health Service was urged to:

1 Make further studies of air pollution like that which caused 20 deaths and the illness of 5910 persons at Donora, Pa., last year.

2 Look into the hazards arising from the ever-increasing use of ionizing radiation in industry.

3 Aid small plants in initiating on-the-job health programs.

4 Obtain adequate statistics on occupational diseases.

5 Have Surgeon General consult frequently with Labor Dept. officials in improving technical approaches to problems.

Taft Blames Labor Press For Bias

Sen. Robert A. Taft (R., Ohio), fresh from his voyage to re-discover the voters of his state, is a disappointed man.

"I have talked to many workmen about the Taft-Hartley law," he reported in his newspaper column Dec. 14, and found "a substantial number of union members, and a much higher per cent of non-union workmen" like the law.

But, alas, he added, "The rest have a prejudice against it growing out of labor newspaper propaganda, but are unable to state what their objections are. I believe most of them are open to persuasion whenever they can be reached by argument. Nor do I think that workmen are by any means persuaded in favor of the socialistic, planned economy, 'Handout State' principles, supported today by the CIO and AFL leadership. This is no grassroots movement but one imposed by the intellectual left-wingers employed by Mr. Green and Mr. Murray."

AMA Gives Book To Congressmen

"Hooded socialists" are leading this country "down the path to destruction," says a book recently presented to members of Congress by the American Medical Association.

The book, which is entitled, The Road Ahead, is a recent work of John T. Flynn, bitter critic of both former President Roosevelt and President Truman. It is subtitled "America's Creeping Revolution." Copies of the book were presented to the legislators apparently as a part of the AMA's campaign against national health insurance.

Free Enterprise Champ 'Makes Free' With Patents—FTC

Henry J. Taylor, self-styled champion of free enterprise, is having trouble with the Federal Trades Commission.

Specifically, the General Motors commentator was charged recently with assuming that the use of patents is as free as the enterprise he fondly discusses on the air.

Several companies who manufacture wax paper wrappers and who have done business in the past with Taylor were inclined to term his activities something else again.

They accused him of pretending to have patents he did not actually possess, licensing dealers for heavy fees, and last, but not least, price fixing.

The FTC estimated the amounts paid to Taylor over a period of 14 years by the manufacturers at more than $1,300,000.

Taylor did not deny the FTC's charges but he did say that the distasteful affair posed an "academic question" since he has stopped taking money to which it is charged he is not entitled.

FTC issued a "cease and desist" order against Taylor last Nov. 25 and later issued "complaint."

A spokesman for the commission said that the broadcaster can go into U. S. Circuit Court and ask that the order be set aside.

If he fails to file a petition to review within 60 days from Nov. 25, the order is final.

GRIM "CHRISTMAS GIFT": Detectives are looking at 39 sticks of dynamite wrapped in a gay Christmas package which was found last week in an outside stairway leading to the basement of the CIO Auto Workers' national headquarters in Detroit. The fire in the two fuses had sputtered out a short distance from the detonators, averting an explosion which police said would have demolished the building. The lethal package was found by two maintenance men. (For story and pictures turn to page 3.)

Nathan Will Be On CIO Program

ROBERT R. NATHAN, one of the country's leading economists, goes on the air Jan. 3 as a weekly CIO radio commentator.

He will be heard for eight weeks each Tuesday night at 10:45 p.m., eastern standard time, on the American Broadcasting Co.—ABC network. Time for the broadcast is made available to the CIO by the radio network.

Nathan will be heard over close to 150 stations throughout the country—at 10:45 eastern time, 9:45 central time, 8:45 mountain time, 7:45 Pacific time.

(If you tune in on your ABC station early, and hear NAM propaganda, just be patient—for the CIO show comes on the air right after the big business group.)

Bob Nathan is considered one of the nation's outstanding economic thinkers—but he has great talent for putting over liberal ideas with simple words. In fact, he has often been called the "layman's economist."

Not yet 40 years old, Nathan held high government office during the war with the War Production Board—where he directed the economic planning section—and with the post-war Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion, which he served as deputy director.

He also did a stint as an Army private, but was discharged for physical reasons. He has been active in the American Veterans Committee.

He has done several major economic studies for the CIO—one in 1946, two this year for both the CIO and the United Steelworkers. All three argued that big corporations could make sizeable improvements in workers' pay rates while maintaining adequate profits.

ROBERT NATHAN
CIO's Radio Voice

Bob Nathan's commentary for CIO won't be limited to economic matters—though he feels that the key to the nation's welfare lies in developing a jobs-for-everyone economic set-up. He'll discuss a whole range of items in the news which interest—and vitally affect—the welfare of workers and the entire public.

You'll find Bob Nathan interesting. Don't forget to tune in on him each Tuesday night—on your local ABC station, at 10:45 p.m., eastern time.

Lobbyists' Spending At New High

Congressional lobbyists spent as much the first nine months of 1949, according to a tabulation by Congressional Quarterly, as they reported spending in all of 1948.

Final reports on 1949 lobby expenditures will not be available until early next year—but reports so far filed show nine-month expenditures totalling $6,712,285 by 331 organizations or individuals. The total for 1948 was $6,763,480 by 222 organizations. For 1947, the total year's reporting expenditures were $5,191,856.

These reports are far from complete. A Congressional Lobby Investigating Committee, headed by Rep. Buchanan (R., Pa.), has reported finding violations of the lobby law which probably will be exposed in hearings early next year. The nature of the violations has not been disclosed.

Police Probe Note To Detroit AFL Leader

A penciled threat to bomb another union headquarters in Detroit was revealed last week when Walter Stanley, president of the AFL Street Car Operators local, disclosed that he had received a crude warning note a week before the UAW blast. Stanley said he didn't report the letter to police because he thought it was the empty threat of a crank. Police are examining the note.

IUE Says UE Stalls On Polls

THE CIO'S two-month old Intl. Union of Electrical Workers —IUE-CIO— pushed hard last week for early Labor Board elections among some 27,000 workers at General Motors Electrical Division.

Contracts covering these employes are now held by the "old UE," which was expelled from the CIO last month—but IUE-CIO leaders claim that an overwhelming majority of the GM electrical workers have come back to the CIO.

During the hearing, an "old UE" attorney admitted that the union might wind up as "a lame duck" if elections were held before expiration of the present contract between UE and the company.

THEY NEED YOUR HELP: Picket Rose Daddezio is having her picket card punched by members of the picket committee of Local 445, IUE-CIO, which has been on strike at the National Union Radio Corp., Orange, N. J., since Sept. 30. Helping are Luma Bailey, Mary Tagney, Marie DeCosta. Seven hundred and fifty members of the union are on strike. Please make checks payable to "New Jersey State CIO Strike," earmarked for IUE Local 445, CIO. Send them to James T. Callaghan, 68 Orange St., Newark 2, N. J.

Before a special NLRB hearing at Dayton, Ohio, the IUE-CIO called for speedy elections to win bargaining rights for the 27,000 workers. GM's electrical plants are located at Dayton; Rochester, N. Y., New Brunswick, N. J., and Warren, Ohio.

IUE-CIO attorneys exchanged hot words with UE counsel at the Dayton hearing, and charged them flatly with trying to stall the elections. The UE claims that its present contract with General Motors is a "definite block to any action of the NLRB to order elections" at the GM plants. The UE pact with the company runs until next spring.

BEN SIGAL, IUE-CIO attorney, charged at the hearings that the UE's arguments represented a completely inaccurate statement of NLRB precedents. He asked David Sacks, presiding officer for the NLRB at the hearing, not to permit protracted legal arguments which have no bearing on the case and which merely delay the entire case.

Martin Kurasch, attorney for the "old UE," maintained that under earlier NLRB orders, no election can be held until at least 60 days before the contract expiration date.

"In this case, that means that no election could be held until February 1950. An election before the termination of the contract might render the bargaining agent (the UE) a lame duck."

FOUR OFFICERS of IUE-CIO locals are ready to testify at the hearing, but slowness of action caused by repeated UE arguments on technical points has permitted only one of them—Pres. James Kraft of IUE Local 755—to take the stand.

Meanwhile, General Motors broke a long silence in the case to ask for elections "as soon as possible."

Marshall Plan Helps Make Europe's Yuletide Merriest In 10 Years

The lights burned brightly in London's Piccadilly Circus—for the first time in 10 years.

In Trafalgar Square children gathered around to admire a giant spruce from Norway, a good will gift to the British capital from the City of Oslo.

In Denmark the store windows were well illumined for the first time since the beginning of the war, and holiday celebrations were not marred by dark houses and cold rooms.

Children in Norway smacked their lips over a special ration of oranges, nuts, dried prunes and apricots.

And all of Western Europe this year had its best Christmas since 1939.

There were more toys, more food, more warmth and more light than the area had enjoyed in 10 years—thanks to a large degree to aid extended by the U. S. through the Marshall Plan.

These things demonstrated that conditions were better, that Western Europe has been moving along the road toward post-war recovery.

For the first time in 10 years, Frau Schindler of Frankfurt, Germany, planned what she called a "Uebliches Weinachtfest"—a normal Christmas. For her two children, Inge, 4, and Heinrich, 7, this was the first real Christmas of their lives.

ACROSS THE BALTIC SEA, in Sweden, another housewife, Mrs. Ingeborg Axell of Johanneshov, a suburb of Stockholm, thanked the Marshall Plan for a very important Christmas gift. Water—hot, running water—is now available to Mrs. Axell whenever she wishes. Once again Sweden's immaculate housewives can scrub and clean to their heart's content.

Five Christmases ago, the little village of Cisterna, which lies midway between Rome and Anzio, was nothing more than a heap of rubble. Now it is almost completely rebuilt, and no one is happier than Mayor Leonardo Felice. This month, His Honor took part in the dedication ceremonies of a workmen's apartment house, constructed with Marshall Plan funds. The mayor's address was short but eloquent; and especially his final words: "Thank God for the Marshall Plan."

One of the building's new tenants is a farm worker named Giusti Cerace. He has moved in with his wife and three children. They are all ill—the result of living in basement ruins and wooden huts since the war's end. "This will be the first Christmas in five years," said Cerace, "that we will live within four sound walls. Perhaps now we can shake off our illnesses and do the work before us."

IN THREE HUMBLE ROOMS on a Paris street, Madame Madeleine Uhalde, a concierge, and her three children celebrated their best Christmas since war. Things are still not easy for Madame Uhalde. She is on duty 24 hours a day, stokes three furnaces, cleans stairs and halls, and delivers mail to all the tenants in her large apartment house. Her income is $6 monthly, plus tips.

This Christmas, the Uhaldes had a special reason to celebrate. Renee, the oldest child, has just recovered from a serious throat operation, following treatments with penicillin, which the Marshall Plan made available.

Conditions in Western Europe weren't back to "normal" this Christmas but in many homes in many countries there was something special for the children—and there was hope for the future.

'Yule' Bomb Found At UAW Offices

ONLY FAULTY fuses on a Christmas package-bomb which was found Dec. 20 prevented an explosion which police said would have blown the national headquarters of the CIO Auto Workers in Detroit "sky high."

This was another in a series of acts of terrorism against the union and its officers within 21 months.

UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther was severely wounded in the right arm in the first act of the chain and his brother, Victor, the union's education director, lost his left eye in the second assault. In both cases, the would-be assassins fired through windows of their victims' home.

Two maintenance men at the UAW building found 39 sticks of dynamite on an outside basement stairway after a police search had failed to uncover the lethal package. The explosive was in a gay Christmas package.

ONE OF the fuses had flickered out within an eighth of an inch of the explosive and the other fizzled out an inch short.

"An eighth of an inch more and all hell would have broken loose," said Detective Henry Russel of the special investigation bureau of the Detroit police.

"There was enough dynamite to blow the building sky high, enough to damage the General Motors Research Building next door, too."

An anonymous tip to a Detroit newspaper reporter sent the police to the three-story building on West Milwaukee Avenue. The search of the structure, which has only a score of rooms, did not reveal the bomb.

The two building maintenance men found the explosive at 11:30 p.m. on the outside stairway leading to the basement, which contains the furnace and storage rooms and a workshop used for preparing building repairs.

In addition to the maintenance men, the two other persons in the building during the night of the attempted bombing were Paul Sifton, a Washington legislative representative of the UAW, and a charwoman.

The union in a statement issued by Walter Reuther. Secy.-Treas. Emil Mazey and Vice Presidents Richard Gosser, and John W. Livingston boosted its reward to nearly $225,000 to end the "campaign of terrorism" against the union and its officers.

The UAW had offered $200,000 for arrests leading to conviction for the assaults. This sum was increased by $25,000 after the attempt to blow up UAW headquarters.

Rewards offered by other organizations are about $16,000, bringing the total amounts to approximately $241,000. The union's statement said:

"The attempted dynamiting of the UAW-CIO building was apparently part of the same campaign of terrorism which has been directed against our union over the last two years.

"It is being waged by anti-labor, un-American elements. We in the union have no knowledge of the identity of the persons responsible for the campaign but we are determined to do everything in our power, in cooperation with law enforcement agencies, to apprehend these persons and bring them to justice.

"Whoever is responsible for these attacks on the union, their purpose is obvious. They are trying to paralyze the union and its activities through fear. They will not succeed. We will not be terrorized. We will continue to work and fight for economic and social justice for all Americans and for the democratic principles for which we stand.

"As a part of our effort to apprehend the persons responsible for this campaign of terror, the international union, UAW-CIO, is offering a reward of $25,000 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of persons responsible for attempting to bomb the international union headquarters Tuesday night.

"This reward offer is in addition to the offers already standing for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the person or persons responsible for the attempted assassinations of Walter P. Reuther and Victor G. Reuther."

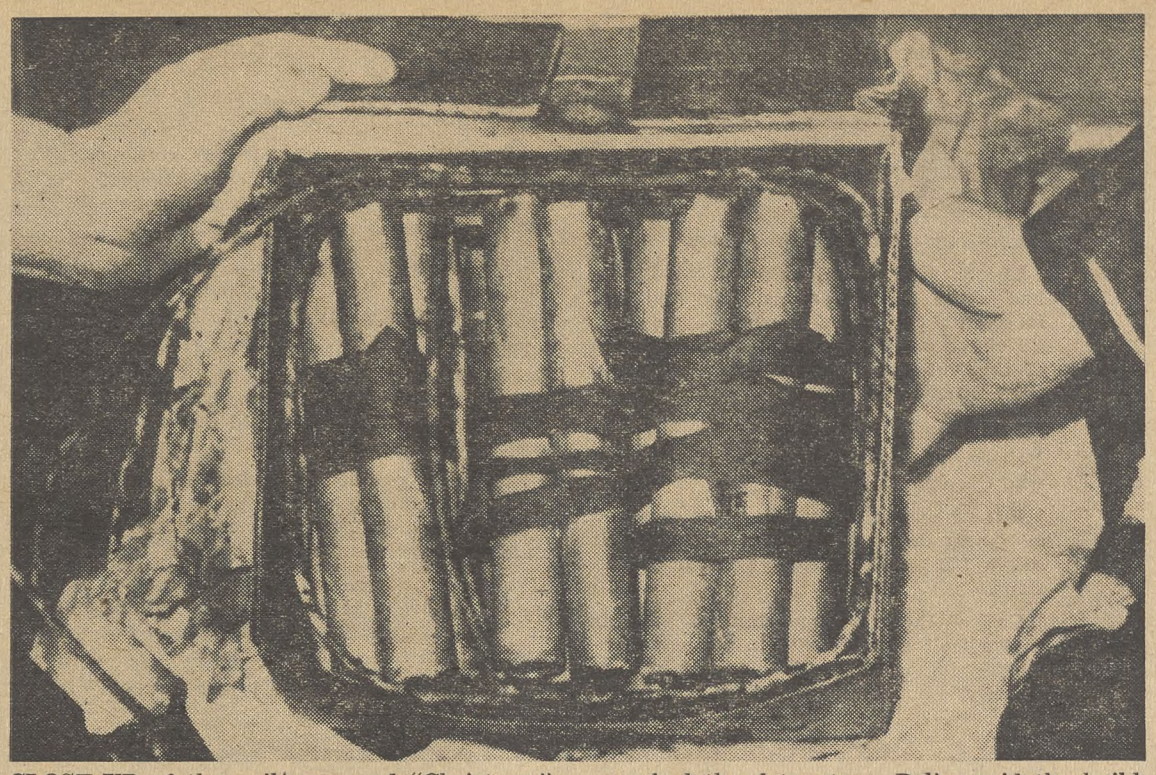
POLICE LINKED the three acts of terrorism.

Joseph Krug, chief of the Detroit police special investigation bureau, said he was convinced that the bomb plot was hatched by the same "network" that tried to assassinate Walter and Victor Reuther. He did not say what he meant by "network."

REUTHER SAID that he was unable to name a specfic person, saying that he thought it might be "management, the Communists or some screwball."

Police in September, 1948, brought charges against Carl Bolton in connection with the assault. Bolton, former vice president of UAW Local 400, Highland Park, Mich., was held for court after a State witness testified that Bolton had offered him money to go on a "job," and had borrowed a shotgun from him the day before the shooting.

Bolton is serving a prison sentence for robbery of a Pontiac, Mich., store.



CLOSE-UP of the gaily-wrapped "Christmas" package of 39 sticks of dynamite which a watchman discovered in a stairway beside the CIO Auto Workers headquarters. The twin fuses had gone out before the fire reached the detonator. Police said the building would have been demolished had the charge gone off. The FBI was ordered to investigate. Police posted guards at the building and checked dynamite sales.

Carol Reuther To Lone Ranger

One day before the attempt was made to blow up the CIO Auto Workers' headquarters in Detroit, the following appeared in Leonard Lyons' syndicate newspaper column:

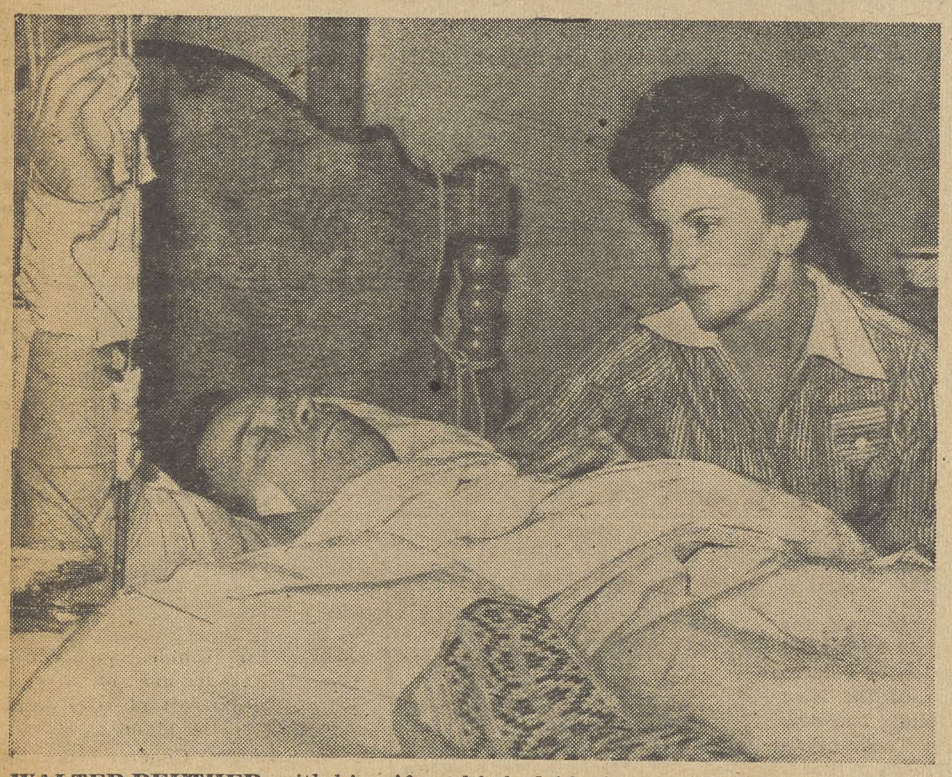
Victor Reuther, the Detroit union leader who lost his eye when he was shot at by men still uncaught, recently was introduced to the Lone Ranger. Reuther told his three children about this meeting, and they were quite impressed — particularly when the Lone Ranger followed through by sending his Christmas cards to each youngster . . . Carol Reuther, age 10, wrote the acknowledgement in behalf of herself and her two younger brothers. In her letter she expressed appreciation for this thoughtfulness, and added: "You always get the outlaws, and we wonder if you could catch the bad men who shot our daddy."

FBI Studying Bomb Plot

Attorney General McGrath has directed the FBI to get the facts in the attempted bombing of the UAW headquarters to determine whether it can enter the case.

McGrath said the following Federal Laws may have been violated:

1. Illegal transportation of dynamite in a car operated in the transportation of passengers by a common carrier.
2. The civil rights statute against conspiracies to injure, oppress, threaten or intimidate citizens.
3. A law making it an offense for a person to cross state or national boundaries to escape prosecution.



WALTER REUTHER, with his wife at his bedside, is shown in a Detroit hospital after he was wounded by a blast from a shot gun, fired through a window of his home.

VICTOR REUTHER was seriously wounded by a charge from a shot gun fired at close range through the window of his home, to which the policeman is pointing.

Simple Story of Security—And Insecurity—Illustrates Why CIO Unions Campa ign For Adequate Pensions

By ALLAN L. SWIM

TWO ELDERLY men met nearly every afternoon during warm weather at a croquet court across the street from my home.

They were about the same age—nearly 70—and they were fairly well matched when it came to knocking the wooden balls around with mallets.

But there the similarity stopped.

One of them lived in the present and looked forward to the future.

The other existed in the present and did his utmost to live in the past.

The man who looked to the future had a spirit of independence, a boyishness that belied his age. His companion acted as if he thought he was a burden on society, that perhaps he had lived too long.

I HAD CARRIED on many conversations with the two men before I learned what was responsible for the difference in their attitudes.

One of them had a sense of security resulting almost entirely from the fact that he drew a pension every month from the firm for which he had worked for years.

The other lived almost entirely on money supplied by his sons and daughters.

It was impossible to tell whether one had possessed more ability and more ambition than the other in the years gone by.

The jobs they had held indicated they had about equal responsibility and had received about the same pay.

Neither seemed to have received more of the "breaks" than the other except in the matter of pensions.

IT MIGHT BE unfair to draw a lot of sharp conclusions from two elderly men who liked to play croquet.

But when you study case after case and add them to the experiences of the two it seems fair to draw some general conclusions.

One of the most important of these is that a feeling of security in old age is extremely important—both to the individuals directly involved and to society as a whole.

Another is that such a feeling of security doesn't make people "soft" or "pampered," as some of the reactionaries would have us believe.

And still another is that there's nothing startlingly new or radical about payment of pensions to workers—for it's been happening on a small scale for years.

ONE OF THE silliest lines being peddled by the reactionaries these days is that economic security is bad for people.

They moan about the trend toward "cradle to grave" security plans. They oppose adequate federal social security and they claim that pensions paid out of corporate profits are "socialistic."

The same reactionaries, for the most part, are against the payment of wages sufficiently large to enable individual workers to provide for their old age.

They don't say so out loud, but they obviously believe that security is something that should be hoarded for the chosen few—the chosen few with large incomes.

Some of them seem to prefer the old county "poor house" and its indignities to any system which will enable elderly people to live decently on pensions.

ANOTHER phony line being peddled by the reactionaries is that we in the U. S. can't afford the "luxury" of economic security.

We have a great nation, these people say, because we've always been willing to gamble—because we've always had to take chances on our future.

Some of these big gambles and some of our lack of planning have led us several times to the very brink of economic disaster.

There are millions of persons who follow all the admonitions about "saving for a rainy day" and yet find themselves penniless when they reach that age at which employers consider them too old to work.

Regardless of what the "Old Guard" claims, insecurity is the luxury we can't afford.

That's why the CIO is making a real drive for greater security through pensions.

We Predict That--

At this season it's not unusual for those who study trends to make predictions about what the coming year will bring.

The mood is upon us, too, so we're going to stick our neck out (but not far because we're on reasonably safe ground).

Our prediction is that by the end of 1950 the Commies will be almost completely on the outside of the labor movement looking in—and trying to get back in.

Our forecast is based on our knowledge of the temper of the labor movement and on what's been happening to the United Electrical Workers.

The average guy or gal who works in a plant or mill has about as much use for today's brand of communism as he or she does for a case of scarlet fever.

That's made evident whenever the rank and file has an opportunity to vote on a clear-cut Commie-anti-Commie issue.

Let's use the UE as an example. When this union was booted out of the CIO for following the Commie line and flouting CIO policy the IUE-CIO was just a blueprint.

Now—less than two months later—the IUE is a sizeable, functioning union despite all the stumbling blocks put in its path by the UE.

The swing to IUE didn't occur so quickly merely because members thought the officers of the new union were nice fellows who parted their hair in the right place. They swung over because they were fed up with the party lineism of the UE and wanted a union free from Red influences.

It looks to us as if members of other CIO groups will soon have opportunities to show concretely how they feel about the Stalinist lads in the labor movement.

Regarding what happens when these opportunities arise we won't make any forecast other than this:

We predict that at the end of 1950 we won't have to eat this prediction!

UE Members 'Want To Be In CIO'

Encouragement and praise are given UE locals voting to affiliate with the IUE-CIO in this forthright editorial from Minnesota Labor:

THERE'S BEEN a revolution in the ranks of the CIO in Minnesota in recent weeks—a revolution that is cheering and encouraging and inspiring to those who have been leaders in the fight to oust Communists or fellow travelers from positions of influence and leadership in the organization at all levels.

And it is cheering and encouraging and inspiring, too, to the rank-and-filers who have courageously followed their right-wing leaders and shared in the recent victories.

Surface manifestations of the revolution have been the defeat and removal from office of several prominent left-wing leaders who for some years have had control of their various locals.

Yes, this editorial has to do with the recent elections in UE locals and about now you are saying to yourself, "But the UE is not CIO. It was kicked out by the Cleveland convention. It has no CIO affiliation." And, technically, you are correct.

But talk to these men and women who are rank-and-file members of the discredited UE. Ask them what they are, where their sympathies are. And almost invariably you'll get the answer that they are right-wingers and want to be members of CIO. And they are moving just about as fast as they can to re-establish CIO affiliation. So when we say that there has been a revolution in the CIO, we, also, are correct.

There was a meeting in Minneapolis last Sunday. The State CIO Council Executive Board was there. James B. Carey, chairman of the administrative committee of the new CIO International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, was there. Rank-and-filers from UE locals, many of whom fought heroically and unsung for the recent right victories, were there. So were many of their officers.

CAREY EXPLAINED the CIO policy on IUE and UE and told why it was desired that all former UE locals should apply for charters in the IUE. The first IUE charter in Minnesota was issued last Sunday to Local 1117 of the Western Electric plant in St. Paul. Others have been or soon will be issued.

It is not the function of MINNESOTA LABOR to suggest to the membership of any local into which international union it should move, or how or when it should make such a move.

It is a function of this paper, official news organ of the State CIO Council, to encourage right-wing leadership within the CIO.

It is a privilege of this paper to rejoice in recent right-wing victories and in the trend to stick with CIO.

It also is a privilege of MINNESOTA LABOR at this time to give a pat on the back to all those unsung leaders and individuals in the ranks who played such an important part in recent right-wing victories.

If a man convinced only one of his fellows that he should cease supporting the left-wing and should vote for the right, that man is no less entitled to credit and praise than the top men of greater influence who were able to influence greater numbers.

And the individual who swung his support from left to right is entitled to his share of credit and praise, too. Without him the fight could not have been won.

It is to be hoped that the general public is not unaware of the struggle that has been going on and of the victories won. It is to be hoped that there is developing, in the public mind, a growing consciousness that the CIO is sincere in its aims and ambitions—deadly sincere in its determination to purge itself of leadership that serves the purposes of a foreign power.

Let there be no mistake about it. We of CIO are Americans. We stand for America and for the advancement of the best interests of ourselves and of our fellow beings.

Right-Wingers Win In N.Y. Guild Election

The right-wing slate won for the third straight year by a wide margin in the election of officers and board members of the New York Newspaper Guild. The new officers: Jay Nelson Tuck, president; Thomas J. Murphy, executive vice president; M. Michael Potoker, secretary-treasurer; Steve Horton, Robert Stern, Frank N. Irwin, vice president.

"I think it's about the supposed 'big decrease' in living costs."

He Got Bonus And Pink Slip, Too

IT WAS Christmas Eve in the city room and nearly everybody was having fun.

The city editor, a grumpy fellow under most circumstances, was in a fine Yuletide mood.

Reporters made frequent trips to the photographic dark-room, where a slightly soused picture-snapper was tending bar.

All of the stories that had a chance of getting in the paper had already been sent to the composing room. The staff was hanging around just because one of the editors said the holiday shift should last five hours.

A group gathered around a big desk in the corner and began swapping stories about "the old days."

A REPORTER in his early 50's, who had been imbibing his share of the Christmas cheer, declared:

"You guys think it's tough working a short shift on Christmas Eve. Why, let me tell you what happened to me back in the ' 20's . . ."

And here is the story he told.

The reporter, whom we shall call Mack, had moved around the country, working on one newspaper after another as his mood or the mood of editors dictated.

Out in the Mid-West he met a newspaper woman. After a whirlwind courtship they got married. Two years later a son was born to them—and two years later a daughter arrived on the scene.

At this point Mack decided it was time to settle down.

He finally found a job he liked—and the city editor told him, "You can stay around here for years if you work hard and keep sober."

MACK WORKED hard and he remained more than reasonably sober. The city editor told him on several occasions that he was doing a good job.

"I was working like the very devil and I knew I was turning out some really good stuff," Mack related.

"After I'd been around a couple of months I asked the boss for a raise. He said he thought I deserved one but that the paper never handed out raises in early December because of the Christmas bonus.

"I told him to forget about it and that I'd see him after the first of the year.

"I felt pretty good about working for a paper which passed out bonuses—that is, I felt good until I learned that newcomers usually got only 10 bucks."

CHRISTMAS THAT year fell on Saturday—the day after pay day—and Mack was selected as one of the persons who should work the late trick.

"I turned out a couple of stories," Mack said, "and then I decided to go to the business office and pick up my check.

"After all, I was a bit curious about the amount of my bonus.

"The cashier handed me an envelope and I returned to my desk before opening it.

"Inside were my regular check, a bonus check for $10 and a pink slip which said, 'Your services are no longer required.'

"There I was on Christmas Eve—with a wife, two kids and $47.50—and no job.

"I went over and began cussing out the city editor. He reached in a drawer and brought out a pink slip just like mine. We went out and got drunk."

Mack fished in his wallet, pulled out a paid-up Newspaper Guild card, tossed it on the table and declared:

"If I get fired this Christmas Eve they'll have to put $1400 in severance pay in my envelope. And yet some dopes don't believe in unions!"

Little Man You'll Have A Busy Year

Is CB Ebbing In Europe Because Of 'Thought Control'?

The following editorial in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch develops the idea that the decline of the Communist Party in Western Europe is due to its efforts to police men's minds:

THE LONDON correspondent of the United Press, R. H. Shackford, takes a look around Europe and notes a definite ebb in the Communist tide. Two years ago, he reports, Communists held 28 cabinet posts in Western European governments, and today they hold none. There has also been a decline in the parliamentary strength of the party. Reasons for this are to be found in the Marshall plan, the opposition of the Vatican, Titoism and the like. But it also suggests that the Communists may be themselves undermining their hope for power. This they are doing on the ideological level.

Lenin's ideological strategy of boring from within was supposed to be the most dangerous weapon of the Red brethren. But they are becoming increasingly obtuse in its use. The Politburo either does not understand the Western mind or holds it in contempt. One way or the other, the Kremlin is throwing away its chances to influence that mind.

The process has become most clear in France. Because of the sad record of prewar governments and because of the part played in the Resistance by the Communists, the party had achieved a considerable influence in France by 1945. Some of this was lost two years ago when Moscow, over the protests of French party leaders, ordered them to call hopeless strikes.

BUT EVEN THEN, the Communists could point to the big names of the intellectual world which still appeared on their membership rolls. It meant much in France to have prominent scientists, teachers, historians, dramatists, poets and painters pleading the Communist cause. Just why such men ever joined the party or followed its line is hard to say. Probably they did not think very deeply. They, too, were disgusted with the past, and here was a political program which seemed to promise something better. What they failed to grasp was that Communism does not confine itself to a man's political loyalty. It claims every activity of his mind. It dictates even the music which he shall hear, and the pictures which he shall enjoy.

THE FRENCH intellectuals now are very well aware of this. Roger Garaudy, an historian, has been ordered to retract a book in which he dared to say that Frenchmen of the eighteenth century had certain progressive ideas even before Marx. Professors Prenant and Cohen have been told to make their scientific teachings conform to those of Red Hero Lysenko.

The poetry of Eluard and the paintings of Picasso are being denounced in the Red press. Joliot-Curie has been told that there is no disinterested science, that the only good science is "proletarian" science. He has been accused of the sin of "formalism." And so on and on.

Just as Zhdanov policed Russian minds, so one Laurent Casanova has been appointed to police French minds. And he judges the sciences and the arts by the orthodox pronunciamentos of Maurice Thorez, the ex-miner, and Josef Stalin, the former Georgian seminarian. A few second-rate minds have bowed to this totalitarian discipline. Others, however, are beginning to rebel. There will have to be a lot of improvements made in Communist thought-control before the harness fits the unbroken Gallic mind. In fact, we believe, it can't be done.

And France may turn out to be typical of all Europe, even those parts which for the moment are wearing the yoke.

Use CIO Button--If You're A DuPont

The CIO News publishes the following announcement for the benefit of any CIO members who are members of the billionaire DuPont family:

There's going to be a family reunion in Wilmington, Del., on New Years Day. DuPonts from all over have been invited—and upwards of 600 are expected to attend.

J. Bruce Bredin, son-in-law of family chief Irenee DuPont, says it will be "a family party—no speech-making."

Heaviest concentration of DuPonts is around Wilmington—where members of the family who have only a million bucks are treated practically as "poor relations."

The family is presently in difficulty with the law. The Dept. of Justice anti-trust division is trying to force the DuPonts to get rid of controlling interests in several big corporations, including General Motors. The family controls E. I. du Pont de Nemours as well as several holding companies.

P.S. Even DuPont relatives with only half a million bucks will be welcomed at the family party.

CVA Foes May Have Overplayed Their Hand

CVA is "hot"—in Washington, D. C., and in Washington State.

CVA means Columbia Valley Authority—a big-scale development program along the lines of TVA, which has worked so well for the people of the Tennessee River Valley. It's a major point in Pres. Truman's legislative program, and is strongly supported by labor.

CVA—like TVA before it—is indorsed by the people, and opposed like fury by the private power interests. The propaganda campaign goes on, in Washington, D. C., and Washington State.

Here's a fact-studedd story about the propaganda and the CVA. It's written by Joe Miller, Seattle, newspaperman who works closely with the CIO-supported League for CVA.

By JOE MILLER

THE PRICE WE PAY for failure to control our rivers is shown by this picture taken in the Columbia Valley area. Note the erosion caused by the unhampered flow of water over the years. The valuable topsoil has been washed away and the land is unfit for crops. This is just one form of waste that the proposed Columbia Valley Authority would stop.

IS IT THE people versus the special interests?

In the Pacific Northwest, where mighty rivers run with the speed of the fabled Mercury, the people have reason to say with fervor:

"And how it is!"

For Harry Truman's favorite phrase aptly describes the bitter struggle that is currently being fought out in America's farthest corner over the President's proposal to create a Columbia Valley Administration.

Fighting the CVA with every weapon it has is the power trust and its big business allies, the great timber barons and companies. With CVA legislation getting closer to final Congressional action, these groups have redoubled their relentless campaign of misrepresentation in a desperate attempt to influence public opinion against CVA.

The power trust has set up "front" organizations to lead the fight against CVA. These outfits are flooding the sprawling Northwest with tons of expensive propaganda.

"Carpetbaggers" brought in to preach the anti-CVA line are attempting to burrow into every community. The region's newspapers, most of them notoriously reactionary, give the widest currency to all anti-CVA broadsides and play down favorable stories.

Recently, two conservative national magazines — Saturday Evening Post and Reader's Digest—have contributed their bit by printing editorials that damn the CVA.

The Post editorial was written by a former private power propagandist who wrote in the same magazine a few years ago that Grand Coulee Dan would "overshadow for the first time in 5000 years the stupendous folly of the Pharaohs!"

(Grand Coulee, world's mightiest power producer, has been responsible for the creation of many thousands of new jobs in the Pacific Northwest; its power produced aluminum for one-third of America's airplanes and helped develop the A-bomb.)

So utterly untruthful has this concerted barrage been that a great conservative newspaper, the Portland Oregonian, has coined a new term to describe these spokesmen:

CVUs—Columbia Valley Unauthorities.

WHERE DO the CVUs get the money to circulate their propaganda?

Part of the answer is provided by the first financial statement of 1949 from the power trust's chief lobbying outfit, the National Association of Electrical Companies.

In the first six months of the year the NAEC spent $224,222 against CVA and other power and resource developments. Only other lobby to spend more than this sum was the American Medical Association.

The rest of the answer will be given when the Northwest's private utilities file statements of their 1949 expenditures as they are required to do by Oregon and Washington law. In past years, before the CVA fight became hot, these concerns had contributed more than $50,000 to anti-CVA outfits.

When President Truman first announced he was going to seek a CVA, private power's top dog lobbyist, $65,000-a-year Purcell Smith, declared:

"We're going to do everything in our power to stop CVA!"

BY INUNDATING the Northwest and the rest of the nation with their propaganda, Purcell and his well-paid "wrecking crew" have kept their word. Yet it is beginning to look as if they overplayed their hand.

They persist in the amazing claim that "CVA is being foisted upon the people of the Northwest by the Washington, D. C., bureaucrats."

Yet for four years every farm-labor organization in the region but one has been on record for CVA and has been contributing to the grassroots campaign for its enactment. These 11 organizations include the CIO, AFL, Grange, Farmer's Unions and Railway Brotherhoods; and they represent approximately 1,500,000 of the region's 4,500,000 residents.

In contrast, the few major groups that oppose CVA represent less than 50,000 of the region's inhabitants!

It was this solid base of CVA support in the grassroots and the obvious need for more efficient management of the area's resources that induced Pres. Truman to make CVA the leading plank of his resource development program last year.

And he received large majorities in five of the six CVA states and came awfully close in traditionally Republican Oregon, where Dewey had campaigned steadily for more than a month.

ANOTHER reason for the groundswell of support for CVA has been the conspicuous refusal of the opposition to accept the many challenges of the League for CVA to debate the issues, in the tradition of Lincoln and Douglas.

The most conspicuous rebuffs have come from the governors of Washington, Oregon and Idaho, who have been spearheading the opposition to CVA. These men, who announced opposition to CVA two months before the bill was actually drafted, seldom miss an opportunity to attack CVA, but want no part of a debate.

Twice challenged to debate by Rep. Hugh B. Mitchell (D., Wash.), president of the League for CVA and a sponsor of the bill, Gov. Arthur Langlie said he was "too busy."

YET THE governor has found time to make more than 50 anti-CVA speeches and twice travel to Washington, D. C., at state expense to testify against CVA. Langlie's favorite charge is that CVA is "fascism"!

Mussolini and Hitler had efficient resource programs, therefore an agency which will efficiently develop the Northwest's unmatched natural resources, must be "fascistic."

Obviously the arguments of Governor Langlie and his cohorts could easily be disproved in open debate. When he testified at House committee hearings in Washington, D. C., he was asked to name the "dangerous" powers he had said CVA would create. His answer:

"I am not prepared at this moment to give you the details of it . . ."

Under further questioning, Langlie said he could not even remember whether the Bureau of Reclamation or the Army Engineers ran Grand Coulee dam—the biggest thing in his state, in fact the biggest structure in the world!

Gov. C. A. Robins of Idaho was frank. Asked if he understood the CVA legislation, he answered:

"As a matter of fact, I do not."

The position of these men in opposing CVA is made all the more ridiculous by two major facts:

1. The Hoover Commission Report which establishes beyond shadow of reasonable doubt that the present system—which the power trust and its allies want to perpetuate—is fouled up beyond recognition.

This impartial report tells of bureaucratic jealousies, hopeless tugs of war and inefficiencies, which have slowed the West's development to a virtual standstill, and wasted the taxpayers' money.

2. The obvious need for CVA, which is highlighted by four items:

A. Power shortage: With 42% of the nation's hydro-electric potential, the Northwest is the only region in America with a power shortage!

B. This lack of power, when it is potentially here to burn, has helped to create an unemployment three times the national average in the region.

C. Flood control: Every year raging floods destroy lives and property throughout the Northwest. Yet no adequate system of flood control exists, nor has one been proposed by the existing federal agencies.

D. Erosion: With 100 million tons of topsoil going down the Columbia every year, the Pacific Northwest is the second most critical area in the nation for erosion, according to the U. S. Soil Conservation Service. Yet scarcely anything is being done about it.

These facts point the way to CVA, and the people of the Pacific Northwest — through the educational program of their farm and labor groups—are realizing it.

So, too, may the opponents of CVA, when the people of the Northwest go to the polls next November.

Gray, Most Anti-Union Member Not Reappointed

THE NAT'L Labor Relations Board's most anti-labor member wound up a two-year stint last week—and didn't get reappointed by Pres. Truman.

He is J. Copeland Gray, former Buffalo industrial engineer. He was named to the Board in 1947, shortly after passage of the Taft-Hartley Act.

In a pre-convention report, the CIO Legal Department last October cited Gray for special mention as consistently voting against labor.

"In the voting on NLRB decisions," the CIO report said, "Board Members James Reynolds and Gray have been consistently anti-labor. Board Member Murdock has often joined them to make up an anti-labor majority. Board Member Houston has been consistently liberal, joined often but not always by Chairman Herog.

"It should be noted that even in those rare instances where a majority of the Board has adopted a liberal view, Mr. Gray in particular has usually dissented from this departure from the norm."

Both Gray and Reynolds formed the dissenting minority last week in an important decision. The Board decided 3-2 that placing on a labor "unfair list" the name of an employer with whom a union is in direct dispute, does not violate the T-H ban on secondary boycotts.

The case involved an AFL union in Denver, Colo. Reynolds and Gray, in their dissent, argued that the NLRB should decide the legality of each "unfair list" challenged by employers—a course that would involve unions in a new mass of T-H litigation.

NLRB Upholds Struck Work Clauses, Unfair Lists

THE NLRB has issued two decisions clarifying the Taft-Hartley secondary boycott ban.

In ruling coming one day apart, the board found that "hot cargo" or "struck work" clauses in union contracts are legal, and that placing an employer on an "unfair list" does not violate the law.

In the "hot cargo" decision, involving AFL teamsters in Pittsfield, Mass., the board dismissed charges that the union had illegally induced employes of three other firms to stop handling freight from the trucks of Conway's Express. Each of the three companies was party to an area agreement in which the union reserved the right for its members to refused to handle goods or freight of any employer involved in a labor dispute.

The ruling on "unfair lists" was made in a case involving Grauman Co. of Denver, Colo., and the AFL Denver Building and Construction Trade Council and two of its affiliated locals. In the three to two decision, the majority of the board likened "unfair" listing of a primary employer to direct picketing of that employer's premises.

The action of the board reversed part of an earlier decision in which the board had held that nerely placing the name of a primary employer on such a list constituted an illegal secondary boycott.

A THIRD important decision came at the same time, when the NLRB ruled that the Taft-Hartley Act prohibits discharge of an employe under a valid union shop if he pays his union dues and initiation fees.

The case arose when two workers at the Union Starch & Refining Co. at Granite City, Ill., refused to appear at a meeting of Local 153 of the AFL American Federation of Grain Millers to take the obligation of union membership. The board said two of the men refused because of religious scruples. Although unwilling to join the union, the men were willing to pay initiation fees and dues.

The board's position was that as long as the "free ride" had been eliminated, other requirements for union membership need not be met.

In another decision the board found that the AFL Cannery Warehousemen, Food Processors, Drivers and Helpers Union violated the law when it threatened to strike to force an individual employe to engage in union activity.

The dispute arose when a worker at the Clara-Val Packing Co. of Morgan Hill, Calif., was spotted working after hours at another plant, going through a union picket line to do so. After the worker refused to stop passing the line, the Clara-Val firm was told that unless the worker was discharged, the union would picket the plant. The company complied with the union demand, an action the NLRB deemed illegal.

In still another decision, involving the firm in the "hot cargo" case, the board ruled that a union may not require an employer to post a "performance bond" as a condition to collective bargaining or the settlement of a strike or lockout.

PLACING himself in a position that was for all practical purposes pro-union, Robert N. Denham, general counsel of the NLRB, recommended that his office and the board itself look the other way so far as the building trades are concerned under the Taft-Hartley act.

In oral argument before the board on Dec. 19 Denham proposed in processing unfair practice charges in the building industry:

1. It be assumed that union shop requirements have been met despite the absence of elections, and

2. That workers be forced to join the union as soon as they have worked 30 days for one or more in the group of employers party to the union shop contract.

Denham based his proposals on two practical points. He said that the general counsel's office poll, were "administratively impractical" in the building and construction industry.

He added that the "more clerical costs" were "out of reason," so complex was the problem of conducting elections in an industry which had "unique" employment relationships, bargaining patterns and traditions and unit and eligibility questions" that prevented setting up effective election machinery. Main stumbling block, he said, was that had discovered that elections of any kind, whether in a representation case or in a union shop building craftsmen "work only sporadically for any one employer."

DENHAM appeared before the board when it held oral argument on the status of the building trades under the Taft-Hartley law after the AFL Building & Construction Trades Dept. and an employer group, the Associated General Contractors of America, filed briefs with the board urging that some way be found by which unions can be certified in the industry.

Bargaining Point

The NLRB has decided that an Oregon local of the CIO Woodworkers can bargain for its members over the cost of meals.

IWA had charged that the Weyerhaeuser Timber Co., which runs the only restaurant at the concern's sawmill near Klamath Falls, Ore., had hiked food prices not once, but three times.

The Board, in a four-to-one decision, held that if a company owns the only eating place available, it must bargain under terms of Taft-Hartley with the employes over prices of the meals.

The decision also stated that the price of meals in such isolated places of employment as sawmills and logging camps was both a condition of employment and wages and as such, constitute a legitimate bargaining matter.

Board Rules Out Craft Units In Lumber Industry

The NLRB last week took a stand against carving up the work force of the lumber industry into craft units.

The board reversed an earlier decision which had approved a separate unit of machinists and auto mechanics at the Springfield, Ore., operations of the Weyerhaeuser Timber Co.

An election was ordered among the company's 630 employes at the Springfield operation between the CIO Woodworkers, the AFL Carpenters and "no union."

The board rejected the request of three AFL craft unions, the Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Papermill Workers and the Carpenters to set up separate units.

In making this decision not to split up the lumber industry into craft units, the NLRB followed a similar decision in 1948 for the steel industry. The board ruled:

"The development of successful maintenance and production processes and methods in the lumber industry has been accomplished by an integration and specialization which has foreclosed the existence of distinct and well defined craft work.

"In view of the comprehensive and consistent history of industrial bargaining, the extensive integration of all production and maintenance work, and the fact that the industry has tended to develop specialists rather than workmen in the craft tradition, we believe that separate craft representation is not appropriate for employes in the lumber industry."

CIO Aide Asks Legislation To Help End Low Incomes

UNION collective bargaining and intelligent government action together can lick America's "low income problem" — affecting millions of families earning less than $2000 a year.

That was the gist of testimony offered to a Congressional economic committee last week by a CIO spokesman, Hyman Bookbinder, economist for the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

Bookbinder said the CIO "rejects the notion that 'the poor are always with us.' In this great nation of ours, with all the wonderful resources of nature and with the industrial know-how which we have developed, there is no excuse for poverty."

To supplement the collective bargaining process, he recommended repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, which impairs the effectiveness of unions; greatly liberalized social security; a national health insurance program; increases in the personal exemptions for income tax of low-income family groups; and repeal of all wartime excise and luxury taxes.

THE CIO's program for combatting poverty was described "in a nutshell" as directed toward achievement of a "greater national income more equitably distributed." He pointed out that the CIO has sought to reach this goal through "legislative proposals, but primarily at the collective bargaining table. . . .

"Productivity has risen in American industry—and it has risen primarily in the last 20 years because employes, through their organized strength, have insisted that industry must be efficient enough to pay decent wages and still remain competitive.

"As we obtained improvements in wages, moreover, we provided the basis for a healthier economy by keeping purchasing power high enough to sustain demands for the products of American industry.

"We believe that the trade unions of this nation—AFL, CIO, independent—have made a major contribution towards eliminating poverty and depressed living standards. Although union members have been the immediate and primary beneficiaries of unionism, the benefits have been felt throughout the economy."

Union benefits have had a direct effect in lifting millions of workers out of the lowest-income class, Bookbinder said.

He pointed out that members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers in the men's garment industry, "once among the most sweated of all American industries, with wages as low as $5 for 60 and 70 hours of work"—now receive incomes on a par with those paid in other major industries.

THE CIO UNION economist offered comparative figures on the wage scales of industrial and retail service workers to show the increased income levels brought by union activity.

"In 1932, the average industrial worker earned $17.05 a week, while the average retail worker earned $20.71," he said, with the retail employe thus receiving an income 22% higher. In 1948 the industrial worker averaged $54.14 a week, while the retail employe received an average of $39.83 a week, 22% lower than the average in industry.

"It is no coincidence that no more than 5% of all retail workers are organized in unions," he added.

The union representative pointed out that while reliable statistics are not available, "it is safe to assume that relatively few of the wage earners in the 'below $2000' families are members of trade unions.

The writer has just returned from the labor conference in London which worked out as well as could be expected. The CIO and AFL worked together as one team. The International Confederation of Free Trade Unions was launched on firm ground. More about this later.

I want to take this opportunity to wish all of you the merriest of Christmases and the happiest of New Years. May the coming year be one of success and prosperity to you all.

Aiding Democracy Seen As Role Of ICFTU

THE NEW free world labor movement organized this month in London can be a powerful instrument for strengthening world democracy and the status of workers, two leading CIO officials predicted last week.

CIO Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood and Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the United Steelworkers hailed results of the 10-day meeting at which the new Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions was established. They arrived back in New York on Dec. 16.

American ideas of democratic unionism will have a powerful effect in beating back the spread of communism throughout Europe. McDonald believes.

"If we can help the people of Europe to get the things that we have here through bona fide trade unionism, then communism will not have a chance. But we must perform by deeds and not by words. We must do an educational job," he said.

Haywood and McDonald gave their views at a luncheon tendered by the New York State and City CIO Councils. Haywood haied the cooperation between CIO and AFL delegates at the London meeting.

HAYWOOD said the CIO group at that conference "decided to make no concessions on important matters without first consulting the AFL, and vice versa."

Talking of labor unity on the home front, he told the luncheon meeting in New York:

"Organic unity here depends on our ability to work together on a day-to-day basis. We have laid the foundation that will lead us to many operations together without organic unity. Let the angels —not me— predict the next step."

Haywood, McDonald, Pres. Walter Reuther of the Auto Workers, Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers, Vice Pres. Herbert Payne of the textile union and Michael Ross, CIO international affairs director, were among the other members of the CIO delegation at London.

McDonald, interviewed by reporters when he landed in New York, predicted that free labor throughout the world would make every effort to push communism "back behind the Volga."

At the New York luncheon meeting, the steel union officer voiced the belief that many of the European socialist-influenced labor movements were making a mistake in permitting themselves to become mere adjuncts of labor political parties.

"I don't want the confederation (the ICFTU) to be a branch of the world socialist movement," McDonald said. "I am proud of the kind of free democratic capitalist union movement we have here."

He felt that importation of U. S. ideas of unionism would help workers in France and Italy to gain greater economic security—through organizing, negotiation of bargaining agreements, and day-by-day contract enforcement activities.

Labor In Forefront Of Fight To Ease Ala. Registration

LABOR spokesmen and others charged at a public hearing at Montgomery last week that Alabama registrars "systematically" held voting lists to a minimum.

Complaints against registration practices resulted in the hearing, held before Gov. James E. Folsom and the State Appointing Board.

Among the critics was a registrar from Mobile County, E. J. Gonzales, who has been fighting his two colleagues on the Board of Registrars for easier and larger registrations ever since his appointment by Gov. Folsom two years ago.

Gonzales, who has been supported by labor in his efforts to ease registrations, told the crowd in the governor's office that he had been trying to get 300 or more names in one box purged from the voting lists because, "if they are still alive, some of them would be as much as 124 years old."

The youngest, he said, would be 105. Gonzales declared that his colleagues, Milton Schnell, chairman, and Mrs. D. C. Randle, agreed to take 75 names off the list.

GONZALES denounced a rule formulated by the Mobile County Board of Registrars that requires prospective voters to bring witnesses to identify them.

"I have seen priests and sisters of the Catholic Church and ministers of other faiths turned down because they didn't have witnesses to say they were telling the truth," Gonzales declared.

In contrast with Gonzales' testimony was a statement from Member Gus Thompson of the Jefferson County (Birmingham) board, who replied to criticism by saying it was just the "labor bunch" . . . "trying to embarrass" the Boards of Registrars.

Thompson declared there was no discrimination against anyone in Jefferson County "regardless of race or color."

LABOR spokesmen from Birmingham, including President John Playfair and Secy.-Treas. Eugene M. Wells of the State CIO Council, Ben F. Gage, Steelworkers' representative, Sam Douglas, AFL state president, and William Mitch, District 20 president of the United Mine Workers, differed with Thompson. All charged that discrimination existed against both whites and Negroes.

Mitch declared Thompson as "playing with those who don't want to see labor vote."

Ray Holland, president of the AFL Central Trades Council in Mobile, observed, "It's harder to get registered in Mobile than to get a job, and they're pretty scarce now."

Several Negroes complained of discrimination in Montgomery as well as in Black Belt counties. Dr. J. E. Pierce of the State College for Negroes at Montgomery said, "Sometimes we feel we are not wanted as part of this democracy."

Folsom asked how Negro war veterans feel "when they fight for liberty and come back and find they can't vote?"

The reply was, "They're pretty disgusted."

The State Appointing Board, composed of Folsom, State Treasurer Dan Thomas and Agricultural Commissioner Haygood Patterson, has authority to dismiss registrars, and labor spokesmen demanded that certain ones be replaced. No immediate action was taken.

U.S. To Seek 75c Base Pay On Its Work

UNCLE SAM is preparing to demand that all contractors doing government work pay at least 75c an hour to their employes.

Labor Secy. Maurice Tobin announced the proposed change under provisions of the Walsh-Healey Act, which governs labor conditions in firms filling government orders of $10,000 or more.

Some 36 industries will be affected by the Secretary's proposals. Those industries now function under minimum rates of between 40c and 70c an hour when they are working for the government. Four other industries—including steel — already have Walsh-Healey minimum rates far higher than 75c.

Minimum pay for steel contractors, for instance, is about $1.22 an hour, which corresponds with the minimum rate in contracts between the CIO steel union and the industry.

Tobin said the Labor Dept. would receive data, arguments and viewpoints of interested parties on the proposed minimum pay hike until Jan. 5. The minimum rate for workers covered by the general wage-hour act rises from 40c to 75c on Jan. 25, as a result of legislation passed by Congress in September.

The CIO, while hailing the rise to 75c, is still calling for further increases to at least $1 an hour. Hyman Bookbinder, clothing union economist, told Congressmen last week that such an increase is necessary to help solve the problems created by low incomes going to millions of citizens.

Twenty Killed In Iowa Blast

TEN MEMBERS of the CIO Packinghouse Workers were killed in the recent Swift & Co. plant explosion at Sioux City, Iowa. Of the 55 employes still confined to hospitals, nine are UPWA members.

The disaster, one of the worst in the city's history, occurred Dec. 15 and took the lives of 20 Swift & Co. workers. A total of 90 were hospitalized.

The main force of the explosion centered in the area of the plant where union members worked—which likely accounts for the high percentage of UPWA casualties.

Various relief agencies, both national and local, have "functioned most efficiently," according to CIO Reg. Dir. Frank Cronin.

Company officials asked that they be notified of any requests for assistance from families of victims.

UPWA locals in the area have set up a committee to render aid to families of the dead and injured. All union members will be contacted and financial help will be given wherever needed.

Public Relations Meet

"Public Relations for Labor" will be discussed at a one-day conference at the Chicago branch of the University of Illinois Jan. 28. Representatives of CIO, AFL and independent unions will take part. At the same time editors and correspondents of local union newspapers will attend a special workshop on "Reporting For Labor Newspapers."

Reuther Gets Award For Aiding Labor Rights

THE CLENDENIN Award for "distinguished service in defense of labor's rights" has been presented to Pres. Walter Reuther of the CIO-Auto Workers by the Workers Defense League.

More than a thousand of Reuther's friends gathered for a testimonial dinner at New York's Hotel Astor and honored the UAW leader for his contribution to the cause of labor.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt presented the award—which takes the form of a silver plaque—to Reuther.

A host of speakers were on hand to honor the UAW president. They included David J. McDonald, secretary of the United Steelworkers, who read a speech in the name of CIO Pres. Philip Murray; Sen. Herbert Lehman of New York; Gov. Chester Bowles of Connecticut; Sec. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin; and Walter White, Negro leader.

REUTHER, WHO had just returned from the London labor conference, hailed formation of the new Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions as "one of the most encouraging developments" of recent years.

He said the ICFTU must work out a strong program, for "we can't fight something with nothing. We must translate an ideal into specific action. Too often, we have been long on words and short on action."

Reuther said that workers "reject communism, but we also reject laissez-faire Wall Street capitalism. We believe we can have both freedom and economic security. The choice does not have to be between Stalin and Standard Oil."

The auto union leader said his visit to Europe had given him a series of varying reactions as to economic and political progress. The British Labor Party will win the 1950 elections, he predicted, "because they have done something positive." In France, he declared, the Communists have merely been contained—while in the Ruhr, the cartelists are returning to power.

Reuther said that he saw a drift in this country back toward an economy of scarcity, rather than an abundance and full employment. He called upon America to "gear total capacity to total need."

CIO PRES. MURRAY sent regrets that a "very heavy schedule and a minor eye irritation" prevented his attending "this splendid testimonial to my very good friend, Walter Reuther."

"The warm fraternal relations between the steel workers union and the auto workers union have given a maximum degree of strength to the entire CIO," Murray declared. "And the constant, open-hearted, intelligent cooperation and assistance which I have received from Walter Reuther help to make easier the responsibility of guiding the affairs of the national CIO."

Murray praised Reuther's work as chairman of the CIO housing committee, and called upon "responsible officials of government" to give renewed study to Reuther's plan for mass building of prefabricated homes in unused airplane plants.

Two Congressional Units To Probe Steel Price Boost

CONCERNED over the inflationary implications in the new steel price rise, two Congressional committees will open investigations of the increase early in 1950.

The House Monopoly investigating committee has joined with the Joint Congressional Economic Committee in planning an inquiry into the steel price situation. Chairman Emanuel Celler (D., N. Y.) of the House Committee said he was "shocked by the social irresponsibility" of United States Steel in raising prices despite its high profits.

Celler said the action of U. S. Steel indicated the need for "a re-examination of the prerogatives of bigness" in business. His committee has been studying the power of big industries to control prices and production.

Even before Celler acted, Chairman Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.) had ordered an investigation of the steel price rise by his Joint Congressional Economic Committee. The staff of the committee is studying the question of steel costs and profits preparatory to open hearings which O'Mahoney hopes to begin early in January.

The $4-a-ton price increase announced by U. S. Steel is estimated to amount to about a 4% increase in most steel prices. It means an aggregate increase in cost to the manufacturers of steel products of several hundred million dollars a year, which, by the time it is passed on to consumers, might well sart another general price increase.

"THERE WAS one thing immediately apparent in the news of a price increase by the leading (steel) producer," C. F. Hughes, business writer, said in his column in the New York Times. "That was that a big corporation had decided to raise prices before costs had actually been increased.

"The pension and insurance plan does not become operative until next March.

"Regardless of what labor elements may argue about profits, and they probably will argue plenty, there are some good industry arguments which can be cited against the boost in steel prices . . . Scrap prices have seen quite a collapse since a year ago despite the recent recovery.

"These prices are down $10 a ton and they represent 25% of material costs.

"Possibly high management in steel is trying to retrieve some of the losses it was responsible for in bringing about the recent strike in the first place."

Foe of Labor To Run

Rep. Otto E. Passman, of La., whose record has been consistently anti-labor, has announced he will run for re-election to Congress in 1950, and will run for governor in 1952, "with or without" ths support of Gov. Earl K. Long.

States Faced By Jobless Who Have Exhausted Benefits

By WILLIAM WEISS

IS AN UNEMPLOYED person who is willing to work but who has exhausted his unemployment compensation benefits entitled to additional emergency relief?

That is the question confronting a number of states, including Connecticut, California and Maryland.

In the case of the latter, at least stop-gap aid was assured last week when the General Assembly at a special session passed a $300,000 emergency relief bill for needy unemployed.

Until then, the Maryland Dept. of Welfare had never granted assistance to those classified as "employables" after they had exhausted their jobless benefits.

SOME 23,000 jobless Marylanders had used up their unemployment compensation benefits for the year and faced the bleak prospect of Christmas without funds.

Now that emergency assistance has been made available, the State Welfare Dept. will relax its regulations so the money may be distributed to needy persons who are able to take jobs but cannot find them.

The $300,000 appropriation is to be matched, dollar for dollar, by cities, towns and counties which receive shares of the grant, thus making the total to be distributed about $600,000.

THE BILL caused sharp controversy in the House before passage, despite the small appropriation.

Opponents said the measure would "open the doors wider" to increased demands for state funds and push Maryland further along the road toward a "welfare state."

Sponsors maintained that it would hardly scratch the surface of the need and declared that even $1 million would be inadequate.

Pres. Frank Bender of the Maryland-D. C. CIO Council indorsed the measure but said it fell far short of requirements.

He indicated the council would push for additional unemployment grants at the next regular session of the Assembly in January and would seek to have the compensation period extended from the present 26 to 52 weeks.

BENDER SAID the two most critical unemployment areas in the state are Baltimore and Cumberland.

In Connecticut the CIO Council and the state Federation of Labor are pressing for a special session of the legislature to extend the 26 week unemployment payment period and to make available for emergency use part of the $150 million now in the fund.

Opposition to this plan has been jointly furnished by the state Republican Party and the Conn. Chamber of Commerce.

The state's 52,000 jobless who have exhausted their unemployment payments continue to look for work which isn't there while they hear efforts to provide additional aid branded by the C. of C. as a "raid" on the state unemployment compensation fund.

The Chamber of Commerce attitude was termed "selfish and irresponsible thinking" by CIO Council Pres. Mitchell Sviridoff.

Sviridoff said that apart from the humanitarian issues involved, the Chamber's stand in opposing a special legislative session to deal with the unemployment problem was detrimental to its own members.

He said that Connecticut business and trade would be the chief beneficiaries of money spent from the unemployment fund if the proposal to extend benefits were enacted into law.

LABOR GROUPS in the state have been assured by Gov. Chester Bowles that both he and the state Democratic Party would work for increased unemployment benefits and a boost in the state's minimum way to 75c at the next special legislative session.

Sviridoff said the state's main unemployment centers are at Bridgeport, Waterbury, Bristol and New Haven.

In California the urgency of the jobless situation led to a meeting of the CIO Alameda County Committee in Oakland, which urged Gov. Earl Warren to call another special session of the legislature to act on the unemployment problem.

The committee reported that the state's unemployment total will reach a peak of 600,000 within three months.

The CIO's demand for a special session received the support of James Roosevelt, Democratic gubernatorial candidate, who accused Gov. Warren of "political doubletalk" on the question.

ROOSEVELT charged the GOP incumbent with insincerity for having called a recent State Conference on Employment in Sacramento and then failing to include the unemployment problem on the agenda of the special session of the Legislature, which began two weeks ago.

Last week the state Dept. of Industrial Relations revealed that industrial unemployment in the state increased by approximately 35,000 in a recent 30-day period.

The U. S. Labor Dept. reported that the number of Californians who have used up their unemployment compensation claims has almost doubled from the 34,000 figure given last July.

Civil Rights Bills Likely To Be Hot Congress Issue

CIVIL RIGHTS legislation probably will provide official Washington with its hottest issue soon after Congress goes back into session in January.

Three recent developments leading to this conclusion are:

1. President Truman indicated strongly in two speeches that he intends to push his civil rights program on Capitol Hill next year.

2. Congressional leaders said FEPC legislation and other civil rights measures are likely to head the agenda for the new session.

3. About 40 organizations—including the CIO—announced that a National Emergency Civil Rights Mobilization conference will be held in Washington Jan. 15-17.

Following these developments there were, of course, the usual predictions — and expectations — that anti-civil rights members of the Senate would get set to stage a filibuster.

LETTERS SENT from National CIO headquarters to union anti-discrimination committees and industrial union councils urge full support of the Civil Rights Mobilization.

George L-P Weaver, director of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination, said in his letter to CIO anti-discrimination groups:

"The CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination, with the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, the National Catholic Welfare Conference, the AFL, the national Jewish groups and other organizations working in this field are a part of the National Emergency Civil Rights Mobilization.

"We have requested our local organizations to visit their congressmen and senators while they are home, requesting their support for this legislation when it comes up in Congress."

National Councils Dir. John Brophy sent out a communication urging CIO councils throughout the country to support the Mobilization.

LEADERS OF THE Mobilization move said bluntly they wanted no co-operation from the Communists in their Washington conference.

"We are eager that the conference be as well attended as possible," said a letter signed by Roy Wilkins, Mobilization chairman, and Arnold Aronson, secretary.

"We are even more eager that those who do attend be motivated by a sincere desire to bring about the speedy enactment of FEPC and the entire civil rights program . . . We do not consider any Communist-front organizations to be so motivated. We do not want and we will not permit delegates of such organizations to be registered."

Wilkins and Aronson said that only delegates from "accredited organizations" would be permitted to take part in the conference. They said delegates would not be accepted from 10 CIO unions against which charges of Communist domination have been filed.

Missouri Paper Praises CIO

"Unionism, especially that of the CIO, is demonstrating its place as a security factor in St. Charles as plainly as pyrotechnic handwriting written in letters of fiery distinctness against an otherwise dull sky."

The above is from an editorial in the St. Charles, Mo., Daily Banner-News.

The editor was commenting on an order placed by the Union Pacific Railway for 36 passenger coaches with the American Car & Foundry plant in St. Charles.

Pointing out that "when good payrolls are assured, prosperity will rise to new levels," the editorial concluded, "The solid foundation for satisfying economic balance is the guarantee of union practices which brook no menace to the gospel of free enterprise based upon understandings which are sincere, ethical and fair."

The newspaper has a union shop contract with the CIO.

Kroll to GOP: You Can Copy PAC Body, But Where'll You Get Soul?

A "BODY-AND-SOUL" act is playing on the national political stage.

It started when the chairman of the Republican National Committee announced plans for a GOP political school "patterned after and intended to compete with the CIO Political Action Committee."

And another GOP spokesman said the "trouble is that the party nationally has not been reaching out to labor to activize it for the Republican candidates." He also suggested that the Republicans had better start thinking about the day-by-day needs of Negroes and foreign language groups.

All this made interesting holiday-period reading for CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll. He sent a letter to GOP Chairman Guy Gabrielson suggesting that Republicans will be aided in their efforts to learn "political know-how" by giving "thoughtful consideration of the editorial 'Body and Soul' which appears in the current issue of our publications, Memo From PAC."

In a further token of holiday spirit, Kroll offered extra copies of the editorial—free—for distribution to worthy Republicans.

The "Body and Soul" editorial suggested that all the Republicans can copy "is the body of PAC. But a body without a soul is a pretty useless thing."

"Adoption of PAC techniques by the Republican patry is, we suppose, a compliment. But we should hasten to point out that PAC technique won't work for the Republican Party.

"Techniques are only the body of political action. The inspiration and soul of political action is a deep and abiding faith in the people of America. . . .

"We believe that the people of America are concerned more with human dignity and human values than the profit-and-loss statements of corporations, and that democracy is not measured on the corporate ledger or the stock market.

"These ideals are something the Gabrielsons and Tafts and the Wherries do not understand. They think it's all in the technique."

OTHER political developments, nation-wide and world-wide:

• The GOP, after some Mid-West meetings, came out strongly against "me-tooism"; in other words, opposition to every aspect of the Fair Deal. It was regarded as a victory for the Taft wing of the party though Taft has "me-tooism" on housing, aid-to-education and a couple of other issues.

• Tom Dewey announced "a certain and final" decision that he won't run for President in '52.

• Republican speakers began to speak with increasing criticism of the "hand-out state"—apparently forgetting that the "hand-out-state" reached its apex under Herbert Hoover. There were hand-outs, flimsy ones, on thousands of breadlines all over the country.

• The leader of Australia's victorious Conservative Party announced that nothing would be done to damage that country's famous "welfare-state" security system; and the new Conservative Health Minister said one of the new regime's first acts will be to implement the national health program.

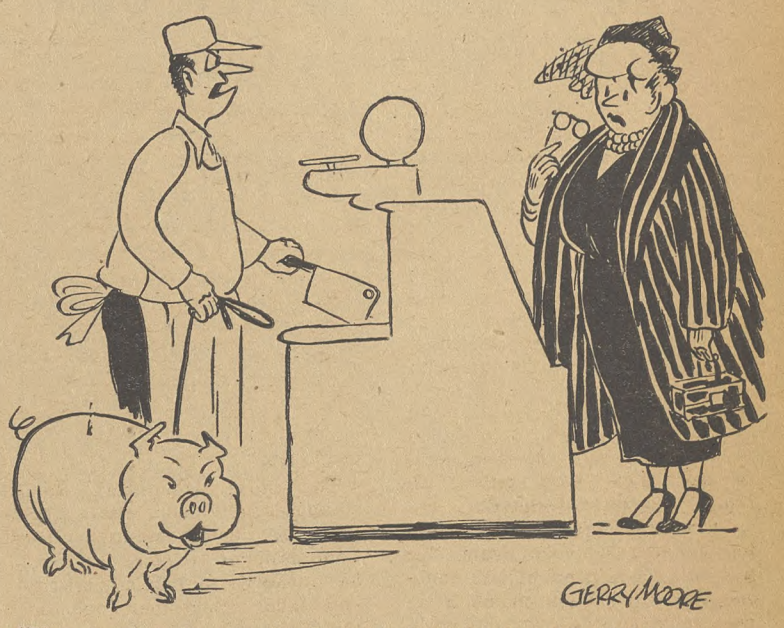
(He's apt to be attacked as a red by the GOP leadership.)

Threat Is Painted On Curran's Garage

The words "Death to Curran" daubed in red paint were found last week on the garage of Joseph Curran, CIO Maritime Union president.

The threat was repeated more than a dozen times in letters six inchs to one foot high. It also was scratched on a window of his home in Franklin Square, New York.

"Yesterday was Stalin's birthday and I guess the Commies were sending him a birthday greeting," Curran said.



"You want only our freshest pork? O. K., I'll GIVE you our freshest pork."

Mediator Ching 'Reduces Heat'

CYRUS S. CHING, head of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, is generally considered one of the most successful experts in the industrial relations field. What methods does he use to get opponents who are fighting mad at each other, to simmer down and begin trying to come to some agreement?

Beulah Amidon, writing in the December issue of Survey magazine, tells how she tried to pin Ching down to explain just how he functions as a mediator and found him a "reporter's despair."

"My job is just sitting down and talking with people," he told her. "Why, I don't do much of anything—I just get them around the table," he said. "There isn't much to what I do, when you come right down to it."

BUT HERE IS what a member of the former Natl. War Labor Board who had watched Ching in action, had to say about his methods, Miss Amidon reports:

"What he really does is to reduce the heat. He helps angry people forget their anger and relax, and pretty soon there is an atmosphere in which thought and reasonable conversation can go on. Sometimes he tells a pat story. His stories are always good. They are always pat, too.

"Funny thing, though, you never can remember them afterward. He seems to shape them up for one particular situation. When that situation has changed, the story has no point any more, so you forget it. When he cracks down (and it doesn't happen often) that clears the air the way some mothers can stop a nursery row by a few sharp words. Sometimes he gives a regular lecture, like a school teacher, and that seems to start both sides thinking and reasoning instead of sulking.

"What it all adds up to is that Cy Ching has a special talent in human relations. I don't believe he or anyone else can tell you how he goes about doing it . . ."

MISS AMIDON gives this vivid description of the impressive Cyrus Ching:

"He stands six feet seven inches tall, with ponderous shoulders and huge hands. His craggy face is lined by the work and wisdom of 73 crowded years. He sits relaxed and at ease, puffing a pipe or catering to it with the devoted pipe smoker's sure gestures. His voice is deep and pleasant, his attitude candid."

One of his great assets, says Miss Amidon, "seems to be his inner security. He never has to reassure his own ego by stuffy self-importance."

On the subject of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service and labor-management relations in general, Miss Amidon reports, Ching has many definite ideas, based on 35 years of experience.

He believes that every contract between employer and employees, "should be in simple, everyday language—not the kind of lawyer language that we associate with insurance policies and trust agreements, but the language all of us use and understand.

"Once the contract is drawn up, it should be talked over with foremen, supervisors, and shop stewards, with the people who wrote the contract answering the questions. That's one of the difficulties with bringing lawyers into negotiations.

"Many lawyers with extensive industrial relations experience are very helpful, but a lot of them come into a session with a win-the-case attitude. They completely fail to realize that what is at stake is not a case, but a continuing relationship. That attitude generates more friction, instead of cooling things down."

IN GIVING THE qualifications a good mediator should have, Ching is quoted as saying that "above everything else, he has to have patience, and more patience. There must be no limit to his patience. When the fellows around the table are hammering with their fist and yelling insults, that's the time the mediator must keep calm."

Miss Amidon relates an incident that happened to Ching years ago in Boston, which gave him a long and painful opportunity to ponder on the gap between labor and management. While employed by the street railway company, Ching had an accident that nearly cost him his life. He spent four months in the hospital, but "no representative of the company came to see him, or expressed any concern about his shocking injuries."

His only "compensation" was a new suit of work clothes to replace the garments burned from his body in the accident.

Ching Lists '8 Most Common Mistakes Of Management'

IN THE CURRENT issue of Nation's Business, publication of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, Chief Federal Mediator Ching writes that "smart bargaining, like smart tax accounting, has become good business.

"Employers who have accepted their unions have found that the confidence created by such an attitude pays big dividends in industrial peace."

Ching, who has held his present position two years, lists "the eight most common mistakes of management in bargaining:

"1. Unwillingness or reluctance to bargain collectively.
"2. Haphazard selection of lawyers as negotiators.
"3. Lack of experience.
"4. Use of minor officials.
"5. Lack of leadership.
"6. Lack of confidence in the union and lack of understanding of its problems.
"7. Lack of vital information.
"8. Too much emotionalism."

After Ching stressed the bad effects of employers' unwillingness to bargain, he said, "We come now to the second point, the haphazard selection of lawyers as negotiators . . .

"I'm reminded of an attorney who managed to get a lot of legal gobbledygook into a contract involving a household appliance maker and his union. The ink was hardly dry on the contract before the union was striking over interpretation of the agreement. There are, however, some excellent negotiators among attorneys around the country.

"The third error is the lack of labor relations experience by negotiators. It is incredible to think that management would place its national program for merchandising a new product in the hands of a junior sales executive. Yet, too frequently, management places the equally important function of collective bargaining in the hands of inexperienced officials.

"MY FOURTH point deals with the use of minor officials as negotiators. Next to organizing, collective bargaining is the union's most important function. Therefore, a union sends its ranking local leaders and often a widely experienced international representative to the bargaining table. These men are thoroughly familiar with the thinking of the rank and file; they are authorized to act quickly, subject only to ratification of the final agreement by the membership.

"When minor officials with limited authority sit down with these people, they have to run back and forth from bargaining table to the boss' office. That's really bargaining by remote control . . .

"The need for leadership among company negotiators is the next factor.

"It should be obvious that any team needs a leader. Yet, we often find management representatives with no No. 1 man and, likely as not, rivalry existing among the company negotiators. They'll vie with one another to prove who is a better negotiator.

"LACK OF confidence and understanding of a union and its problems is the sixth mistake that management makes. Labor relations are not mysterious. They deal with human beings and mutual confidence is the prime objective.

"The seventh point I've made covers the lack of statistics and facts.

"It is not unusual for a management negotiator to start off with the statement: 'We can't afford to grant new benefits,' and then give ground slowly. This 'wolf, wolf' attitude is a mistake. It makes the union representatives unduly cynical.

"The last error I'd call to management's attention is the one involving emotionalism . . . I know an electrical apparatus producer who declared he'd be damned before he would have anything to do with a union run by Communists . . .

"Experience has shown that an employer's attacks on left-wing leadership of a union usually serve to rally the rank and file around these officers. Desirable as it is to rid unions of communist leadership, it is more likely to be accomplished if employers leave it to the unions . . ."

Business Mag Is Criticized By Baldanzi

GEORGE Baldanzi has charged that Business Week "completely misconstrued" what he said in a speech Dec. 2 in New York City before the Council of Profit-Sharing Industries.

Bandanzi, director of the CIO Organizing Committee and executive vice president of the CIO Textile Workers, said in a letter to the editor of BW:

"At no time did I indicate (and I am a loss to understand how your reporter drew such an inference) that profit-sharing might be considered an acceptable substitute either for higher wages or for pensions, nor did I at any time indicate what your reporter terms a 'conversion' to profit sharing."

HE SAID HE had stressed the point that profit-sharing would be acceptable only in those unionized plants where basic wages and working conditions were satisfactory and where profit-sharing was the result of negotiations between the employer and the union.

The story indicated that Baldanzi had become a "new profit-sharing advocate." It said his "unexpected conversion to the profit-sharing idea gave that sort of thinking a major boost."

"At no time did I indicate a belief that profit-sharing was the answer to our current economic problems." Baldanzi said. "I did say that profit-sharing might, in certain carefully controlled instances, be one way by which industry might share some of its profits with the workers."

Guildsman Wins $5,000 Fellowship

Walter J. Johnson, Minneapolis, Star reporter and CIO Newspaper Guildsman, was one of four newspaper people named winners of $5000 Reid fellowships for a year of travel and study overseas in 1950.

The awards are made annually by the Reid Foundation, set up by the late Ogden Reid, editor of the N. Y. Herald Tribune.

Johnson will study the peoples, economics and politics of Japan, Indonesia, Indo-China, the Philippines and India-nations all currently working out problems of independence.

Winners of this year's awards were selected at a meeting of the Foundation's Fellowship Committee in New York. Choices were made on a basis of proven ability and newspaper experience.

Others honored were William G. Dildine, Cleveland Plain-Dealer, Ellen Gibson, Milwaukee Journal, and Richard K. Pryne, Seattle Times.

Turner Named To New URW Fair Practices Group

PRES. L. S. BUCKMASTER of the CIO Rubber Workers has announced the appointment of James E. Turner as a representative of the union's new Fair Practices Dept., now in process of organization.

The new department is being set up in conformity with a constitutional amendment adopted at the URW's annual convention last September in Toronto, Canada, to promote racial and religious tolerance within the union and the industrial plants where members work.

Turner is a member of the Firestone Local in Akron, Ohio, and has been chairman of the executive board for two years. He worked as a mill man in the rubber processing division at Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., for 14 years.

WHEN HE first went to work, Turner received 40c an hour and toiled eight to ten hours a day. When he left his job in the plant he was making $1.90 hourly and working the regular six-hour day now prevalent in the big rubber plants under contract with the URW.

Besides his experience on the job, Turner has a record of broad activities in both the union and "outside" community organizations. He has been on the advisory board of the Urban League for two years, and is a member of the Natl. Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

He was interviewer for 18 months at the Akron Community Service Center, and chairman of the Akron Citizens Committee.

". . . in the younger generation today is my hope for the world of tomorrow."

Pizer Presses Drive To Back CIO in UFW

PRES. Morris Pizer of the United Furniture Workers is winning strong rank-and-file support in his hard-hitting campaign to bring the union solidly in support of CIO policies.

Although there is strong evidence that a great majority of the union membership is backing Pizer in his efforts, a 14-man majority of the union's executive board has turned thumbs down on a membership referendum.

Instead, this executive board group—headed by Secy.-Treas. Max Perlow and National Organizer Ernest Marsh—want the issue postponed until the union's next convention, in June 1950 Ten pro-CIO members of the board say the issue is hot right now, and that the union cannot afford to wait six months at this crucial time to determine its basic policy.

Apparently fearful of the strength of its voting power on the board, the Perlow-Marsh group disqualified one member on a technicality, refused to seat another, and refused to accept a telegraphed vote from a third who was ill and unable to attend the sessions.

All three of these men are backing Pizer in his campaign to support CIO policies, and avert possible expulsion of the union from the CIO on grounds of following policies of the Communist Party rather than of the CIO.

THE DEFEATED resolution proposed at the board meeting in New York by Pizer recalled that "it was under the banner of the CIO that our workers were organized in the United Furniture Workers of America. It was the CIO which gave birth to our international union. . . .

"Only under the banner of the CIO can we continue to fight for improved working conditions and advance our program of organizing the unorganized furniture workers.

"Any attempt to divide our union or force its expulsion from the CIO would be a serious threat to our contracts and working conditions established through long years of struggle. . . . We call upon our membership to rally behind the CIO policy of unity, and to resist and fight against any attempts to force our expulsion from the CIO."

The 10-member pro-CIO group on UFWA's executive board charged the Perlow-Marsh group with "disgraceful and undemocratic maneuvers" in refusing to permit the referendum—which it was proposed would be supervised by the Honest Ballot Association.

PERLOW WAS formerly a member of the Communist Party, but resigned a few months ago in order to sign Taft-Hartley non-communist affidavits. But he added at that time that he still supported generally the party's principles.

The pro-CIO group said the "very people who shriek the loudest about democracy and 'let the membership decide' felt no shame in throwing a furniture worker from the shop off the General Executive Board."

They referred to the Board majority's action in disqualifying George Meacham of Local 1090, Portland, Ore. Meacham had been elected by the Board in July 1949 to fill a vacancy, and had served during the interim period as a board member.

But he was barred when he appeared for his first meeting of that body, on a technicality. Meacham commented: "I have seen the left-wingers in operation. I can now understand why the national CIO is so very concerned with the actions of this group."

MEACHAM charged there would have been no objection to him—if he had not expressed to a majority member of the board the previous evening "views at variance with theirs and incidentally much along the same views held by the national CIO."

Jack Hochstadt, UFWA board member, charged that the union's District 5 convention was hastily and secretly called—without notification to the union's national office—in order to "ram through resolutions intended to give the impression that the District membership was against Pres. Pizer's position."

Cal. CIO Leaders Fail To Appear At Hearing

Officers of the California CIO Council failed to show up in Washington last week to defend themselves and the Council leadership against charges filed by a number of union officials in the state.

The hearings had been ordered by CIO Pres. Murray after 17 union spokesmen in California charged that the Council leadership had opposed national CIO policies and had "publicly identified" the Council as "a notorious front organization of the Communist Party."

Notice of the Dec. 19 hearing had been sent to Pres. James Daugherty and Sec.-Treas. Bjorne Halling of the Council. When hearings opened at CIO headquarters, neither they nor any other Council spokesmen were on hand.

The hearings went on anyway, before a committee consisting of CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood; Dir. John Brophy of the CIO councils department; and Vice-Pres. John J. Moran of the Communications Workers.

Testifying against the Council were several union officials who had signed the original charges last October. They included John Despol, Steelworkers; Cyril O'Halloran, Auto Workers; Floyd Gartrell, Rubber Workers, and Paul Jacobs, Oil Workers. In addition, Sec.-Treas. William Pachler of the Utility Workers testified against the Council, and a statement was read to the hearing committee for Charles J. Smith of the steel union.

Present during the hearing were Tim Flynn and Irwin DeShetler, CIO directors in San Francisco and Los Angeles.

A report and recommendations will be brought by the committee to the next meeting of the CIO Executive Board.

CHARGES generally similar to those lodged against the California state body have also been filed against the San Francisco, San Diego and Alameda County Councils, together with requests that charters of the present groups be withdrawn and new, more representative CIO bodies set up in those areas.

Last week the number was increased when Flynn announced that charges signed by spokesmen of 10,000 CIO members had been filed against the Council in Contra Costa County, northeast of San Francisco. The complaint was signed by local officers of the steel, auto and oil workers unions.

They pointed out that the Council represents only 1600 of nearly 11,000 members in the county; that it has "failed actively to support CIO policies"; and that it is violating CIO rules by assessing local unions 8c a month a member, when 5c is the maximum permitted by the rules.

"We request that these charges be acted upon immediately by the national CIO so that the membership of the CIO in Contra Costa County can be organized to make their contribution towards achieving the economic and political objectives of CIO."

THE EARLIER complaint against the state council accused its leadership of acting as "close allies" with the Communist Party in the 1948 elections; in encouraging opposition to the European Recovery Program; in indorsing and encouraging subscriptions to a "union-busting, strike-breaking" Communist paper; in printing anti-CIO material in the council's official organ; and in interfering with affairs of national CIO unions.

The latter charge said the Council had attacked national officers of the Oil Workers; sought to turn members of the steel union against its national policies, and urged members of the Utility Workers to go into the AFL.

Guild Strikes Oldest Paper West of Mississippi

THE OLDEST newspaper west of the Mississippi had a strike on its hands last week.

Editorial workers of the Arkansas Gazette at Little Rock, members of the CIO Newspaper Guild, walked out of negotiations when Pres.-Editor J. N. Heiskell insisted on inserting a clause in the contract which would give him authority to dismiss any employe for "incompetence."

The catch was that Heiskell would be the sole judge of a worker's competence.

It took the ANG about 10 years to get a union at the Gazette and the members who voted for it in an NLRB election last September apparently intend to have some degree of protection written into the initial agreement.

Two days after the editorial department went out circulation workers followed.

A skeleton staff of supervisory employes, the paper's cartoonist and three reporters, undertook the task of putting out the paper.

The Gazette published its usual morning editions but distribution in the greater Little Rock area was disrupted.

The local Guild executive committee said that circulation workers, who are also Guild members, joined the walkout of newsmen and photographers after a strike vote.

The union statement said circulation workers voted to join the Guild several weeks ago but that "management declined to recognize them as members of the bargaining unit."

Two Independent Economists Say Aid Goes Mostly To Big Farmers

EVIDENCE THAT the billions spent by government in the past 20 years to support farm prices have helped the big farmers more than the little ones was presented to the Congressional Economic Committee studying low incomes by two Univ. of Chicago economists.

D. Gale Johnson and Theodore W. Schultz presented statistics showing that despite the government programs and improved agricultural conditions the gap between high income and low income farmers was as great as it was 20 years ago. They said the poorer farmers and poorer areas had little political influence and were not represented by the major farm organizations.

With the exception of the Farm Security Program and the feed and seed loans, the economists said, most farm programs have tended to favor the larger farmers. The special measures directed at low income farmers have been offset by the other agricultural aids to big farmers, they contended.

THESE SEVEN MEMBERS of the Montgomery Advertiser and the Alabama Journal editorial staffs were fired when they joined the CIO Newspaper Guild. They were promptly put back to work when CIO Dir. Carey E. Haigler filed charges with the NLRB. Later the Guild won a consent election. L. to r. front, Nancy McDonald and Rhea Cumming; standing, Gerald J. McAllister, local president; Luman Wells, Clint McCarty, Bill McDonald and Foster Haley. The only other Guild local in Alabama is at Birmingham.

UOPWA Fights To Stay In CIO It Calls Disreputable

LEADERS of the left-wing United Office & Professional Workers plunged last week into the middle of a cold-and-hot war of words and legal actions against the CIO.

On the one hand, the UOPWA leaders issued a statement criticizing the CIO with such phrases as "failures and betrayals," "disorganizing," "raiding, red-baiting and repression" and "joining with erstwhile enemies—the Un-American Committee, Rankin, Hartley, Taft, Clare Hoffman and Gerald L. K. Smith."

Having made the effort to paint the CIO as about the most reactionary, disreputable and ineffective organization in the country, the Office Union leadership then took desperate legal steps to try to stay in that very same reactionary, disreputable and ineffective CIO.

All in all, it was a pretty complicated task for the UOPWA. The recent chronology:

1 A CIO committee headed by Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers announced hearings on charges that the UOPWA is completely Communist-dominated in leadership and policy. The hearing was set for Dec. 15.

2 The United Office & Professional Workers went into Federal District Court in Philadelphia to seek an injunction to prevent the CIO from holding the hearing.

The injunction plea specifically named Rieve and George Craig, CIO regional director in Philadelphia.

MEMBERS of the committee which heard charges against the United Office and Professional Workers in Washington on Dec. 19 are shown at a news conference during a hearing recess. L. to r. Pres. Harry Sayre of the Paperworkers; Emil Rieve, Textile Workers president and committee chairman, and Pres. Martin Wagner, CIO Chemical Workers.

3 The CIO investigating committee postponed its hearing in the Office Union case from Dec. 15 to Dec. 19.

4 The UOPWA was listed by Pres. Murray as one of the six left-wing unions no longer in good standing because it has fallen in arrears on per capita payments to the CIO.

5 Hearings on charges against the Office Union got under way at 10 A.M. on Dec. 19 at CIO headquarters—and concluded at 2:55 P.M. the same day.

6 Judge Ganey, in U. S. District Court in Philadelphia, turned down the Office Union's injunction plea—on grounds that he had no jurisdiction. The judge pointed out that Rieve has not resided in Philadelphia for six years—and that George Craig, CIO's director in the city of brotherly love, is an employe of the CIO who has no connection whatever with the proceedings against the Office Union.

7 The CIO filed suit in U. S. District Court in Washington against the UOPWA, seeking to recover $18,700 which it had lent to the union in 1938, 1939 and 1941. UOPWA officers signed promissory notes for the sum, but haven't paid up.

8 Office Union leaders filed a new injunction suit against CIO, in District Court in Washington, D. C. They want to restrain the CIO from taking any further steps which might lead to expulsion of the UOPWA from the CIO. A hearing on the injunction request takes place Jan. 10—meanwhile, the CIO has agreed to take no further action in the case.

Remaining steps are for the CIO investigating committee to compose a report on the Office Union, including recommendations as to whether that union is Communist-dominated and liable to expulsion; and action by the CIO Executive Board on those recommendations.

A meeting of the CIO Board has not been scheduled, but may be called late in January or early February.

The hearing before the three-man committee took much less time than had been anticipated. Sitting on the committee were Rieve, Pres. Harry Sayre of the United Paperworkers; and Pres. Martin Wagner of the Gas Coke & Chemical Workers—the latter substituting for Pres. Joseph Beirne of the Communications Workers.

The hearings went off in accordance with procedure announced by the committee some weeks earlier. Doors of the CIO Board Room were closed to all but those directly affected, and no lawyers or newsmen were allowed in.

REPRESENTING the Office Workers were Pres. James Durkin; Sec.-Treas. Bernard Mooney; Leon Berney of the union's insurance division; John Stanley, union director of organization; and four other officials. Also at the hearing were Pres. William Steinberg of the American Radio Association, who had filed charges against the union at the Executive Board meeting in Cleveland early in November; and Stanley Ruttenberg, CIO director of education and research, who submitted testimony and evidence against the union.

At a mid-day press conference, Rieve said the Office Union would be allowed at least a day and a half to present rebuttal. But in the afternoon session, Durkin read a statement bulging with bitter criticism of the CIO; submitted affidavits from a few UOPWA members; and rested his case.

A short time later, Durkin made public his statement.

Among other things, it charged that CIO policies "in reality represent the program of the reactionary employers and their political agents"; argued that "the CIO leaders have taken over Hitler's big weapon—crusade against Communism"; and maintained the hearing "represents a real sign of panic on the part of our prosecutors."

A CROWD of about 40 people who attempted to get into the hearing room were denied admittance to CIO headquarters. Durkin used the incident to claim that his union had been denied the presence of needed witnesses at the hearing.

In his original announcement of the hearings, Chairman Rieve had invited national UOPWA officers to attend, and said other union witnesses whose names were submitted in advance of the hearing would also be given an opportunity to testify.

But the union submitted no names in advance. And Rieve, remembering a similar incident more than a year ago at hearings on the old Greater New York CIO Council, commented: "We want a hearing—not a riot."

Durkin, head of the 30,000-member union, which has been faced by many membership revolts, argued that the hearing on charges of Communist domination was an effort by CIO leaders to "divert the attention of their own members from . . . failures and betrayals."

A few hours later UOPWA attorneys filed their petition for injunction against the ouster proceedings and the group went home.

Two Hearings Set For January

Hearings on charges of Communist domination filed against the United Office & Professional Workers were the first in a series scheduled during the next few months.

No date has yet been set for the hearing in the case of the United Public Workers, which had been postponed from Dec. 12.

Hearings on the Mine Mill & Smelter Workers will be conducted Jan. 4, and on the Food, Tobacco & Agriultural Workers on Jan. 6. Both will be held at CIO headquarters in Washington.

IWA, Oregan Council Urge More Safety

At a meeting punctuated by union criticism of managements safety standards, Oregon's Gov. David McKay heard representatives of the CIO Woodworkers and the Oregon State CIO Council explain their program for prevention of accidents that kill or maim hundreds of working men each year.

Present at the safety conference, first in an annual series, were Jewell Lloyd, Business Agent of IWA Local 5-37; Les Haenny, Business Agent of Local 9-213; Secy. George Brown of the Oregon State CIO Council; and Manley J. Wilson, editor of the IWA newspaper, the International Woodworker. The meeting was one of many held all over the country at the suggestion of President Truman's National Safety Conference.

Lauds Feinberg Ruling

Dr. William J. Wallin, member of the New York State Board of Regents, which is charged with implementing the Feinberg law, has indorsed the recent state supreme court opinion which held the law unconstitutional. The Feinberg measure barred "subversives" from teaching and had been attacked as making teachers "guilty by association."

Six Unions Facing Red Charges In Arrears In Per Capita Payments, Lose Good Standing

SIX NATIONAL unions—all of them facing charges of Communist domination—have been notified officially that they are no longer "in good standing."

The reason: They're behind in paying monthly per capita dues to the CIO.

Notification was sent by Pres. Murray on Dec. 16 to presidents of these half-dozen unions:

1. United Office & Professional Workers.
2. United Public Workers.
3. Food Tobacco & Agricultural Workers.
4. Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union.
5. Intl. Union of Mine Mill & Smelter Workers.
6. United Furniture Workers.

Murray's letter was brief and to the point. Noting in each case that he had been informed by Secy.-Treas. James Carey that the union "has not paid its per capita tax to the CIO for two months or more," Murray added:

"You are, or should be, aware of the provisions of Article VIII, Section 3, of the Constitution of the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

"Accordingly, you are hereby notified that your organization is not in good standing in the CIO."

The section of the Constitution cited by Pres. Murray was adopted at the CIO convention in November. It provides that affiliates owing per capita tax to the national organization for two months or more will not be in good standing, and "shall not be entitled to representation on the Executive Board until restored to good standing by the payment of all per capita tax due under the provisions of this Article."

At present, affiliates pay eight cents a month a member to the CIO, plus a special 1950 tax of two cents a member a month. Prior to the CIO convention, the total had been eight cents.

It Grew And Grew And Grew!

ONE WAY TO become a newspaper columnist, it seems, is not to be bothered today by what you wrote yesterday.

Take the case of David Lawrence, for example.

On Dec. 1, Lawrence turned over almost his entire column to the views of a "steel executive, a broad-gauged and liberal minded individual . . ." Lawrence printed the gentleman's interpretation of the steel strike: it was a terrible, terrible thing—for the workers at Bethlehem Steel won only "six-tenths of a cent per hour" pension and welfare improvements.

On Dec. 19, however, Lawrence changed his tune. He still felt the steel strike was a terrible, terrible thing—but for different reasons.

Pres. Murray and the union, Lawrence decided, had "imposed on the steel companies not just a 10c an hour cost increase for social insurance and pensions, but a figure estimated to be at least 15c an hour."

So the steel workers' settlement grew 14.4c an hour between Dec. 1, and Dec. 19—if most readers of the Lawrence syndicated column can remember back that far.

Why the increase? So that Lawrence could "prove" the union was to blame for the recent jump in steel prices.
